VITAGRAPH COMPANY,

Gentlemen:

"I had the pleasure of seeing some of the earlier episodes of your new serial, 'The Iron Test,' in your projection room the other day. It held me spellbound, and it should have the same effect on any audience. It is one more evidence of the class of Vitagraph Serials. It spells money to me."

and the name beneath it is La France. This is the France for which the world's best soldiers fight, a nation symbolized by a woman's face."

This, the Simple Life.

The "movies" are closed and the joke about the evening dishes being piled in the sink is temporarily out of order. All the patrons of the "movies" were not so slavish to their lure as a woman who admitted hiding the remnants of supper in the stationary tubs with the lids down. The inexpensive film recreation has endeared itself to the common peoples, for it is the life of the world reproduced in motion. There has been a "get acquainted" quality to the "movies" that nothing heretofore has equaled in value, for it has been essentially human food for human minds. One-half of the world had always hankered to know how the other half lives. Along came the "movie," with "Behold! See what you have heard, read or imagined. I am a medium of education."

There are many non-believers in the "movies." Offsetting them are those people who have seen and believed and become even better informed in current happenings than such non-believers as minimize the value of the "movies." For informing quality there is about as much difference between the legitimate stage and the "movies" as between the door-stopper cat and a yowling pussy. The best argument for the "movies" is that the people like them.

It is remembered that a busy physician in this city stopped long enough during office hours to comment, "What's in this movie business, anyway? I used to think it was just a simple cinematograph show, but all my patrons talk 'movies!'" There is no reason to connect that physician's shortening his office hours with his conversion to the motion picture, but he found out that there is a certain fascination about seeing the other half of the world in action.

As the best sort of a dessert to the usual run of "movies" there came the pictures from the other side, convincing even skeptics that Yankee soldiers do laugh when going into battle and that Uncle Sam has a need for Liberty loans and 100 per cent. patriotism. In a manner that no actor or actress on the legitimate stage could imitate the "movies" told the story of war, brought tears and gladness, and cemented friendliness between the American people and their war comrades.

So, although the family dishes may be washed each night during a necessary closing of the "movies," there is a strong possibility that father, mother and children are looking toward that day safe from pestilence when optimism will again look from the film in the midst of ruin.

All-Wool Patriotism.

What quality is your patriotism? Do you

'America's Answer' To Continue Next Week at the Rialto

Government's Own Great War Pictures Holds Public Enthralled

BECAUSE of the large demand for seats at the Rialto this week, it has been decided to continue the engagement of "America's Answer" for one more week. The engagement positively will end Saturday night, October 5.

Few pictures have drawn the praise that has been heaped up on this, the Government's own official feature. No production has ever brought the fund of information about "our boys" that has come with this picture from battle-scarred France.

It carries thrills in every episode and a story in every scene. "America's Answer" is a comprehensive survey both of what Uncle Sam has done with "your money," and the adventures that have befallen "that boy" since he set foot on the soil of France.

The picture tells more of the great magnitude of Uncle Sam's efforts—the greatest undertaking of all time—than could be carried in reams of printed columns. It is drama in which the actors are the stalwart sons of America and the theme is the story of their daily life.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC WORKING WEST

Boston Theatres Opening, While Chicago and Mid-West Close—Houses in San Francisco Capitulate, Making the Coast Practically Restricted in Amusements

THE "peak" of influenza's deplorable havoc seems to be passing west, as Boston, the first great center to be affected, opens its theatre doors after protracted darkness. Last week the first comforting word from the army camps originated in Camp Devens, Ayer, Mass., when it was declared that the epidemic was under control. It was in this camp that the disease first broke with appalling results.

Chicago kept its theatres open until Tuesday, October 15. San Francisco closed Saturday, October 19, leaving New York, of all the great centers of population, the only city unaffected by official orders. There was a report current that the New York houses would close Saturday night, October 19, at the finish of the Liberty Loan drive, but the theatres here are still open as we go to press, Tuesday, October 22.

The attendance at local theatres has been generally "off," save in the case of a few conspicuously popular dramatic attractions. The picture houses have been greatly affected, a marked falling off in business being noticed in moving picture houses of all types and classes.

Death's harvest in the ranks of picturedom has been conspicuous and appalling. Players of prominence have been stricken down; prominent exhibitors and members of their family have passed away, and the gloom that has overshadowed the industry has been made more intense by the ravages of the grim reaper.

The silver lining that has been thrown upon the cloud through the relief occasioned by an improved situation in New England promises to develop as the epidemic comes under more complete control in other sections of the country. The wave is passing Westward, but its progress is distressingly slow, while the ravages of the disease continues to take precious toll in the afflicted communities.

Boston Houses Open to Impatient Picturegoers

BOSTON motion picture houses opened Sunday night, October 20, after an enforced closing of three weeks due to the Spanish influenza epidemic. The reopening of the houses was marked with an unusual demonstration. Long before the opening hours long lines of patrons awaited the opening of the doors. The programs were greeted with more enthusiasm than has been manifested for many seasons.

New England motion picture managers predict one of the most prosperous seasons since the beginning of the World War as a result of the enforced three weeks' vacation. The closing of the houses left the amusement public with a keener appreciation of their accustomed entertainments than they had ever believed could be possible. The natural depression of continuous war talk and the great death toll of the epidemic, few families escaping without a death or a serious illness among some members of the family, and the reaction to normal conditions brought a tremendous welcome in the way of clean wholesome amusement and entertainment furnished at the motion picture houses.

Most of the picture theatres observed one strict rule. Patrons who coughed or sneezed were requested to appear at the box office and get their money refunded and leave the theatre. The wide publicity given the health rules during the epidemic warning people to beware of persons who coughed or sneezed has aroused a very insistent demand from the public that coughers and sneezers remain away from places of public assemblage. It is believed one result of the epidemic will be to make coughing and sneezing so unpopular that persons suffering from contagious colds will remain at home in the future.

Many Improvements Effected.

The three weeks enforced vacation of the picture theatres resulted in many fine improvements being made in the houses. In almost every case there has been a complete renovation of the local houses. In some cases better ventilation has been provided to meet the demand for well-aired houses. The closing also caused an early saving of fuel so that many houses will now be able to face the winter with better assurances of having fuel enough for the entire winter.

The reopening of the theatres brought a feast in the way of excellent film productions. Every house played a strong attraction. Big advertising marked the openings. All of the theatrical pages of the Saturday afternoon papers carried large spaces from the motion picture houses advertising the reopenings. The same was true of the Sunday papers.

In Eastern New England the reopening of the theatres was general. In the western part of New England the epidemic has about reached its height, so that the theatres and other places of amusement are still closed and will probably remain so for another week at least.

Although some theatre managers suffered heavy losses it is most generally recognized that the order closing the theatres and all other places of public gathering was a wise move on the part of the health authorities. It is now generally recognized that the drastic closing order resulted in a quicker termination of the epidemic than might otherwise have been the case. During the "peak" of the epidemic there was a daily average of 250 deaths in Boston alone. The total number of deaths exceeded 3,500. It is estimated there were 200,000 cases in Boston alone during the five weeks run of the epidemic.

Philadelphia Employees Get Busy on Renovation

INDICATIONS that the motion picture business has been seriously affected on account of the closing order issued by Director Krusen, of Philadelphia, seems to be the consensus of opinion among leading exhibitors and exchangemen of Philadelphia. The influenza epidemic up to the present writing shows no decrease in its daily toll of victims, and from the latest reports of the board of health and charities conditions appear to be too serious to announce any definite time for the reopening of the theatres. The general opinion seems to be that the closing order may probably be rescinded about October 26, and not before.

In the meanwhile theatre managers and exchange managers are putting their extra time to very good use. The finishing touches have been ordered by Frank W. Buhler, managing director of the Stanley theatres, to complete the beautifying of the Stanley, where the large lobby is undergoing extensive alterations. At the Family Theatre, Joseph Murphy, the manager, has been personally supervising many improvements. Owing to the scarcity of labor and the high cost of materials, Mr. Murphy put his entire staff of employees at work painting and overhauling the entire theatre. A four-foot base running along both sides of the theatre has been painted a pretty light green, while the iron frame work of the chairs and the radiators have all been regilded. The women's retiring room has been given special attention, and all electric light globes have been carefully looked over.

In the meanwhile repairmen also overhauled the large organ, of which Alexander Boyd is very proud, and all the draperies have been cleaned and rehung. The loyal employees of the various exchanges are being well cared for. Although some managers have been compelled to lay off some of their help a great many will be given half pay, although very little work can be done. Only in very few instances have exchange managers decided to close entirely until the epidemic passes.

No Time Has Been Set for Baltimore's Opening

THE influenza epidemic is still raging in Baltimore, and at the present writing there has been no definite time set for the reopening of the theatres. L. A. De Hoff, manager of the New Theatre, and secretary of the Maryland Exhibitors' League, is keeping in close touch with the situation, and daily is in communication with all the Washington exchanges, as well as the theatrical people of Baltimore, to let Washington know as soon as word from the health department comes to reopen.

Several of the Baltimore theatres are taking the opportunity while the closing order is in effect to give their theatres a complete renovation.

All the churches in Baltimore were ordered closed on Sunday, October 13, and two prominent members of the clergy have disagreed with the mandate, but abided by it. The stores and saloons have been ordered to open only at 9:30 a. m. and close at 4:30 p. m. It was the first time, as far as is known in the history of Baltimore, when the churches have all been closed.

According to statistics there were 533 deaths from influenza in Baltimore during the week of October 7.

The Fourth Liberty Loan has suffered greatly through the theatres being closed. During the first eight days of the campaign the report from R. McKean Barry, chairman of the speakers' committee for theatres and moving picture houses, showed $1,098,650 had been subscribed through their efforts.

St. Louis Suffering Loss of Over $200,000 a Week

ST. LOUIS picturedom has passed through its first week of closed business. The result of the influenza closing order has thrown hundreds out of work and spelled a loss in dollars and cents that already reaches well into the $150,000 mark, independent of a sum of perhaps half that size, representing the loss of the exchanges. How far the actual damage goes cannot be estimated, and there is at present no indication as to how long the ban will run. For the benefit of readers of The World the St. Louis correspondent has gathered figures which represent what the film exchanges will have to lay out approximately and for which they will get no return. They are based on the first week's closing order, which went into effect on Tuesday, October 8. They do not represent lost business, but the approximate cost in "overhead" to the exchanges, all things figured in.

Joseph Mogler, president of the Exhibitors' League, and Frank Tate, who represents the Cella interests in a string of the largest houses of the city, say that the loss each week to the exhibitors will be about $150,000. The theatres are closed tight, and therefore with nothing coming in there is naturally a let-up in wages for every one connected with the trade.

St. Louis District Badly Affected.

In the district served by St. Louis also I have been able to estimate that of the 2,000 theatres there are 75 per cent., or 1,500, now closed. This district includes Southern Illinois, Indiana, Tennessee, Kentucky, Arkansas and Iowa. Of course, only parts of each of the states are included and not the larger cities; but the result of the epidemic may be estimated from the figures given.

In St. Louis alone there are eighty theatres with closed doors. This number of theatres will lose $150,000, as I have pointed out. The reader can figure for himself what the total loss to the district with its 1,500 closed theatres will be.

As to men out of employment as a result of the closing order, it might be pointed out that there are idle 2,400 ushers, 2,400 ticket sellers, 2,500 piano players, 150 other musicians and more than 115 operators.

In the exchanges a "stagger" plan of management has been initiated to help cut down expenses. The managers are being paid one week in some instances, while the assistants take a vacation. The next week the managers "vacate," while the assistants draw pay, and so on down the line.

With the patriotic motive back of the closing spirit, however, both the exchanges and the exhibitors are trying to keep a stiff upper lip and a hope for the better. It is expected also that the rush for films after the closing order will to some extent make up for the lost time and money. MOORE.

Closed Atlanta Houses Are Being Renovated

Atlanta, Ga., October 15.

EVERY theatre in Atlanta and an overwhelming majority of houses in the Southeast remained closed throughout the past week under emergency orders issued to prevent the spread of influenza.

In Atlanta there was a rumor that the councilmanic ban on theatre operation might be lifted at the close of the present week, but any action seems predicated on a marked improvement in the local situation. While the grip of the disease in this city is not considered as pronounced as in other localities the epidemic is still in force.

On Monday officials of the Atlanta Theatre Managers' Association appeared before City Health Officer Kennedy and protested against what they considered discrimination, evidenced by the authorities in allowing all shows connected with a carnival company to operate without restriction at the Southeastern Fair, which opened for a ten-day period last Saturday.

On Tuesday a committee representing the managerial association appeared before the public safety committee of the Atlanta Chamber of Commerce and requested that body to transmit the theatrical men's protest to the city council.

The managers pointed out that local exhibitors had offered no opposition whatever to the drastic order shutting down their amusement enterprises and had accepted the subsequent losses without a murmur as a patriotic duty. They had expressed no objection to the conducting of the Southeastern Fair, although public gatherings of every nature had been prohibited, as the fair itself is an open-air proposition, given under the auspices of local civic bodies.

The managers, however, strenuously resented the unfairness displayed in permitting tent shows and various other attractions under a roof to operate when existing conditions conducive to the spread of influenza prevailed to a far greater extent than in a modern theatre equipped with an efficient ventilating system.

As yet no formal action has followed the protest of the theatre managers' association, but in any case the practical value of an alert, co-operative organization among local showmen has been emphatically demonstrated.

Hugh L. Cardoza, president of the association; Willard C. Patterson, vice-president; John G. Evins and Ed Schiller, of the executive board, have been especially active among others in advancing the interests of Atlanta exhibitors.

A practical cessation in the business of local exchanges has followed the general closing orders effective throughout the territory. The "flu" itself has played havoc with the various film organization staffs, and would have made operation difficult in any case.

A majority of Atlanta exhibitors have taken advantage of the enforced period of idleness to inaugurate renovating, repair and remodeling work at their houses. STARR.

Louisville Shuts Down Everything but Saloons

Louisville, Ky.

LOUISVILLE is indeed a dead place since all the theatres were closed and, in fact, all amusements stopped. The saloons are still open, and the thirsty are still able to secure liquid refreshment. They represent about the only thing that is open, and has driven home to many what prohibition will be during epidemic periods. The prominent hotels have moved every chair from their lobbies, so that chair-warmers will have to stand up or hunt new fields for loitering. However, the crest of the epidemic appears to have been reached. The death list is still heavy, but it is reported that the trouble is checked, although there are several thousand cases at Camp Taylor and a large number in the city. Some of the hospitals have been so short of nurses that only emergency cases are being accepted.

Louisville was a little late in establishing checks, and no real quarantine has been established at Camp Taylor, resulting in soldiers being numerous on the streets, although there has been a large reduction in the number of passes issued to soldiers, and only a small percentage of the former number of men are now on the streets.

Local exhibitors say they hardly expect to get into action again for ten days or two weeks. The state health and local authorities appear to have decided to stamp the trouble out before amusements are allowed to start again. All conventions have been passed up, and local associations of various kinds have postponed their meetings. Even fraternal lodges, including the Masonic lodges, have closed up shop for the time being. Churches and schools have been closed for a week or more.

A number of theatres are taking advantage of the opportunity thoroughly to clean house. Painting and redecorating are being handled at the Strand and some other theatres, although the high cost of labor and material is a drawback to any material improvement at this time.

Exchanges Taking Inventories.

Exchanges as well as exhibitors are finding things very dull. Some of the exchanges are taking advantage of the opportunity to take fresh inventories of all paper, films and other materials, and are systematizing their business, something that they have never had time properly to do in the past. One exchange operator reports that he is installing a system of keeping track of all paper in the house and out, this having in the past being a source of considerable worry and confusion.

The Louisville Photoplay Association hasn't held any regular meetings for several weeks, but a number of the members have been holding informal meetings in the big office of the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company. These meetings consist chiefly of talk and of wishing things would open up, as expenses are going along, and it is a question of everything going out and nothing coming in. With heavy rentals during an inactive period of two or three weeks some of the houses are losing enough money to show a bad year unless the public comes to bat with a vim when the amusements are open again.

Nashville Exhibitors See Early Opening of Houses

Nashville, Tenn., Oct. 14.

JUST at the time when Nashville's motion picture lovers were happily anticipating a week's entertainment that would include some of the best attractions of the season—or at least extensively advertised as such by local exhibitors—there came from the office of the city health officer the notice to close all moving picture theatres in the city. The action, it was explained, was thought necessary in order to prevent a further spread of Spanish influenza. For the past week Nashvillians have been leading a drab existence, and there is little doubt that all the local moving picture houses will do a rushing business when the present ban is lifted.

The health officer has thus far given no answer to inquiries of exhibitors and impatient theatregoers as to when the houses will be permitted to reopen their doors. As the "flu" epidemic locally is showing signs of abatement and the maximum number of cases has apparently been reached it is probable that the theatres will be open again within a week or ten days at most.

The managers of the local houses have always shown a willingness to cooperate with the city officials, and especially when the welfare of their patrons is concerned. Little complaint was heard from any quarter. Since Liberty Loan booths are being conducted on every uptown corner and side-line attractions, such as musical programs, boxing matches, etc., are being offered to attract and hold crowds while they are being solicited in the interest of the loan some wonder was expressed that the motion picture houses should be closed on account of the "flu" situation. Those who formerly spent their afternoons or evenings at the theatres now attend the free attractions at the Liberty Loan booths. If the closing order did bring disappointment to managers of the motion picture houses, as well as their patrons, it helped the loan.

Cincinnati Authorities Control the Situation

THE prompt action of Cincinnati health authorities in ordering the closing of theatres and other places of public assemblage is believed to have prevented epidemic conditions in the prevalence of influenza, as the disease has not at any time got beyond control, and the number of cases and of deaths has been small compared to those in other large cities. The theatre men and exhibitors, as well as film men, are cheerfully enduring a period of inactivity, which means a very heavy financial loss as well, as they desire to support fully the public welfare as indicated in the orders of the health board. It is estimated that not less than 100,000 persons a day visit local theatres, and the loss in admissions, therefore, is not less than $10,000, but rather considerably more. Moreover, employes thus forced into temporary idleness in many cases will lose their wages, as the exhibitors cannot afford to stand any more loss than they are compelled to; and the film exchanges are in much the same position, as they are totally without revenues during the period in which the theatres must remain closed. Another interesting point which has come up in this connection is the suggestion that while the enforced closing is on the theatres should not be compelled to pay rentals to the owners of their properties; but real estate men take the view that there is no chance for them to escape rents on this score, pointing to the "heatless days" of last winter as an example. Office and other rentals were not reduced then, although the absence of heat rendered the quarters rented useless.

Washington Prepares for the Day of Opening Up

UNLESS the exhibitors in localities in the national capital territory, whose houses have been closed because of the prevalence of Spanish influenza, co-operate to the fullest extent with the exchange managers there is going to be a great deal of confusion in booking when the houses reopen. In this city the theatres have been closed since October 3, and from the tone of the newspaper reports on the continued prevalence of the disease it will be many days before the ban is lifted. Exhibitors must recommence their bookings where they left off if this confusion is to be avoided.

This whole problem was gone over at considerable length at a special meeting of the Washington Exchanger Managers' Association, as a result of which the following letter was drafted and is now being sent to all exhibitors whose theatres have been closed because of the disease:

October 12, 1918.

The members of the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, realizing the seriousness of the present situation brought about by the epidemic of influenza, and their desire to cooperate with and assist you, have met at a special meeting to discuss the most logical plan of adjusting your bookings, thereby preventing any confusion that would be bound to occur.

It was agreed that we ask you to make every effort to ascertain as far in advance as possible when the authorities will permit you to open, and that you then immediately notify every exchange with which you do business. This is asked of you for the purpose of preventing the possibility of the production which will be due you on the day on which you open, not being available.

It has been decided that to prevent any further financial loss to the exhibitor, producer and distributor that exhibitors will begin their bookings wbere they left off, just as if you never had been closed. We are quite sure that this method of booking will meet with your entire approval.

You may rest assured that all members of the organization will give any reasonable suggestion due consideration. Sincerely yours,

EXCHANGE MANAGERS' ASSOCIATION,
Oscar A. Morgan, Secretary.

All Houses Closed in Northwestern Country

Seattle, Wash., October 11.

THE influenza has descended upon the Pacific Northwest this week, with the result that all the theatres and places of public assembly have been closed in the entire state of Idaho, in most of the towns of Montana, in over fifty towns in Washington and in many of the cities and towns of Oregon. Portland, the last city of any consequence in the entire Northwest to remain open, was closed today. Seattle was the first large city to be closed.

The epidemic first appeared at the Puget Sound Navy Yard at Bremerton, just across Elliott Bay from Seattle; then it jumped to the naval training station at the University of Washington, which is in the northern part of Seattle. By Saturday morning, October 5, twenty cases in the city were reported to the public health department, and at noon the mayor, at the request of Public Health Commissioner McBride, ordered all theatres closed until further notice. At the same time it was announced that all churches would be asked to suspend services next day and all schools would be closed for the following week, as well as all public dance halls and other public meeting places.

While there have been no cases of Spanish influenza authentically reported at Camp Lewis, where about 30,000 soldiers of the National Army are now in training, there are a few cases of grippe; and the commanding general has closed the Hippodrome and Victory theatres, the hostess house and all meeting places within the cantonment until the epidemic condition of the vicinity has improved. The soldiers have also been forbidden to go to Seattle or Tacoma, where the theatres were closed during the first of the week.

Wires are coming in daily to the Seattle exchanges from exhibitors in all parts of the Pacific Northwest, instructing them to stop all shipment of film until further notice; that their town has been closed on account of the influenza. Several shippers have already been dismissed, and it looks as if the managers would have to let their entire forces go if many more towns are taken from their active list.

All Iowa Picture Theatres Shut by Health Authorities

BECAUSE of Spanish influenza Iowa is officially closed as regards motion pictures and all other forms of public assembly as the result of a sweeping order that emanated from the office of the State Board of Health, after conference with the military authorities. This means that every picture theatre in the State and, according to the last reports, there were more than 600 of them, has shut its doors and will not be allowed to reopen until the quarantine is lifted.

Film exchanges have had their business completely paralyzed. Even with a few houses open a full force was maintained to take care of the shipments that were necessarily hazardous because of the breaking up of circuits, and the sudden refusal of shows in the smaller towns without any notice of closing have been given the exchange. As it is now, the majority of the exchanges are simply paying out money for help, hoping that the payment of salaries will retain their forces against the reopening of business.

Manager M. J. Frisch, of Universal, probably had one of the most expensive poster departments in the country the past week. He kept his seven road men in and paid them salaries for assorting and rearranging paper. The other local exchanges are not under such heavy expenses as regards their roadmen because they operate with smaller forces.

A. H. Blank and other large Iowa operators see light even though the darkness, as it is their belief that statewide quarantine will quickly wipe out the disease and that results will be better for all concerned than to have a third of the State open and the lid on the rest. Military authorities state that conditions at Camp Dodge are much better, although there have been a good many deaths from the scourge.

Indianapolis Continues Ban on Picture Theatres

Indianapolis, October 19.

HOPES of motion picture exhibitors, film men and theatre managers of Indiana for abatement of the State-wide ban on all public gatherings were further shattered this week when Dr. J. N. Hurty, secretary of the State Board of Health, issued an order authorizing a continuance of the ban for another week. The order effective now did not expire Saturday night at midnight, as was first intended, but will continue until midnight of the 26th.

"The situation in Indiana is too serious to take any chances by lifting the order too early, the board believes," said Dr. Hurty. He added, however, that toward the latter part of next week some slight modifications may be made to apply to counties in the north half of the State, where the peak has passed, if conditions warrant.

Statistics compiled by the assistant secretary of the board show that while the epidemic is decreasing in the north half of the State, it is continuing to increase in the south half. It is estimated that in the entire State there are approximately 50,000 cases.

The consensus of opinion among the exhibitors appears to be that the order may result to the ultimate benefit of the exhibitors in the bigger business than is bound to come when the theatres reopen. They feel that the people will be craving so for their favorite amusement that they will rush wildly to the nearest motion picture theatre the minute it is opened.

New Brunswick Is Closed.

Closing down of theatres throughout New Brunswick is due to the fact that since the new Government came in at Fredericton a health act was passed, with Dr. Roberts appointed as the Minister of Public Health. Under his administration the epidemic of influenza was promptly dealt with and the order for the closing down of theatres and other places of amusement was general throughout the province. In Nova Scotia the cities where the disease has appeared are quarantined, and this accounts for the fact that some of the theatres in the smaller centres are still operating.

Darkened houses are the rule all over New Brunswick. In Nova Scotia Wolfville, Kentville, Joggins Mines, Inverness and Port Morien are still open. Glace Bay in Cape Breton is closed.

In St. John theatres are taking this opportunity of making repairs and alterations. It is unfortunate the epidemic has broken out just after an unprecedentedly bad season for the theatrical men and just at the beginning of one of their best seasons. According to F. G. Spencer, in the Maritime Provinces some ninety theatres were forced to close. About twelve hundred employes are idle and ten film exchanges seriously affected.

Portland Precaution Closes Theatres.

Things have been very dully in the amusement line in Portland, Oregon, for the past two weeks owing to the influenza scare, and Thursday, October 10, the State Health Board ordered the closing of all theatres, dance halls, churches, and prohibited the holding of meetings of any nature and the congregation of crowds upon the streets. It was not because the disease had a hold on the city, but as a precautionary measure. As the scare had kept the people out of the show houses, the closing was not unexpected.

Many towns in this territory had closed long before. This has affected the film exchanges, and the rumor is about that a great curtailment of help will be the result. It will give the theatres an opportunity to make improvements. The managers are allowing those laid off enough money for actual expenses so that there will be no very bad effects.

California Closes Down.

San Francisco, October 18.

The San Francisco Board of Health today closed theatres, churches, schools, and all places of public meeting on account of the influenza, commencing immediately.

The state board of health met later and ordered theatres throughout the state closed.

Before the action of the State officials about two hundred theatres served by San Francisco exchanges had closed on account of local orders. Three weeks are considered necessary in order to obliterate disease. CHURCH.

Everything Closed in Spokane.

On Wednesday, October 9, every moving picture theatre, other theatres and all other places of amusement and churches of Spokane were closed by an order of the board of health due to an epidemic of influenza, and they will remain closed for at least two weeks.

All theatres, as well as moving picture, employes were given a forced vacation as a result of the order, but no complaints appeared to be registered, as all were willing to co-operate with the department as a war measure. The schools were also closed.

Dallas Territory Paralyzed.

Spanish influenza, which it was hoped the Southwest would escape, became epidemic in the states of Arkansas, Oklahoma and Texas during the second week in October. The moving picture industry in these three states is completely paralyzed.

By proclamation of the governor every theatre in the state of Arkansas closed its doors during the first week of the month. A few days later a similar proclamation closed all Oklahoma theatres.

What little business still remains in the Southwestern territory is from scattered theatres in the smaller Texas towns. Of upward of 900 theatres in the three states served by Dallas film exchanges only about 300 remained open October 14. These are closing one by one, and on the date mentioned no relief seemed to be in sight. State authorities of Texas have taken no action, leaving it to the discretion of municipal authorities whether theatres remained open or closed. On account of the four great cantonments and the scores of smaller army posts in the state adopting the strictest of quarantine, municipal authorities generally have been quick to act in conjunction with military commanders.

Commencing the third week in October, Waco, Fort Worth and San Antonio were the only three large towns in the district where the picture shows were open. Each of these is a cantonment city, and all of the soldiers are forbidden to attend theatres. Consequently the exhibitors are having a hard time getting by. They were expected to close at any moment.

Western New York Shut Tight.

Every moving picture theatre in Buffalo has been closed on account of the Spanish influenza. All other amusement places are obeying the same ruling, which has been issued by the local health department. The same order has been extended to many cities and towns throughout Western New York. Even before the closing rule was issued the downtown moving picture theatres were losing heavily on account of the city-wide street car strike, which checked the flow of thousands of dollars into the box offices. Even if the houses are closed the managers are not idle these days. They are devising ways and means of giving "bigger and better shows than ever," when the health department permits them to open their doors again. The no-show policy has put a pronounced crimp into the business of the local film exchanges.

Detroit Theatres Are Open.

The Spanish influenza has hit Michigan hard, more than one-half of the theatres being closed at the time of writing —October 16. However, Detroit has fared exceptionally well thus far, and, while there have been threats of closing, Dr. W. Inches, Detroit's health officer, has decided to let them remain open unless a crisis is reached in the epidemic. Detroit exhibitors are rendering every aid to the health department by throwing slides on the screen calling attention to the epidemic, and how to prevent its spread; also insisting that people leave the theatre who fail to use handkerchiefs when coughing or sneezing. The co-operation from the exhibitors is what is keeping the houses open thus far.

Everything Tight in Rochester.

Rochester is closed tight, and the health officer states that in all probability it will remain closed for two weeks more. Theatres and schools were the first to be affected by the closure, and shortly afterward the order was extended to include all churches, saloons, bars, soda fountains and other places where people might assemble. The death rate has not been alarming in Rochester, but the authorities decided early in the epidemic to take no chances.

Naturally, theatre men are losing a lot of money, but most of them are taking the situation quite cheerfully. John H. H. Fennyvessey, manager of the Family Theatre, decorated the front of his house with Liberty Loan advertising designed by himself, and then offered his services to the local committee in any capacity that he might be used until his house was opened again.

Several of the local houses are availing themselves of the opportunity to do all kinds of cleaning and decorating while the closing is in effect. Ordinarily theatres can only undertake extensive work of this sort by closing in the summer, or at a period of the year when business is lightest, so the managers are making hay while the sun shines and endeavoring to make the best of the closing.

Chicago at a Standstill.

The motion picture industry is at a standstill in Chicago. All theaters are dark by order of the city health commissioner. They will remain so until the emergency commission created to deal with the epidemic of Spanish influenza judges that the disease is on the wane. Thousands of operators, theatre employes and musicians are out of work as a consequence. Film exchanges are merely marking time until theatres in Indiana, Michigan, Illinois and Iowa, also closed on account of the disease, as well as those in Chicago, are reopened. Many film salesmen have been temporarily dropped from the pay roll.

Exhibitors and film men have turned their attention during the enforced idleness to selling Liberty Bonds, and the division of films of the Chicago Liberty Loan Committee achieved its quota of $1,200,000 in bonds sold at 4 p. m. Wednesday, October 16.

PNEUMONIA CLAIMS HAROLD LOCKWOOD

Leading Metro Player Succumbs After Illness of Few Days—Had Been Eight Years on Screen

HAROLD LOCKWOOD, leading player of the Metro company, died at noon Saturday, October 19, at his apartments in the Hotel Woodward, New York City. Mr. Lockwood's illness was of brief duration, he having been present at the Motion Picture Exposition at Madison Square Garden and active in Liberty Loan work the week before, but pneumonia quickly developed. The body was taken to Campbell's funeral church, Broadway and Sixty-sixth street, where the funeral was held on Tuesday, October 22, at 2 o'clock.

Harold Lockwood.

Harold Lockwood was about thirty years of age at the time of his demise. He was born in Brooklyn, but passed most of his early days in Newark, N. J., to which city his parents had moved, and where his father owned and operated a stock farm. Here he received an education and entered a business career with an exporting house.

But business did not appeal to young Lockwood's tastes, so he made a venture in theatricals through vaudeville. At that time pictures were coming into prominence and he secured a place in one of David Horsley's companies, then making Western subjects in Jersey. That was in 1910. Lockwood, being a fine specimen of youth and virility, and handsome as well, made an immediate hit and his progress from that time was rapid.

From Horsley's Nestor company he went to the New York Motion Picture Company, then to the Selig Polyscope Company, and to the Famous Players Company. In this connection he played opposite Mary Pickford in "Tess of the Storm Country" and opposite Marguerite Clarke in "Wildflower," not to mention a number of other successful pictures made by that company.

Leaving the Famous Players Mr. Lockwood joined the producing staff of the American Film Company, where he was featured for some time. Then came his engagement by the Yorke-Metro company under the management of Fred Balshofer in 1916, which continued up to the time of his death.

With the exception of a very brief experience in vaudeville the deceased has never appeared before the public except in motion pictures and was one of the best examples of the successful motion picture star. He made a host of friends in his brief career who will sincerely mourn his loss.

General's Baltimore Chief Is a Victim of Influenza

THE motion picture industry in the territory of the national capital is mourning the loss of John Wellman, one of its most promising members, who was the first victim of Spanish influenza among the film men of Washington. Recently appointed manager of the sub-branch of the General Film Company in Baltimore, he was just about to enter a field that he had long looked forward to.

Mr. Wellman was born in Norway about twenty-six years ago. He came to the United States in April, 1914, and some time later joined the General Film Company in New York City. He was a member of the bookkeeping and auditing department, and when he came to Washington in January, 1917, it was as branch cashier.

Indoor work did not particularly appeal to him, but he was an expert in his work and that held him from going into the field until a few weeks ago, when it was decided that he should go to the Baltimore office as soon as a new cashier could be broken into the work in the Washington office. About ten days before his death he was stricken with the dread disease. Efforts were made to secure the services of a trained nurse, but with the influenza rapidly spreading in the city, this was impossible, and John Payette, former assistant manager of the General Film Company here, now a soldier in the army, volunteered to look after him. For six days and six nights Mr. Payette stayed on the job. As a last resort Mr. Wellman was rushed to the Emergency hospital, but to no avail.

Mr. Wellman was popular with the men of the Washington exchanges, and as he had no living relatives either here or abroad, they took entire charge of his burial. Jake Flax, manager of the General, and Sam Flax, manager of the Metro exchanges, assisted Mr. Payette.

MRS. WILLIAM A. JOHNSTON DIES.

After a brief illness, Mrs. William A. Johnston, wife of the editor of the Motion Picture News, died of pneumonia at her home in Bayside, L. I., on Wednesday evening, October 16. The funeral was held on Saturday, October 19, at Bayside.

Toronto Shuts Down October 20.

BALLYHOOING LIBERTY BOND SALE

Men and Women of Speaking Stage Have Nothing On Those from Screen in Coaxing Out the Dollars— Touchin' On Work of Those Pals Doug, Bill and Bill

By Edward Weitzel

THE "talky" actors didn't have any the better of it over the "movie" actors, when it came to ballyhooing for the Fourth Liberty Loan in New York. What with those good pals, Douglas Fairbanks, William S. Hart and William Farnum to hold up the moving picture side of the contest, the formidable array of talent and reputation contributed by the Lambs' Club and the Professional Woman's League failed to overshadow the good work of the screen stars and the eagerness of the public to see and to hear them. There was glory enough for all, however. Francis Wilson, Willie Collier, Blanche Bates and the truly wonderful Ray Cox all helped at the Liberty Theatre in front of the Public Library to put over the Loan, and they welcomed the speakers from the silent stage most cordially.

Bill Hart's Swell Harness.

Standing in the crowd at the Liberty Theatre before Ray Cox stepped to the front of the stage and announced that William S. Hart had come all the way from the Pacific Coast to talk for the Loan, it was not at all difficult to sense the expectancy and pleasure of the men and women that packed the sidewalk and overflowed into the middle of Fifth avenue. They were there to see Hart and hear the sound of his voice. When he did come forward he did not disappoint them.

Clad in what a cow-puncher would speak of as swell harness, he removed his broad-brimmed hat with the true western flourish and stood bowing and smiling while the crowd took him in from head to foot. In striking contrast to everyone else his checkered shirt, yellow silk handkerchief knotted about his neck, high boots, leather cuffs, broncho buster's decorative vest and snuff colored coat and trousers made him the realization of the Bill Hart of the screen.

It was a clever bit of showmanship, a part of the ingenious ballyhoo with which the dollars were coaxed from the crowd. And the Tom Ince star played right up to the part during all the time he held the center of the stage.

His first act was to remove his coat and hitch up his sleeves with the air of a man who was not accustomed to public speaking, but who intended to lock horns with the situation and conquer it without any unnecessary delay. The next thing he did was to treat his audience to that quizzical Hart smile, then wade in and "mix it up rough" for the Kaiser and the slacker who failed to buy Liberty Bonds. Bill went at that speech with the same wild rush that a cow-puncher makes when he sets out to stop a runaway steer, and roped, threw and hog-tied it in a business-like manner. He then gave a practical demonstration that he meant all he said, by adding another one-thousand dollar bond to his own generous subscription. The crowd cheered him enthusiastically and followed his example when the regular workers started to ask for buyers.

His speech from the steps of the Sub-Treasury Building in Wall Street was equally successful. The familiar figure in the loud shirt and high boots caught the crowd instantly and gave it no excuse for trying to connect a correctly dressed, everyday-looking individual with the two-gun man of the Golden West. He was right there before everyone. All the crowd had to do was to listen to Bill Hart's speech and respond eagerly to his appeal for buyers to speed up the Liberty Loan. The touch of the ballyhoo did its share of the work.

William Farnum Mobbed by Bond Buyers.

William Farnum's wife stood and looked on last Saturday afternoon and laughed heartily while her husband was mobbed in Gimbel Brothers' store. The Fox Star was surrounded by an admiring crowd of women and girls, who cut off any chance of escape while they insisted on shaking hands with the man whose screen creations they had witnessed so often.

"Please shake hands with me, Mr. Farnum!" was heard on all sides of him. And this other Bill did his best to comply with every request.

The incident took place on the platform in the big Sixth avenue store. Emma Dunn and other untiring workers from the Professional Woman's League were in charge of the meeting, and the creator of Jean Valjean on the screen was their star attraction. His record proves that they could hardly have booked a stronger feature. Thirty-three million dollars is the amount of Liberty Bond sales to his credit. Of this sum twenty-five millions were taken in one night at Carnegie Hall.

Mrs. Farnum's Generous Act.

"How much am I offered for this silver cup?" asked William Farnum during the drive at Gimbel's. "It has been donated," he explained, "by the mother of two American soldiers over in France. She is here now and has given an article she prizes greatly as her contribution to the loan. What do I hear to start it?" "Five hundred dollars," spoke up a lady on the right of the platform. William Farnum turned to the bidder with a delighted smile and made her his very best bow.

"Thank you, Mrs. Farnum!" he said.

The crowd joined in a hearty laugh at his expense. But Bill was game. He started to find bidders against his better half as though he didn't care how he made her spend money, and when the cup was finally knocked down to her the Farnum back account was short another one thousand dollars.

This was the last sale of the afternoon. As William Farnum finished thanking his audience his wife handed the cup to one of the league committee with a message to the Fox star. This is what the actor old his hearers:

"I am sure you will all be as pleased as I when you learn that Mrs. Farnum has decided to give back the cup to the mother of the two soldiers in France."

Barking for the Loan.

No Coney Island barker or side show booster ever gave evidence of a better knowledge of the inside workings of the ballyhoo than that displayed by the Professional Woman's League and other branches of the amusement business that have been working for the different Liberty Loans. "Keep them good natured and interested every minute!" was the motto of the workers. Led by Ray Cox, who never lost an opportunity to win a smile or a laugh from the crowd, the women of the League and their men assistants from the stage and screen and other professions kept a string of buyers moving around to the booth at the back of the Fifth Avenue Liberty Theatre with the skill of the trained showman.

A short speech, a song or a funny story by some well known actor or actress, would be quickly followed by a new drive that was handled so adroitly the crowd reveived every encouragment to step up and buy. The moment one form of ballyhooing let the buying lag it was discarded for another.

Many hundred thousands of dollars would never have been secured without the use of the good old bit of showmanship known as the ballyhoo.

DOUG MAKES FLYING TRIP TO GOTHAM

Comes on from Washington in Mail Aeroplane, Sells Bunch of Liberty Bonds and Gets Away

Washington, October 18.

AFTER collecting six million dollars in New York City within forty hours, Douglas Fairbanks, Artcraft's famous star, arrived back in Washington via the aeroplane mail route this afternoon shortly before 5 o'clock, making the return trip in two hours and a quarter.

Immediately after landing the energetic Doug rushed to the Treasury Department. Here in front of the building a large platform was erected, and thousands jammed about the stand awaiting the appearance of the player. Fighting his way through the crowd, Doug climbed up the side of the platform and handed to Secretary McAdoo the envelope containing the subscriptions for $6,000,000 worth of Liberty Bonds from New York.

When Mr. McAdoo announced the amount of subscriptions obtained by the Artcraft star, the crowd broke forth in a wonderful ovation. In thanking Doug for his splendid work, the Secretary of the Treasury paid him, as well as the motion picture industry in general, high tribute for the co-operation given the Government. Mr. McAdoo expressed his pleasure at the opportunity of publicly acknowledging his sincere appreciation of all the motion picture industry has done to help win the war. That his remarks in this connection were fully appreciated by the thousands of spectators was evidenced by the storm of applause which followed.

After a typical Fairbanks speech, in which Doug had the crowd giving college yells under his leadership for the President, Mr. McAdoo and other Government officials, he proceeded to extract additional subscriptions. Mr. McAdoo then instructed the crowd in a "yell" for Doug, which was given with a will. "Douglas Fairbanks, Douglas Fairbanks, Douglas Fairbanks, Fighter! Fighter! Fighter! yelled the crowd, in perfect unison, as Doug stood on his hands by way of appreciation.

Fairbanks made the aeroplane trip to New York from Washington in order to match Barney Baruch's subscription for a million dollars. Doug got his million from Pliny Fisk, of Harvey Fisk & Sons, in five minutes after arriving and then set out to double it on Thursday. At the sub-treasury steps downtown he raised over three million dollars, among the large subscribers being B. C. Borden for $1,000,000; Bankers Trust Company for $250,000; Kidder Peabody & Co., $250,000; Guaranty Trust Company, $250,000, and E. B. Sweezay, $250,000. Other large subscriptions were received and then Doug started his "parade," up Broadway headed by the police band. This was probably the first "one man parade" New York ever witnessed, for Doug was the whole parade. On his way uptown, the player made many stops to receive big subscriptions. At Washington Arch he turned up Fifth avenue and continued his merry way up the broad street, breaking up all traffic and making the thousands who lined the streets dig in their jeans for subscriptions. At 6 o'clock he quit in front of the Harriman Bank, at Forty-fourth street and Fifth avenue, where he finished the day with a number of additional subscriptions of large denominations. On Friday morning he started back for the Belmont Aviation field to fly back to Washington with six million dollars. In Douglas Fairbanks' party in New York and Washington were John Fairbanks and Ted Reed, of the Fairbanks Company, and Pete Smith, of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Zukor Day Yields Over Half Million for Loan

WITH total subscriptions of $318,700, contributed through the organization of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Adolph Zukor Day, Tuesday, October 15, at the Liberty Theatre of the Stage Women's War Relief at the Public Library, raised the day's receipts at the booth to the highest figures yet attained in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive. The figures, given out by Ray Cox, secretary of the Stage Women's War Relief, total $548,450 for the day, and not only did this set a record in the point of the amount subscribed, but also in the number of subscribers, for no less than forty-five individual subscriptions were listed for the $229,750, which represented the amount received over and above the Famous Players-Lasky contribution. This wonderful showing was due in no small measure to the efforts of William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson and James Montgomery Flagg, who were present and added their appeals to those of Miss Cox and her assistants and the other speakers of the day.

In addition to the amount credited to Zukor Day the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation subscribed $100,000 to the loan, to be credited to the various exchange centers of the organization throughout the country, making the total pledged by the corporation $150,000; also $3,550 was subscribed by the employes of the Fort Lee studio, to be credited to Fort Lee, N. J., and $5,750 pledged by the employes of the home office and the Fifty-sixth street studio since Zukor Day to the credit of the organization, making a grand total of $428,000. Of this amount $100,000 was subscribed by Charles O. Baumann, who happened to be in the Famous Players-Lasky office Tuesday and expressed his desire to have his subscription listed to the credit of Zukor Day.

Individual subscriptions were as follows: Adolph Zukor, $25,000; Jesse L. Lasky, $20,000; Arthur S. Friend, $20,000; J. E. Brulatour, $25,000; Emile E. Shauer, $15,000; Daniel Frohman, $10,000; Blanche Lasky, $12,000; Hiram Abrams, $10,000; J. C. Graham, $2,000; Ethel Clayton, $1,000; Elek J. Ludvigh, $1,000; Walter E. Greene, $1,000; Charles O. Baumann, $100,000; Apeda studios, $2,050; employes of home office and New York branch, $14,000; employes of Fifty-sixth street studio, $7,400; employes of Fort Lee studio, $3,550; Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, $150,000.

William Farnum Hangs Up $33,000,000 in Bond Sale

THIRTY-THREE millions of dollars in Liberty Bonds! That was the way William Farnum did his bit for Uncle Sam during the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign, and when the big drive reached its close it was generaly conceded that his record ranked among the highest of the most successful of Liberty Loan salesmen.

During the two weeks of his campaigning in New York City, Mr. Farnum made ten appearances. In one night at Carnegie Hall, where he appeared with former President William Howard Taft, he sold $32,000,000 worth of bonds. It is estimated that he spoke in all before 60,000 persons, and it has been figured out that during the time when he was actually selling bonds he disposed of them at a rate of more than $1,500,000 an hour.

The William Fox star did not spare himself in his efforts to put the Fourth Liberty Loan over the top. No subscription was too small for him to go out for, no price was too large for him to attempt to reach. In the daytime he was at the William Fox Studio in Cliffside, N. J., working on his newest picture; at night he was exhorting audiences in the various theatres of the city to buy bonds to their utmost, and to keep them. Wherever he went he was greeted with an enthusiasm that testified to his great personal popularity, and he always was quick to crystallize this enthusiasm into practical patriotic help.

What was undoubtedly Mr. Farnum's greatest bond triumph—indeed, it set a new high-water mark for all single-handed bond efforts—occurred Thursday night, October 17, at Carnegie Hall. Taking the stage after former President Taft had delivered a stirring speech on the loan, the screen star, amid the wildest enthusiasm, carried the big audience into such a state of patriotic fervor that subscriptions in the millions were shouted from various parts of the house, and clerks were kept busy keeping count of the loan pledges that poured in.

Mr. Farnum began his plea with a recitation of "My Prophecy," which is an adaptation of Marc Antony's oration over the body of Caesar. Then, with the audience at the height of its enthusiasm, he launched into an auction of war relics contributed by heroes of the French and American armies who have lately returned from the trenches.

He sold a gas mask that had been taken from a German prisoner for a $25,000 subscription. Then he sent a thrill through the crowd by offering a decoration of the Legion of Honor, with eleven citations—the highest number ever given in French history. This was placed on sale by a veteran of the famous French Foreign Legion. Amid a roar of applause bids poured in swiftly until the total mounted to $500,000. Then the police department made a bid of $550,000. This was immediately increased to $880,000, and the decoration was finally sold for an even million dollars to the Crescent Athletic Club.

But what caused the greatest excitement and netted the large single subscription of the evening was an American battle flag tattered and torn after service in France. The police department opened the bidding by offering $500,000. Bids quickly leaped in hundreds of thousands of dollars, until finally the flag was bid in for $3,250,000 by the National Bank of Commerce. Subscriptions rapidly mounted until they reached $32,000,000.

North Carolina Manager Puts Houses Behind Loan

H. T. DRAKE, manager of the Strand and LaFayette theatres in Fayetteville, N. C., has gained the approval and praise of several patriotic societies in his town for the manner in which he has opened his theatre to every call of war service. During the time his houses were closed in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive by the scourge of influenza he decorated the lobbies of both theatres and erected booths for the sale of bonds.

Manager Drake is rightfully proud of the indorsement he has received from H. L. Cook, chairman of the Fourth Loan Committee; John A. Oates, chairman of the Council of Defense, and from R. H. Dye, Government appeal agent, who praise his patriotism in letters of enthusiastic approval. It may be readily imagined that the spirit of local pride and patriotic impulse that has impelled Manager Drake to open his house to "Four-Minute Men," to book patriotic films, aid in the various Liberty Loan drives and in every way put his property and his opportunities at the disposal of the Government will not alone leave him with a fine and healthy conscience, but in possession of public appreciation that will long endure.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

AN INSTANTANEOUS hit was made throughout the trade by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S export section, which appeared in the issue of October 12. It was the first time that adequate attention had been given to the export situation and conditions by an American picture trade publication printed in English, and it covered the field as never before. This was made possible by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S foreign connections and the presence on its staff of men competent to handle the subject. It is the purpose of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD to issue this highly valuable supplement to its regular issue every month, and it will increase in value to our readers and advertisers with each publication.

As has been frequently mentioned in these columns, the importance of the motion picture export trade must not be overlooked by American manufacturers. For purposes of motion picture making this country seems to have the better advantages and a better conception of what is best suited to cosmopolitan tastes. Whether the audience be located in Kokomo or Kamchatka, the preference is for those good American films. Presently this war will be over and then the great foreign market will be opened wide and unobstructed. For that time all should be prepared; but before the harvest can be gathered the soil must be prepared and seed planted. Now is the time to begin the work of preparation and planting. The MOVING PICTURE WORLD'S Export Section can help you.

THESE be parlous times, some indication of which is reflected in the pages of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, a bit tenuous through lack of the customary trade announcements. We are not going to discuss the wisdom of the decision that has brought about these conditions; we only hope that no serious effects will result from the temporary suspension and that presently business will be resumed at the old stand. In the meantime the MOVING PICTURE WORLD will "carry on" in an endeavor to give its subscribers all the worth while news that happens.

WE HAVE been asked to give an interpretation of the change in the theatre admission tax as proposed by the Senate Finance Committee which is now considering the revenue bill. Advices from Washington, published on page 503 of our issue of October 26, explains the change to amount to a tax of one cent each five cents charged. But the bill has not yet been passed, and probably will not be before December. There is no assurance that the Senate's amendments will be adopted, so any attempt to interpret something that is not law would be futile.

THE usefulness of the motion picture industry in promoting the sale of Fourth Liberty Loan bonds has been seriously impaired by the influenza epidemic, yet, for all that, much good work has been done by individual players, and a number of theatre managers have already produced splendid results wherever their efforts have been put forth. While we wish more might have been accomplished, the total will not be so bad, considering the many closed theatres and the general depression in the amusement line. But there will be another time.

THE plague of influenza seems to have passed its worst stages. From Boston, where the disease was most widespread, comes news that the epidemic state has passed and that theatres are to be opened again. In many other sections of the country similar conditions are reported, so that it is safe to assume that normal conditions will be restored within a short space of time. These indications will be welcome tidings to motion picture men and amusement promoters in general. It will be well, nevertheless, to continue to exercise every measure of precaution until the disease is finally stamped out. Undoubtedly the approach of cold weather with the gradual fall in temperatures which will purify the atmosphere, will stop the highly contagious character of the plague.

A PREVALENCE OF TYPES

By Robert C. McElravy.

EMINENT statisticians have figured out that there are only seven different lots in the realms of fiction, only thirteen different kinds of jokes, and a lot of other things of more or less value to the story-teller. But this harassed individual, always on the lookout for something new and different, has one resource, if he has learned to use it, that is almost inexhaustible. That is the bewildering variation of types, all of them human and therefore interesting, into which mankind is grouped.

When his brain is wracked by vain effort to find new twists for plot structure, the simplest way often is to stick his thumb into Jack Horner's literary pie and see if he can't pull out some new kind of a plum—in other words, a new type of person around which to build his story. For, if he has ever done this successfully, he knows that a real character-type is likely to bring a lot of plot along with him. As a matter of fact it requires almost five reels to develop an interesting character on the screen and it doesn't really matter much what he does if he does it in his own individual way. A Colonel Sellers, a Mrs. Grundy or a Mr. Pickwick are not dependent upon special plot situations to any great extent.

The human family may be separated broadly into two classes, the virtuous and the villainous. But when it comes to choosing fiction types, most of them will be found ranging somewhere between these two classifications. There is very little genuine concentrated, out-and-out villainy in the world (exclusive of the Hohenzollern influence), and it is only occasionally that downright criminality needs to be pictured. This usually comes in the strictly tragic type of story. Neither are strictly virtuous types so frequent; the classification might be said to include all mothers, clergymen and Red Cross nurses, but perhaps not many others.

It is a curious phase of human nature that most people desire to escape being classified with either virtue or villainy—or being classified at all if they can avoid it. This tendency to split away from the general is what creates individual characters. The characters vary exceedingly, but sometimes they are congenial and gregarious and may be said to represent certain types. These types are tremendously interesting; they are often amusing and sometimes pathetic.

It is the fashion of people who have crooked or villainous tendencies to masquerade as virtuous, for nearly all types are acting out some particular role in life a little different than nature intended. We have Uriah Heep with his false humility, Mr. Raffles posing as a gentleman, and a thousand and one other villains assuming virtues for purposes of their own. But perhaps the most entertaining of all is the type of really virtuous person who assumes a villainy when he has it not. This is not at all infrequent, for most people are all wool and a yard wide at heart, though they would be terrified at the thought of admitting it. So we have the girl who smokes cigarettes and reads "Snappy Stories" as an expression of her independence of all restraint. Then we have the man who drinks an occasional high ball and loudly advertises the fact, and a lot of minor miscreants too numerous to mention. This latter type nearly always hugs its little sins with great glee and is constantly expecting some reformer to come along and get after it with a big stick. But their camouflaged goodness is self-evident; and you can trust this type to keep on buying Liberty Bonds as long as it is necessary.

It is really remarkable how much one strong, well-defined character-type will do for a production. One of the new releases, "The Brazen Beauty," is such a picture. The story, written by Louise Winter, centers about a young Western girl who inherits millions and bursts with crude violence into the high society of Long Island. Priscilla Dean, a comparative newcomer to the screen, works wonders with the role. She never gets away from the type of girl she started out to portray. The characterization supersedes plot and action and setting, but the story also has these in good measure. All told, it is difficult to remember a five-reel picture that is stronger than "The Brazen Beauty" from the standpoint of artistic merit and sheer entertainment.

HIGHEST PICTURE VALUES

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

COMEDY might easily be ranked above all other forms of drama, if there were great examples of comedy to be had, and if we were not confronted with the remarkable success of such photo-dramas as "The Birth of a Nation," "My Four Years in Germany" and the like, to say nothing of examples of tremendous popularity, far and above any comedy, in the other arts, such as "Ben Hur," "Uncle Tom's Cabin," "Camille" and a long line of serious stories. One great difficulty in getting at values lies in the general use of a term which might aim at popularity yet fail to make a hit with either the intelligent or the stupid.

What is meant by the word "Amusement?"

It can be construed as merely causing laughter.

It can relieve tedium, as by looking out of the window.

It can mean to engage and wholly occupy the mind.

Here is a wide range, from what would appeal to a baby in arms to the pleasure a grown person finds while speculating on some point in psychology. Many people feel an intuitive delight on seeing beauty, while others might be carried away by the charming personality of an actress. A dozen different people may enjoy a dozen different things in the same picture, hence the critic goes beyond personal viewpoint.

What wholly occupies the mind of the greatest number?

It may be that which is of deepest personal concern.

This would give highest value to "interest."

Is that interest in the subject matter?

Is it confined to the personality of an actor?

Is it merely to pass the time away?

Now we are brought flat up against the arbitrary length of feature pictures. It is scarcely even attempted to keep an audience laughing for more than two reels, though it could be done, and interest is apt to lapse at any time unless the representation is logical, or there is a quality of suspense which engages audience mind to the last.

Sustained interest may be set down as one of the highest values.

Sustained interest is broken by the obviously false.

Sustained interest often depends on curiosity as to the outcome.

Sustained interest is strong in vital subject matter.

It gains strength in revelation of ourselves.

Here are elements of "interest," "amusement," "entertainment," call it what you like, to which the critic gives attention, consciously or unconsciously, irrespective of the drawing power of a star's name, because the good-will of every picture house depends on satisfied audiences.

Logic, suspense, subject matter and characterization. These are four very high values in feature plays.

Their best combination might be found in high comedy.

In that or in powerful drama of modern times.

Weakest in these values is the so-called "vehicle."

Critics may be thoughtlessly blamed for distinguishing between the entertaining qualities of a screen product and those which are destructive of audience interest, but it is impossible to pass honest judgment without doing so. There are many other values to be considered, but their presence can neither cover, nor compensate for, the absence of those elements named. On the other hand, given a story of absorbing interest through high suspense and vital subject matter logically developed in rightly typed characterization, whether comedy or serious drama, it will usually get over.

What kind of plays do the critics enjoy?

All good ones, like the audience, when they have a chance.

Audiences turn cold on illogical stories and are dulled by stale stuff. They love laughter, originality, beauty, variety, accord close attention to high suspense, give warm applause to sympathetic characterization and can be moved to ovations by vital matter, truthfully, splendidly and forcefully presented. Capable criticism makes for development, for improvement, for progress in quality and for the ultimate prosperity of motion picture production.

AN INTERESTING CONTRAST

By Edward Weitzel.

AN article in The Writer's Monthly for October, by Arthur Leeds, calls attention to "two novelties of the just-opening 1918-19 dramatic season in New York City." One event was the production of Anthony Kelly's stage play, "Three Faces East." The other event was the coming first night of a stage version of "The Cheat," written by Hector Turnbull, author of the screen story, and the stage dramatist, Willard Mack. Under the title, "I. O. U.," the Turnbull-Mack play made its stage debut the first week in October and met with very little encouragement from the newspaper critics. One of the screen's biggest successes and the first photoplay to be transformed into a spoken drama, the reason for its failure on the stage is worth studying. As for "Three Faces East," it is one of the biggest hits of the season and is turning people away at every performance.

Uncovering the Skeleton.

Most of the reviews on "I. O.U." agree that the only big situation in the play takes place in the last act, and that the dialogue throughout is much below standard. The nature of its theme robs the heroine of sympathy, and when she attempts to justify her acts by words she only succeeds in exposing her own want of brains and the poverty of her excuses. The big situation, where the enraged Oriental brands the shoulder of the woman who made an infamous bargain with him and then refused to fulfill her part of the contract, illustrates a vital point of difference between the art of the screen and that of the stage. One is reflected; the other is acted out before the eyes of the spectator. It is the actual presence of the human beings in the scene that makes the branding repugnant to the physical senses. To repeat an iron bound axiom: True art never strikes below the belt. The restrictions of the stage and the screen differ on many points. What may be good art for the one is often bad art for the other. The most skillful dialogue in the world would not have made the stage play as convincing as it was in its original form. The subject was adapted to the medium for which it was first conceived. Denuding it to a skeleton for a stage play left it only the bare bones of a once well rounded story which spoken words could not adequately cover.

The Importance of Dialogue.

Referring to the success of "Three Faces East," the Leeds article says of its author: "He had the good sense to wait until the really big idea came along and until he had sufficiently grounded himself in the technique of the regular stage." The fact of the matter is, the Anthony Paul Kelly play is almost dialogue proof and could have been adapted to the screen as readily as to the stage. Curiosity and suspense are so aroused by the Chinese puzzle of a plot that everything else is forgotten by the audience. Had "The Cheat" been built along the same lines it could have been turned into an equally good stage play and snapped its fingers at the words spoken by its characters. But this does not entirely dispose of the question of dialogue.

Quoting once more from the Leeds article: "If writers for the stage may come into the photoplay field, a knowledge of stage technique seems to be the only thing which need be mastered by the successful writer of screen plays before he may at least attempt the legitimate drama."

Dialogue is a very important part of the technique of most stage plays. If mastered it will assure the success of many a plot that is anything but dialogue proof. The screen writer who turns stage dramatist must command the services of a profficient collaborator, or he will be restricted to but one class of material, unless he buckles down to hard work and learns the trick of writing stage talk himself.

FIFTH AVENUE HAILS DOUG

FIFTH AVENUE, the great highway of New York, known everywhere of all men who know any highway, uncovered something new under the sun on the afternoon of October 17. Even as this is being written the throngs are filling the famous thoroughfare at Forty-fourth street. The sounds of cheering and handclapping come down the avenue and turn into Forty-third street, into the sanctum of the Moving Picture World. Doug Fairbanks is out there selling Liberty Bonds.

This actor-man came up Fifth avenue as a himself parade—and the town stopped work to see and hear. Fears of contracting influenza through mixing in a crowd apparently deterred none from jamming in around him. Escorting Doug were the full police band and six mounted policemen, the latter in pairs. Between each two of the "finest" was a lay figure, suspended by sturdy bluecoated arms. Out in front was what looked like the Kaiser after reading a Wilsonian blast. The two following figures appeared to be in the same deep dejection.

Here on Fifth avenue the denizens of the offices see many parades and are as you may say accustomed to them. But this one of today is rare. It is Fifth avenue's tribute to the screen, the screen as personified by Douglas Fairbanks.

Salaries Soundly Based, Declares Montagu Love

MONTAGU LOVE, World Pictures star, in talking of the much reported high salaries paid to motion picture stars, said:

"The large salaries that well-known film stars are receiving are based on sound values. In judging the salaries there are a number of important factors to be taken into consideration. Chief among these is the fact that a motion picture star's high value is generally for only a few short years. Unlike a stage star, he is not seen but once a year or so in a community, but in every big and little city in the country his productions are shown every four to six weeks to larger throngs of people than ever attend legitimate theatres.

"In this way his popularity, of course, grows more rapidly than that of a stage star, but because of the frequency with which the public sees him, this popularity also wanes much faster than that of a stage star. A popular stage star retains his popularity for thirty to forty years, and receives a big salary for each of those years. A film star's popularity lasts for only a fraction of that time, and consequently in the short period that his value is large he must receive a correspondingly bigger salary than the stage star if his lifetime's earnings are to show as big a total as the stage star's. High film salaries are only relatively high. When all factors are taken into consideration they are seen to not be out of proportion at all."

Albert Capellani Goes to Coast.

Albert Capellani left Saturday for Los Angeles, where he will at once take up the production of "The Red Lantern," the big Chinese spectacle play, in which Alla Nazimova will be starred. This is Mr. Capellani's first visit to the Pacific slope, which he is eager to compare with the Riviera, with which motion picture direction has made him familiar. With Mr. Capellani on the Western tour are Mrs. Capellani and their three children.

"America's Answer" Companies Close.

As a result of the influenza and the consequent closing of theatres where "America's Answer" was booked, the tours of the last two companies playing the Official War Picture have been cancelled. It is probable that the film will not be seen again until it is released to the motion picture houses.

Baltimore Man Called.

Herndon Edmond, Baltimore representative for General Film Company, sent in his resignation to Manager J. E. Flax of the Washington office last week, he having been called to the army. Mr. Edmond has been six years with General Film Company and was considered one of its most valued and loyal employes.

T. S. Cooper, of Montreal, secretary of the General Film Company (Limited) of Canada, was a recent visitor at General Film headquarters in New York.

When Producers Go West Remaining Actors Ask Less

NOTICEABLE effect of the motion picture companies moving their operating plants to California is already being felt at the World Pictures studio at Fort Lee. On a recent Monday morning ove 300 actors called and asked that they be registered with the casting director. Many of them were actors who have recently played important parts in pictures. Some of them stated that as the railroad fares to California are so high and they had saved no money they were unable to follow their companies.

Actors who have been paid as high as $200 a week are willing to accept jobs at half that money if they can be assured of receiving regular employment here. The question with the casting director of World Pictures now is not so much the ordinary assembling of a proper cast, but rather that of elimination from many good actors and the drafting of virtually an all-star cast at salaries that three months ago would have been utterly impossible.

Scenario writers also are affected. Many are submitting material to the World company at figures that are exceedingly reasonable, due to their desire of securing quick money for their work. They realize that the time lost in sending a script to California for approval and the consequent loss of time in negotiations makes it desirable to sell for less money and get the money at once.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

From Providence.

J. FRED LOVETT, of the Royal, Providence, sends in more of his advertising with a request for comment. We have explained that Mr. Lovett finds it necessary to display his program for the week in the Sunday issue, taking a three fives. With three changes and an underline, he does not get much opportunity for display, but he is off on a page by himself where the need of fighting the other houses does not exist. But for this very reason we think he could sacrifice design for the sake of larger and more prominent type. With the page to himself there is less need for fighting with design and we think that a typical border, not much larger than 24 point, mortised for type, would give better results. But Mr. Lovett is on the ground and perhaps sees a reason for the design work that does not appear on the surface. We think, though, that it would pay him to try the experiment. Of the samples sent in we take eight of the best. In the first of these he gets his three stars into the design, and even suggests that the Bara subject is a little better than the others, though the portrait suggests a soubrette rather than a vampire. Here Miss Bara's name appears in a 30 point gothic, which is an unsually large face and is tied only once, in the Ella Hall announcement. The other three names are set in an 18 point that in the capital letter gives only 12 points. Usually this would be far too small a display. It is permissible here only because Mr. Lovett gets on the local page for his suburban section. The right hand dispay gives most of the space to an effort to capitalize the line, "An all star bill." For the sake of this allusion much valuable space goes to black ink and star rays that might better be put into the larger faces of display type. Here is twelve point that looks more like a ten the largest line of importance. A star border between one point rule would give the same idea and permit the names to be played up so they would attract the reader. The left hand display in the second example is the best of the lot. Here

A pair of three fives. That on the left shows the star players. On the right space is sacrificed to design.

Two more displays in which the stars are suppressed.

48 point faces are used for two lines, and Fairbanks gets 18, not because he is less prominent, but because the lines are staggered and not set all on one line. At that the display is better than in the larger face with a condensed letter. Here the design has some bearing upon the first attraction though there is nothing to hook the design with the title. The display on the right is weak as to the illustration, but the line effect is well done. Here a twelve point is the largest letter used. Only by keeping down the descriptive lines is any display gained. The full type face is just three by three inches. It is too little in proportion to the display. The next cut shows two more examples of playing up to the idea apart from the attraction. That on the left for W. S. S. week is nicely laid and gets plenty of space for the appeal without sacrificing display space. This is large enough to be read easily and some of the names will reach out and command attention. The other space was run in the summer and carried the point without undue waste of display space. Here the idea is gotten over in the design and yet half of the space is given to the bill. The proof was poorly pulled, so that the type does not show up well, but in the original there is a fair display, but only a fair display, because there is a tendency to give equal value to the feature and the fillers. We think that this is not a good plan. It is better to use a smaller type for the secondary attractions to make the feature seem more important. The trouble here is that even the feature is set in such a small letter that the seconds cannot come much smaller. We like, however, the idea of naming all the subjects instead of merely adding "A comedy," or "A Paramount comedy." We think the names will help sell in two ways. The title may attract, and the reader knows what he is getting instead of fearing that it may perhaps be something he has seen at the downtown houses. The last pair are well laid out, but the design goes to the artist. The lion may have reference to some subject, but it seems to tie up to the line, "The king of bills," which is not a particularly good line. The other space announces a "bill that's always on the square," in allusion to the location of the house. Here the display lines are eighteen point, and with each in its own box, the display is better than where all are thrown together. The panel effect is generally better for a change of bill announcement. We think that if Mr. Lovett would change his scheme to play up the features in larger type and set the sub features in a six or eight point, he would get a better display and influence business, though perhaps not to the point where the results would be noticeable in the box office. We think the best results of all would come from using a frame about the size of that with the lion—omitting the lion, and making one design serve permanently. It is not so much a matter of curring costs as of getting proper display for the type matter.

Two spaces in which the decorations are not germane to the offerings.

The reading of the foregoing figures have heartened me greatly. They are, so the Post says, official. Certainly there will be many cripples, but from the foregoing, considering the huge numbers of men engaged, perhaps when it is all done we shall find it at least not nearly as bad as we had feared.

To sum up, I repeat: Let us by all means provide for as many of the incapacitated fighters as we can, but let us do it decently and in order, for their own good, as well as for the good of the industry, the public and all concerned. We have an abundance of incompetency and cheapness in projection rooms now. What is needed is not "operators," but projectionists who can and will do justice to the splendid productions of today.

Non-Intermittent Projector Has Possibilities.

Recently the writer was summoned to Boston to re-examine a non-intermittent projector which had been demonstrated to him a year or so previously and had failed to make even reasonably good. The summons came from William C. Franke, former secretary of the Boston projectionists' union, who is himself a practical projectionist of several years' experience. Francke is now connected with the company engaged in developing the projector, and he assured me that, in his judgment, the machine had commercial possibilities, so I climbed aboard Nancy Hanks, the go-devil, and in due course again looked upon the year-ago failure.

The machine at this time has, in my opinion, very decided possibilities. It employs two three-member lens wheels, revolving in opposite directions and overlapping each other. This is the plan employed to catch the constantly moving film picture and bring it to a temporary halt upon the screen. The plan is not new. It has been tried by several inventors and has failed. There was always a pronounced movement of the picture up and down upon the screen, and no arrangement of revolving lenses or prisms seemed able to eliminate that movement. The inventor, or inventors, of this projector ran into the same trouble, but have apparently gotten around it by giving the projection lens itself a slight up and down reciprocating movement. The lens rests on a slightly eccentric steel cam, and moves vertically perhaps an eighth of an inch for each picture.

I witnessed what was a quite fairly good picture as to definition, with only about a two-inch vertical movement in what seemed to be about every third or fourth picture. The picture was quite small. In a full-size picture the movement would be much more. It was explained that this movement was due to lack of accuracy in setting of one of the lenses, or something like that. But be that as it may, I believe that if the development of this plan can be carried to this point it can be carried further, and a rock-steady projection can be produced. The question then comes: Can it be done commercially? By this I mean, can a projector of this type be put out with an optical system which can be readily fitted to local theatre conditions, and which can be successfully handled by the average projectionist? That, it seems to me, is now the crux of this whole matter. That a machine can be built which will do the work under one condition seems, in view of what I have seen, certain. But can it be built to do the work under other conditions; also, can it be built at a cost which is not prohibitive? Time alone will tell us these things, but I now, and for the first time, can agree that non-intermittent projection seems a possibility.

The advantages of this machine do not lie in light conservation, at least at its present stage of development. In fact, it will not be able to utilize even as great a percentage of the light as does the standard, intermittent projector. This is by reason of the fact that, whereas it has no revolving shutter, it must have a spot large enough to cover two full pictures, with the usual overlap, and a spot of twice the diameter will have more than twice the area, hence the light strength per unit of spot area will not be half as great. The machine has two tremendous advantages, however, viz.: It will work enormous saving in film wear, and there is absolutely no flicker at any speed. I watched a picture slowed down to about five pictures per second, and the effect, while perfect, was decidedly odd. This possibility has value when it comes to studying action, as in class-rooms, in military practice, etc.

A model of the machine was exhibited, without projection, at the Chicago convention, and I understand one will be exhibited at the coming convention in New York City. (It will probably not be the "coming" convention by the time this gets into print, but the "late convention," instead.)

Travel Ghost Trouble.

Thomas J. Motherway, St. Marys, Kansas, desires aid as to the following:

> Our machine is a Power's 6, rather old, and I find it impossible to entirely get rid of travel ghost. Have followed all instructions in the handbook, but despite all efforts, the white streaking returns intermittently. A few reels may run all right, then comes the ghost; then it may be all right again for a time. Would like to know which has the faster intermittent, the Power's or the Motiograph machines? Is it possible for you to offer a discussion of the comparative merits of different projection machines in a private letter such as you mention in connection with the one dollar charge?

Your intermittent travel ghost is no doubt due to worn gears, possible in conjunction with a shutter blade which is just right ordinarily, but is too narrow where there is back-lash, due to looseness in the gears. The intermittent part may be due to position of framing carriage. Hold fly-wheel stationary and rock the revolving shutter back and forth. If there is a movement of more than half an inch your gears are worn too much. You may remedy matters, in this case, by attaching a soft leather strap, one-half inch wide, to something stationary immediately under the shutter shaft, passing the strap over the shaft and attaching a light weight to the other end. The idea is to produce a slight braking effect, so that the shutter will not "back-lash," but be held on the retard all the time. You can then set it so that there is no travel ghost, and your trouble should be over. The other way is to add, say ⅛-inch more width to the cutting blade or revolving shutter. You may do this by means of two strips of slide binder tape. Paste one on each side of the blade, allowing them to extend ⅛-inch beyond its edge, pasting the two edges together for stiffness. ⅛-inch is, of course, a guess, but should be enough to remedy the trouble. The right remedy, however, is new gears. As to the comparative speed of the intermittent movement of various projectors, why, no, I could not publish that without a row. It is a thing you should post yourself on. Even the "operator" should know it, and the projectionist must know it, since intermittent speed has large bearing on projection from many different angles. As to a discussion of the relative merits of different projectors—why, that comes under the head of projection engineering, and the projection engineer who could be employed to give an expert opinion of that sort involving a comparison of many different points, ranging from materials employed to possibilities of the optical train, would, it seems to me, be entirely too cheap to be worth listening to. As I have told you many times, the one dollar charge mentioned in the department is merely to head off a great mass of demands for personal replies by mail which would, and formerly did, consume most of my time. A large percentage of these demands for personal replies were on things of comparatively slight importance. Remember, there are tens of thousands of operators and projectionists in this country alone; also many thousands of theatre managers, and a considerable number are always in need of aid of various kinds. This much I will say, viz., it is not necessary to seek further than the advertising pages of this paper to find projection machines which have no superior. And, mind you, that is not a mere boost for our advertising department, but a statement of absolute fact.

More Shutter Trouble.

Vance Tilley, Suffolk, Va., has trouble, as follows:

> My booth (Why "booth," neighbor Tilley? For heaven's sake, ask your manager to give you a projection room. See Webster for definition of "booth."—Ed.). is equipped with Power's 6-A projectors. For last two weeks there has been travel ghost—very bad, too. Took machine apart and looked for lost motion, but after reassembling, it was as bad as ever. Have set my shutter several times, but without improvement. It will run about three reels O. K. and then start streaking, either up or down. Machine is perfectly adjusted and can find no lost motion.

From what you say, I am inclined to believe the screws which clamp the shutter blade between flanges have worked loose. You do not need to take the machine apart to test for lost motion. Just hold fly-wheel stationary and see how far you can move the revolving shutter back and forth. If it is more than ½-inch at the rim there is too much lost motion in gears. Under certain conditions it is, you know, quite possible to produce travel ghost merely by moving the lamphouse back and forth. It is also quite possible to do the same thing by altering the spacing of the condenser lenses. But these things do not apply in your case apparently, because if the trouble lay in the optical train, setting the shutter would either cure it permanently or not at all. It is also possible that one of the gears is loose on its shaft and slipping slightly. Examine them all carefully, if you find the shutter flange screws are tight, and apply considerable pulling strain to the rim of the shutter while holding the fly-wheel stationary. If it is a loose-on-the-shaft gear, a hard pull on the shutter should cause it to slip, though sometimes it won't. If you can find nothing wrong after these tests, make a scratch mark across the hub of gear and end of shaft of any gear you may have reason to suspect, and when travel ghost shows up examine the marks and see if they still match up.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Proper Presentation of Pictures Requires Careful Choice of Incidental Music

Part II.

THOSE musical directors who have relegated themselves to a sort of treadmill existence, who no longer plan for bigger musical results, or who do their work with one hand continually upon their watch-fob, have mentally classified all scenes into a few simple tempi. To these, a ball room scene, garden party, or social event, calls for a bright waltz; sad scenes mean waltz lentos, deep grief of any kind needs an adagio pathetic and so forth. For these, the analysis of scenes is as yet an undiscovered science and their failure to comprehend such causes them no qualms of conscience. Theirs is the simple life, with little to do today and nothing tomorrow. Incidentally, the salary is little today and will be nothing tomorrow.

The choosing of incidental music for the pictures can never become an exact science, and, for that reason, the occupation is bereft of monotony and the stigma attached to drudgery. From close observation of tests made in picture fitting and by the use of common sense, a few rules or principles can be laid down, which, if followed, cannot carry the musical directors far astray.

Secondary to suitability, the music in a setting should be varied. Without variety of tempo, there can be but little variety of color, and a musical accompaniment consisting of a series of waltzes would be a sorry sort of picture portrayal. All bright scenes should not be fitted with the same style of selection. Serenades, intermezzos, light waltzes, mazurkas, two-steps and caprices may be used effectively to convey brightness and at the same time provide variety. Ballads, lullabys, slow serenades, cavatinas and reveries suit slow scenes that may be tinged with sadness or regret. Here again one gets ample variety. Neutral situations must be fitted according to locations, conditions, or plot development, and, if many of them appear, the music should be sufficiently varied to dispel any idea of an integral connection, one with the other.

Do not use too much music composed by one man. Each has a certain style and technique which is noticeable to an almost incredible extent, even among the masses. The melodies may be different, the tempo changed and the harmonic treatment may be widely divergent; but we hear people say, "That sounds like Debussy," and it is Debussy. Every composer is stamped with his hall-mark, and no one hearing Greig could be told that "Morning" was by Massenet.

Thus, to obtain variety in its widest sense, the choice of composers enters largely into the question, although the composer should not be sacrificed for the mere sake of variety, if the selection be different in tempo and arrangement, but supremely suitable to the occasion.

In conjunction with variety, we must have a standard style to our musical settings. The classic or non-classic music must prevail for the entire picture under ordinary conditions. It is unwise to mix into a musical setting comprising excerpts from grand opera or symphonies, the popular "shoot-fly" one-steps of the day. They have their place in many light comedy dramas, and the intrusion of Grieg's Peer Gynt Suite into this class of musical material would be equally foolish.

Exceptional instances arise where, for the sake of contrast, there may be a mingling of these widely opposite forms, but the basic principle of picture accompaniment differs in no way from that of grand opera, comic opera or burlesque. Can you imagine "You've Got to Quit Calling Me Hon" being interpolated into the opera "Thais," or "E Fors a Lui" being sung in the performance of "The Beef Trust" burlesque show? To violate this principle is to make of your setting a musical melange that is meaningless. The incidental music must be equal to the theme in quality.

Then, again, the music must be selected with an eye to its sonority or volume and graded upwards toward the climax and downward toward the finale of the picture. Taking it for granted that the climax is reached in the fourth reel of a five-reel picture, the music selected should follow the development of the play, gradually increasing in sonority and massiveness until the climax number is reached, when it should die down with the photoplay. This gives us one mountain with a long grade upward and a rapid descent from the peak.

See Figure I.

Now, if the theme be stronger than the incidental music, somewhere in the first or second reel there will be a minor climax point in the graded incline. If one or two incidental numbers tower above the others, more minor climaxes will be heard, and the gradually ascending grade will show a series of hillocks.

See Figure II.

Who can tell which point is the real climax?

The same fault might easily creep into the score after the climax had been reached and create in the minds of the audience an uncertainty regarding the real culminating point of the plot.

Reversing the principle, no number should be introduced which is weaker than the preceding one while ascending to the peak, for this will create a valley too far below the picture. See Figure III. It will weaken the musical support and lose the interest of the auditors to such an extent that will make it difficult to again gain their attention.

No doubt many new rules regarding the choice of incidental music will be evolved and developed in future, but the leader of today can safely follow the three enumerated above. They will save him from many a pitfall and, when memorized, will smooth out the numerous little difficulties which he now encounters in score-making.

Forewarned Leaders Use Forethought.

Influenza stalks through the land and people fear to congregate lest they contract the disease. Many theatres are voluntarily closing their doors, while some are shut down by the order of the local board of health. Countless musical directors have nothing to do but draw their salaries.

Now is the time to take stock of your library. It needs rearrangement, and proper classification. Worn music should be replaced by new copies, torn sheets should be mended, and lost parts searched out.

How many numbers have you listed in your library and how many hundred times have your patrons heard each and every one of them? Isn't this a good time to buy new and up-to-the-minute music?

Get in touch with your music dealer or the publishers, scan their catalogues, and make your selection. Watch for bargain advertisements in the trade journals and establish music service connections that can be relied upon to supply your wants, accurately and speedily, in the height of the season when you become busy.

The Rivoli Holds Talented Directors.

The performance at the Rivoli during the week of October 6 was exeeptionally good. Mr. Rothapfel changed the form of his program by opening the bill with "The Lost Chord," sung by the Rialto Male Quartette. The song was well rendered, and the church scene, with its special lightings, proved most interesting.

"Roxy" always has a reason for any innovation, and we believe that his purpose was to isolate the singing of this number so that the Chinese atmosphere which followed in his feature would not be too closely connected with the religious thought of "The Lost Chord." It was a splendid idea, and worked well. When things become too stilted or stereotyped, they become monotonous.

"Les Preludes," by Liszt, was conducted by Mr. Rubenstein. This young man has been hiding his light beneath a bushel. He is a splendid director, and should be given more opportunity to show his ability. His gestures are graceful, yet eommanding; he seems to thoroughly understand musical interpretation, and the "boys" work well under him. "Les Preludes" was performed in a manner creditable to the largest symphony orchestra in the country.

The animated pictorial was beautifully fitted, and, as usual, there was that precision of synchrony that marks all the music at the Rivoli. Little Joseph Littau conducted this number, and, although he may be small of stature, his work is impressive and effective. In many ways, he is a genius, and his conducting ability shows some real flashes of that rara avis.

Before the feature, "The Forbidden City," was screened there was an orchestral prelude called "Intermede Chinois," by Maurice Bawn. This was for the purpose of creating the Chinese atmosphere, which was to predominate in the feature. The number itself is a remarkable little intermezzo of true Oriental type, and received a degree of applause upon its own merits, and that in spite of the fact that it was merely an overture to the picture.

The music for the feature consisted chiefly of excerpts from "Madame Butterfly," and, as we have always contended in these columns, such a musical setting is confusing. Operagoers—and we believe many go to the Rivoli—saw Norma Talmadge, but heard Geraldine Farrar. Unless a screen scene is typically the same as an opera scene, there is a danger in the use of opera, especially if it be popular.

"In a Bird Store," a descriptive entr' acte, was played by the orchestra under Erno Rapee. Mr. Rapee did not seem at home in this number, and at times the interpretation was overdone. However, he is improving in his general direction.

The "Mutt and Jeff" comedy and organ solo closed a splendid performance.

Good Music for "Lafayette, We Come!"

At a special trade showing in the Strand Theatre Wednesday morning the new and much heralded picture, "Lafayette, We Come!" was given its first presentation.

The overture "Raymond," by A. Thomas, opened the program. We considered this a poor choice, for it depicted in no way the general idea of what was to follow.

Immediately at its conclusion, Mr. Frederick Grant, a fine basso, sang the song, "Lafayette, We Come!" during which a tableau was shown of the allied soldiers pressing on toward Berlin. The lighting effects were splendid, the song was clearly enunciated and well sung, and the audience showed their appreciation in no uncertain manner.

Mr. Carl Edouarde conducted for the feature, "Fafayette, We Come!" and did a good job of it. The music in the main was appropriate and fitted the screen situations. The artistic touch of M. Peret could be felt in the musical arrangement, especially where the piccolo and drum solos playing "The Girl I Left Behind Me" were brought right into a slow movement to fit a flash scene. This was effective.

A few numbers were in poor taste, and the one that calls for loudest eensure was the sacrilegious use of "Nearer My God to Thee" in rag time. It was not intended to be "ragged," but the uneven tempo di marcia made it decidedly ragged. It had no place in the scene under any circumstances, a better choice being "Adagio Pathetique," by Godard, which would have linked up the previous scene showing desolated Belgium.

During the "Soiree" scene, the hero was called upon to show his musical ability, and a facsimile of the title page of "The Army of the Dead," published by Boosey & Co., was thrown upon the screen. The inference was obviously that the hero was about to sing. Instead of that he played a pianoforte solo. Why this discrepancy of detail?

The finale, introducing "My Country Tis of Thee," was wonderfully approached and perfectly synchronized. As the picture closed, a pause would have been musically effective before dashing into the exit march.

Strand Sets Good Music to Fine Bill.

The Strand program headed by "The Romance of Tarzan" as the feature during the week of October 13 showed a general improvement.

The overture, "Irish Rhapsody," by Victor Herbert, was omitted to allow sufficient time for Jesse Goldberg and the Rev. Paul Smith to add $18,000 to the Liberty Loan. We preferred the speeches anyway, and they were good.

The Strand Topical Review was somewhat restrained, and was not played at the usual gallop tempo. It was a marked improvement upon what has been the custom at this theatre. Especially fitting was the use of "Pomp and Circumstance," by Edward Elgar, and the "Adagio Pathetique," by Godard.

Frederick Grant sang "A Khaki Lad" and "Tell That to the Marines." Both songs were well received on account of themselves, and had the additional benefit derived from an excellent rendition. Mr. Grant is new to us, but we predict for him a bright future as an artistie soloist, for we have seldom heard a bass singer who was gifted with such excellent top tones.

While speaking of singers, the Strand sprang a surprise upon its audience by introducing Miss Jane Holden, a lady tenor, in her first appearance on any stage. If this be her first advent, it should not be her last. Although possessing a freak voice, it is so evenly balanced and carefully produced that it completely takes away the stigma usually attached to anything freakish. Her singing of "Celeste Aida" was remarkable. Her tones are as velvet, and her enunciation clearly distinct.

The music for "Romance of Tarzan" was all that could be expected in view of the fact that the large majority of the scenes were small, and the atmosphere continually changed. The organ, under the hands of Ralph Brigham, ably depieted the majority of it, while the orchestra was on hand to play all the hurries, agitatos and atmospherie dances.

As a whole, it reminded us favorably of the good old days at the Strand.

Franco-American Music Company Formed.

An interesting development in musical circles has just been brought about in the formation of a new publishing firm. The Franco-American Music Company has been formed for the purpose of exploiting "La Madelon," the big song hit of France. This song ranks in popularity with our "Over There," and is sure to become as well liked here as in France.

Mr. Bory Osso, of the Society of Authors and Composers of France, is the gentleman vitally interested in the song, and he has made arrangements with Maurice Richmond, of the Enterprise Amusement Company, to assist him in the distribution of this wonderful number. Togethor they should make a good team, and the Franco-American Music Company should rank with the best of our music publishers.

"Hail Columbia" Oldest Patriotic Song.

The Austrian National Hymn, eomposed by Hayden, is said to be the only instance of a deliberate composition of an air intended to be national, and which became so through popular acclaim.

We have a patriotic song popular enough to be national, and written with as great deliberation and studied care as Hayden's Anthem.

"Hail Columbia" was created to be sung from the stage, and had its first hearing at an actor's benefit in Philadelphia, then the seat of the Government, in April, 1798.

The actor concerned was Gilbert Fox. A few days previous to the performance, he was shocked to find the sale of seats so small. Taxing his brain for some method of bringing up the receipts where there would be a profit instead of a distinct loss, he came to the eonclusion that the conditions of the times were ripe for a new patriotic song. War was in the air. The tension between England and France was severe. There were two faetions in America—one siding with the French and the other with the English. Feeling ran high, and there was much bitterness.

Mr. Fox had as an acquaintance a brilliant young lawyer, Joseph Hopkinson. This gentleman was the son of Francis Hopkinson, author of "The Battle of the Kegs," and a lawyer of distinction in his native city of Philadelphia.

When the idea back of the desire for a patriotic song was conveyed to Mr. Hopkinson, he promptly set to work on the lyrics, using the tune of the "President's March." That was the origin of "Hail Columbia."

Mr. Fox announced that a new patriotie song would be heard at his benefit. On the night of the performance the house was packed. The song was an immense success. Every one in the house caught up the refrain, and joined in singing it.

People throughout the country everywhere realized that it favored neither the English nor the French, but was written in a spirit of broadminded patriotism, distinctively American. It did much to allay partisan excitement, and to prevent the United States from meddling in foreign affairs. Doubtless President Adam's appreciation of this fact was his reason for countenancing and even adding to its vogue by attending the theatre with his entire eabinet especially to hear the music:

The play chanced to be "The Italian Monk." A wag and critic, Louis Elson, remarked, in commenting upon the immense popularity of the song, that, having been first heard in connection with the "Italian Monk," it was but fitting that it continued its popularity by association with the Italian and his monkey.

The tune, "The President's March," first known as "President Washington's March," was very popular, and an inspired and diplomatic selection. This music has been attributed to various sources. Mr. Oscar Sonneck, head of the Library of Commerce, stated that the matter could not be settled with any degree of certainty. But the credit has been most persistently shifted to a German-American musician named Fayles, leader of the orchestra and composer for the old John Street Theatre in New York. There are a number of reasons for accepting Mr. Fayles as the composer of the "President's March," one of which is the written word of Mr. Custis. This gentleman was the adopted son of General Washington, and should know of what he spoke. He is authority for the statement that Mr. Fayles wrote the music, and goes on to say that the first time he heard it was on the occasion of General Washington's first visit to the John Street playhouse. It was heard for the first time in Trenton as General Washington passed through to New York for his inaugural eeremonies.

This, the oldest patriotie song of the United States, is but little heard today, but the lines are peculiarly applicable to the present conditions. And the spirit of the sontiment could well be appropriated by the present "Chief who now commands."

"The Public Be Pleased."

This should be the slogan of every orchestra man throughout the country today. From the audiences, indirectly, your bread and butter comes. Why not consider their taste instead of your own in the matter of music? You know their desires. They make you understand them through hearty applause when you have touched a responsive chord in their hearts. Cater to them while you are in the theatre. You can gratify your personal musical idiosyncarsies at your leisure, but do not attempt it in the orchestra pit. It is not fair to the paying public, nor to your own better self.

Leaders' Service Bureau.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q.—AS far as I have been able to discover, the opera "Norma" has not been sung in this country for a long time. Why is this?

A.—We understand that the opera you mention is to be sung this coming season. The suppression of German operas will of necessity bring to the front many very tuneful ones that have lost their place in the opera programs through no lack of merit. "Norma" is decidedly one of the number. The leading role calls for a range and compass which is impossible for the ordinary operatic singer of this time. Norma must be a large, stately woman, plus a remarkable range of voice. All these requirements are difficult to find embodied in any one person. But if it is well sung, this old opera will prove a great treat to the music loving public.

Q.—I have never been on the stage, but have sung in concerts and in picture houses in my own home town. I am very anxious to get into lyceum work. Can you give me the addresses of some of the Chautauquas where I can get a place on the programs?

A.—The Chautauqua meetings are usually held in the spring and summer, so we fear you are rather late to register for this season. We would suggest that you communicate with the Redpath Musical Bureau, Cable Building, Chicago, Ill., and they will be able to give you all necessary information about next season.

Q. I am a poor violinist who is trying to play for pictures in the best manner that I know of, but my "boss" keeps at me continually because I can never satisfy him. When I threaten to quit, he coaxes me to stay, and I don't know what to do. Will you please enlighten me on the course to pursue?

A. You have asked a most difficult question, for your data as to how you play your pictures is very meagre and your employer may have just cause to be dissatisfied. If you are properly fitting the pictures and playing them well besides, you are doing your duty and should be left alone. However, you have no means of securing non-interference until you ask for it. If you desire to retain your present situation and believe that your work is of a high standard, insist that you be given a free hand.

Q. Where can I get a position playing piano in a picture house?

A. Under the classified advertisements of the issue of October 19 of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD, an exhibitor advertised just such a position. Look it up.

Q. Who wrote the opera "Romeo and Juliet?"

A. Gounod wrote the opera and Tschaikowsky composed a symphony of the same name. These facts are sometimes confused and it would be well to get them correctly placed in your mind.

Q. Maybe you can tell me whether there is a score for "Cleopatra" and how I may obtain it?

A. George M. Rubinstein composed the musical score for this picture and made a very good work of it. Upon inquiry, we find that all the sets have been disposed of and none are available except from those exchanges which may have bought them. Try your exchange.

Q. I have read with a great deal of interest one of your recent articles in "Music for the Pictures," and I am informed that many others equally good appeared in earlier issues. How can I procure them?

A. The editorial articles to which you refer are not printed anywhere but in the columns of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD and you would need to order the back numbers in order to get them. If you will send us your subscription application we shall begin with the first number, February 9, in which they first appeared.

Q. Do you think it possible to arrange a mechanical device so that it could be attached to the operating machine in such a manner that it would synchronize the music?

A. Mr. Lawton, of the Moss and Brill theatres, has patented some such contrivance and from what we have read it seems perfectly feasible, but the trouble of attaching it, the bother of running it, and the large expense connected with the installation makes it prohibitive for the average exhibitor, and the larger theatres do not require it as they are able to obtain synchrony without it.

Q. Why is there no standard method of arranging cue-sheets and why cannot the WORLD standard be accepted?

A. The reason for lack of standardization lies in the fact that many individuals arrange them and their opinions differ regarding the needs of the orchestra leader or organist. We are pleased that you like our uniform standard and hope that some day all arrangers will see it as we do. In the meantime, write the producer and make known your preference in the matter. He will be pleased to hear from you and it is the only way to get any action.

HONOR ROLL

"A FRIVOLOUS PATROL"

By

G. GOUBLIER

Published by G. Schirmer, Inc.
New York

This is a brand new number just arranged for orchestra. It is different in construction and color. Here you find two movements, a Tempo di Marcia followed by a beautiful Lento. There is also an agitato of an interesting character, all of which makes the number most suitable to pictures.

The Baton Is the Brush of the Picture.

A new era has dawned in music. Serious minded musicians everywhere are awakening to the fact that from "music for the movies" formerly associated with artistic limitations, there have evolved "musical settings for the pictorial drama," a field of vast possibilities.

Before the development of this form of art, the musician was forced to draw largely upon his own emotional resources for effects. Today he finds the picture a well spring of inspiration. In musically interpreting its many phases, the baton, in the hands of the enthusiast, becomes the brush which lays on the glowing colors and delicate tints, transforming the blacks and greys into pulsing hues.

In selecting music for the pictorial drama, there is none too good—not excepting symphonic, operatic, or even chamber music, provided the subject of the music calls for it. Ethically, a good picture cannot fail to leave its impress on an intelligent audience and in the same degree good music increases artistic appreciation.

One of the most powerful factors in creating tone color is what is termed "flexible tempo." Wonderful effects may be obtained by suddenly converting an adagio, for instance, into a presto movement, disregarding for the moment the original dynamic signs in order to produce the exact shading desired. In "playing pictures" when some unusual effect is obtained through the magic of the "musical brush," the conductor experiences the same joy which thrills the painter when the pigments which he has placed upon the canvas reflect the work of that greatest artist—nature.—Ludwig Marum.

"Sammy Lad" a Real Song "Hit."

Huntzinger and Dilworth have recently issued a new song called "Sammy Lad" by Marguerite Test, which in every way lives up to the standards of a classic while at the same time it has sufficient of the popular melodiousness to please the average singer. It can be obtained as an orchestral number as well.

ROBERTSON-COLE IN DOMESTIC MARKET

Exporting Organization Opens Department for Handling Large Productions in United States

THE Robertson-Cole Company, the large film exporting organization, announces the opening of a domestic department for the buying and selling of high class productions in the United States. At the same time announcement is made that the Robertson-Cole Company has acquired for world release Martin Johnson's remarkable "Cannibals of the South Seas" and the forthcoming William Desmond pictures to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton.

"We particularly desire to make clear that the Robertson-Cole Company is not entering the motion picture industry on any 'flier,'" says one of the officials of the organization, "or as a competitor in any of the overcrowded branches of the business. We are opening the domestic department as an outgrowth of our extensive exporting business, not for the exploitation of any star, group of stars or series of offerings. We have no entangling alliances with any specific group in the industry. We are simply jobbers in the picture business, and we are looking for the best on the market."

The Robertson-Cole Company is an established concern in the exporting world, having branches in London, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay, Singapore and Rangoon. It was through its general commercial business that it first extended its interests to motion pictures, as its branch agents everywhere found a demand—rapidly growing—for American films. Upon entering the field of film exporting, the Robertson-Cole Company quickly found that the best film opportunities were open to concerns able to buy world rights. Thus the establishment of a domestic film department came about.

In acquiring Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" for world release, the Robertson-Cole Company captured an unusual film. For months Johnson and his plucky little wife drifted through the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands of the South Seas, filming the strange scenes. The picture was presented at the Rivoli Theatre, where it scored a success. Ever since the Rivoli showing, Mr. Johnson has been steadily going through the 50,000 feet of film photographed on the expedition and he has assembled a feature production of 8,000 feet, which will be released in two parts.

Eight Desmond Pictures a Year.

The forthcoming William Desmond pictures, eight of which are to be made by Jesse D. Hampton during the coming year, mark the latest step in the meteoric career of this popular star. Desmond's splendid virility and strength of characterization have brought him real popularity at Triangle.

While the Robertson-Cole Company has acquired the world rights to both Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" and the William Desmond pictures, the organization is at the same time controlling the world rights, except for the United States, of the J. Warren Kerrigan pictures.

"We are now in a position to buy independent productions for the United States and Canada, as well as for all foreign countries," explains the Robertson-Cole Company. "We have no new system of distribution to offer; we are not opening exchanges to complicate the already overcrowded field; we have no high-flown theories as to how pictures should be made or will be made in the dim and distant future. All we have in view is to watch the open market for the very best productions that can be bought. We will distribute them, first to the foreign field through our agencies abroad, and second to the United States and Canada through whatever distributing organizations can offer the most favorable terms.

"Nor do we propose to distribute all our pictures through one organization. We will make no contract of this sort. When we obtain all rights to a feature, we will offer it for open bidding. We do not believe that any one distributing organization is capable of handling every kind of production to the best advantage. On the other hand, so diversified is the demand which we have to meet, because of the wide interests represented by our foreign agents, that we have to keep in touch with every branch of production."

Several big productions are now being secured by the Robertson-Cole Company, the negotiations for which are just nearing completion. No limitation has been set as to the nature of the pictures which will be handled, except that they shall have an universal appeal.

Ontario Exhibitors Will Save a Half on Hard Coal

MEMBERS of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario, Limited, got down to a definite arrangement for the heating of their theatres during the coming winter at a conference with R. Home Smith, fuel controller for the Province of Ontario, which was held in the association's quarters at 143 Younge street, Toronto, on October 10.

The basis for the coal conservation plan was a resolution offered by A. Cohen, of the Globe and Rialto Theatres, Toronto, who is a former president of the association, through which the theatres of Ontario are to guarantee to save 50 per cent. of the consumption of hard coal during the coming season as compared with the amount of anthracite used last winter. If more than 50 per cent. of the season's supply has already been secured the surplus is to be at the disposal of the fuel controller. The temperature of all theatres is not to exceed sixty-eight degrees Fahrenheit. All exhibitors of the province, according to this resolution, were to be supplied with a questionnaire regarding their coal supply, consumption, etc. This motion was seconded by W. A. Bailie, manager of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Toronto, also a former president of the organization.

It was suggested by J. C. Brady, the president, who is the owner of the Madison Theatre, Toronto, that theatre fires be banked one hour earlier each night and that the heat maintained during the mornings and on Sundays be sufficient only to keep stand pipes and plumbing from freezing.

The statement was made at the meeting that 90 per cent. of the theatres in Toronto have apartments or stores in the building and these must be heated at all times. Practically all of the downtown theatres are heated with soft coal only, and there is a possibility that all theatres may be able to use bituminous coal exclusively. The hard coal used in many theatres is of a size that is not suitable for domestic use. A comparatively small number of exhibitors had been able to secure any great amount of hard coal for future use so far.

Sixfold Jump in "Stocks" Due to High Cost of Hauls

THE inability, or rather the difficulty, of theatrical companies to arrange tours because of difficulties in securing railroad baggage cars is resulting in the organization of many stock companies in the larger cities of the United States. At this season of the year in 1917 there were only thirty-four stock companies, while today there are in operation over two hundred. This tremendous increase has resulted in a large number of actors who have been appearing in pictures going with the "stocks" at salaries larger than they have been securing from the film companies.

Stock companies offer very alluring terms to the actors. Long seasons of forty to fifty weeks, economical living expenses and permanency of location are strong inducements to the thespians. World Pictures has in the last few weeks lost a number of their people. Only last week Clay Clement, last seen in support of Louise Huff in "The Sea Waif," left the company to go to Bridgeport to be leading man with the Poli stock company in that city.

"Manx-Man" Secures Two More.

Sales Director J. Kempner, of the Manx-Man Company, announces the appointment as "Manx-Man" special representatives of Samuel D. Pelzman and Gus Schlessinger. The latter was loaned for the work by President Paul H. Cromelin of Inter-Ocean Film, who control the foreign rights of "Manx-Man" and by reason of Mr. Schlessinger's familiarity with the picture, which he has sold to foreign buyers all over the world.

Samuel D. Pelzman is the youngest special representative in the Manx-Man Company's employ. While still in his 'teens he was attached to the feature department of Universal in important capacities. But Pelzman's most conspicuous work was performed in connection with "The Italian Battlefront Pictures," when he toured New York State and met the exhibitors in person. He will operate from the Goldwyn branch office, and is now in the Ohio territory with Mr. Schlessinger.

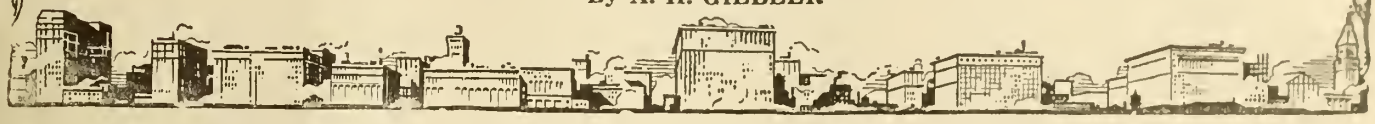
The production of "Velvet and Rags," which Harold J. Binney is personally directing, is progressing favorably. The recent fine weather has been taken advantage of by Mr. Binney, and he is enthusiastic over the results.

The story, which was written especially for Vangie Valentine by George Edwardes-Hall, is up to that author's best standard. The offering will be released in November through the William L. Sherry Service.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER



Metro Forces Arriving.

OF THE Metro players, directors, writers and other employes that are expected in Los Angeles this winter, Albert Capellani, director for Madame Nazimova, in company with June Mathis, head of the scenario department, and her mother, arrived on October 11, to be followed soon by Nazimova herself, and members of her company. Later other stars, including Viola Dana, and Hale Hamilton, will come, and when their engagements in stage productions have been filled, Ethel Barrymore, Emmy Wehlen and Emily Stevens also will come to Southern California, it was announced at the Metro plant.

Helen Keller at Victory Tank.

Helen Keller was the chief attraction at the tank Victory in Central Park on Brunton night. Miss Keller delivered an address in a quiet and well modulated voice that could be heard by most of the crowd that thronged the park that night. The remarkable fact that a deaf, blind and dumb girl could be taught to use her voice in the way she has done was wonderingly commented upon by the listeners, and a large number of bond buyers had the pleasure of being introduced to Miss Keller and of receiving a receipt and photograph signed by her. Brunton night was one of the big nights of the week at the tank, and Miss Keller had to compete with such stars as Kitty Gordon, Bessie Barriscale, Dustin Farnum and Lillian Walker in her capacity of bond seller.

Cinema Camera Club Aids Loan.

The Cinema Camera Club of Los Angeles has done active service in the Fourth Liberty Loan drive just closed. All the ingenious stunts pulled off at the tank Victory in Central Park, from Dedication Day to the closing night—which occurred on October 11, by order of the Board of Health on account of the precautionary measure adopted to prevent the spread of Spanish influenza—and in which many of the studios of the West Coast took part, were filmed and distributed by the committee detailed by the Cinema Club.

Pictures were taken of the players from each studio as they were lined up on top of the tank and introduced to the bond buyers before they took their places in the small booths that dotted the park. Several times during the drive a line of bond buyers from each state in the Union, each person holding a card representing his native state, were lined up on top of the tank and photographed, and these films were shown a few days later at the down town theatres.

Charles Rosher was chairman of the tank committee, and Edward Littell was in charge of all arrangements.

Norma Talmadge in Los Angeles.

Norma Talmadge, who arrived in Los Angeles with her manager, Joseph Schenck, last week, has already begun the filming of "The Heart of Wetona" at the Lasky studio. Thomas Meighan, who preceded Miss Talmadge by a few days, is playing opposite, and S. A. Franklyn is in charge of the production. Constance Talmadge and her mother will entertain Norma and her husband at the new Talmadge home on New Hampshire avenue during their stay on the West Coast.

Storm Machine Invented.

Harry Brown, chief of the electrical department at Universal City, has invented a storm creator, which is composed of a reconstructed auto chassis, a Haines engine and an areoplane propeller. This device furnishes enough power to suspend a man in mid-air. Outfitted with hoppers for confetti, for snow, or smokepots, it will be able to provide any kind of storm a director requires. The machine is said to be the only one of its kind in existence, though contrivances to sweep wind and rain through scenes have been in use for some time. The cost of the machine was about $600, and two Universal City electricians who helped Brown with his invention were Dave Reynolds and C. P. Chamberlain.

Lois Weber's Sister a Bride.

Ethel Weber, sister of Lois Weber, the noted woman producer, stole a march on her friends and relatives when she accompanied Louis Howland to Riverside, Cal., on Sept. 28 and was married to him in that city. The pair went to Del Mar for a short honeymoon, and no one knew of the wedding until they returned to Hollywood, where they set up housekeeping in a bungalow in St. Francis Court. Mr. Howland is connected with the Lasky corporation.

Joe Ryan Married.

Joseph Ryan, "heavy" in the William Duncan Vitagraph serials, was married last week to Miss Helene Marjorie Ingersoll, also of Vitagraph. The couple autoed to Merced, where the ceremony was performed, they they proceeded on a trip through the Yosemite Valley.

Kinema's New Orchestra.

The new twenty-five piece orchestra which the management of the Kinema Theatre announced some time ago was formally introduced to Kinema patrons on October 7, to accompany the showing of the Goldwyn-Rex Beach picture, "Laughing Bill Hyde." The new band, under the direction of Herb Weidoft, took up a good share of the program on its first day by playing special selections, solos and ensembles, to the enthusiastic audience. The installation of this orchestra makes the Kinema rank with the highest class of the motion picture amusement houses of the country.

Scenario Editor Retires.

Daniel Carson Goodman, head of the editorial department at Triangle, has turned in his resignation, and will hereafter devote his entire time and efforts to finishing "The Sleeper," a new novel upon which he has been working for some time. Mr. Goodman has taken a house in Hollywood, where he will reside during the winter and where he will have quiet for his literary labors.

Nina Wilcox Putnam has taken Mr. Goodman's place as a scenario chief.

Fairbanks Repeats Loan Tour.

Douglas Fairbanks left Los Angeles last Tuesday in response to a request from Secretary McAdoo to repeat his last season's Liberty Loan tour. Doug went by way of Chicago, speaking from the rear platform of the train at many stations, thence on to Washington. After a conference with the officials he will return through the Middle West.

Franklyn Farnum in Court.

Franklyn Farnum is defendant in a damage suit in the Los Angeles courts as the result of a collision between his car and one owned by B. Collino and his wife on August 16, 1917. Collino demands $3,691.50 for personal injuries and damages to his car, and Mrs. Collino $5,000 for injuries. Farnum, in a cross complaint, asks for $529 for damages to his car.

Entertainment Postponed.

Jack Gilbert has been given time to appear in another picture before he reports for duty at a California training camp. Spanish flu caused the authorities to postpone the date one month on his order to report.

Traverse Picture Cast.

Thomas Holding has been selected to play the leading male role opposite Madaline Traverse in her new picture now being made at the Fox plant in Hollywood. Edward Cecil and Fritzi Ridgway both have good parts.

Motorboat Race.

At 7 a. m. on November 10 Dustin Farnum and Frank Garbutt will stage a motorboat race around Catalina Island. Farnum will use his boat Over the Top and Garbutt will have Mystery IX.

Studio Shorts

WILLIAM B. PARSONS, Capitol Comedy star and president of the National Film Corporation, left Los Angeles on October 12 for New York to look after his studio manager, Isadore Bernstein, who sent an S. O. S. call when he became ill of Spanish "flu." Parsons will also attend to the launching of the Billie Rhodes production, "The Girl of My Dreams."

Constance Talmadge is another of the picture stars who has leased a home in Los Angeles. The house is located at 7th and New Hampshire avenue, and Mrs. Margaret L. Talmadge, the star's mother, will live with her.

Philip N. Rosen, the cameraman who filmed the Theda Bara productions of "Romeo and Juliet," "Under Two Flags" and "The Darling of Paris," and who was more recently manager of the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, has come to Los Angeles.

Howard Gaye, well known actor and director in the Los Angeles film colony, is now in training at Vancouver, B. C.

Juilan Eltinge, upon completion of his new production, "Over the Rhine," early in October, took the stump in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan, visiting a number of the larger cities in Southern California in his campaign.

Roy Stewart has been engaged to make pictures for the Pathe program in the near future.

Willard Louis has lost 25 of his 240 pounds within the past few weeks, and attributes this reduction to jumping about so lively from heavy to comic role and back again.

Al and Charles Christie have taken a house on Sunset Boulevard not far from the Christie Studio.

Vera Lewis is playing in a picture being made at the National studios.

Mark Larkin, Mary Pickford's publicity manager, has returned from a trip to San Francisco.

Mrs. William C. DeMille, who has been visiting friends and relatives in the East for the past two months, returned to her home in Los Angeles last week.

Crane Wilbur was at the Alexandria Hotel last week looking for a leading woman, a director and an ingenue.

Roscoe Arbuckle is filming his next comedy for Paramount at Catalina Island.

Thomas H. Ince made a business trip to San Francisco recently.

Ray Allison, former Triangle cameraman, has joined the camera squad at Universal City.

Thomas Meighan had to be taken to a hospital upon his arrival in Los Angeles a few days ago on account of a slight siege of Spanish "flu," which he contracted during his across-the-continent trip.

AMONG the heroes who have done "their bit" on the battlefields of France and on account of wounds have returned to this side is Sergeant Douglas Aylen of the "Princess Pats"

Sergeant Douglas Aylen.

(Princess Patricia's Canadian Light Infantry).

Sergeant Aylen is at the present time traveling through the United States and Canada delivering a lecture entitled "The Sunshine of the Trenches," which is illustrated by means of 2,200 feet of authentic battle film and 131 stereopticon views. As the title indicates, unlike the majority of lectures and books on the great war, Sergeant Aylen's offering does not deal with the horrors and serious side of the struggle in Europe, but rather with the lighter sides. He relates many bright and amusing happenings of trench life, which serves to keep his audiences in good humor.

This energetic member of the "Princess Pats" is also arranging for the production of a feature motion picture along the same lines which is titled "The Little Cannuck," the scenario being the work of Frederick H. James and Seymour Ansley, and which is expected to be ready for release in the near future.

When the original "Princess Pat" regiment was nearly wiped out at the battle of Ypres, a replacement division was formed consisting almost entirely of university students from the prominent seats of learning of Canada and this country, their cap insignia being an open book signifying that they were students. This was in 1915, and among this number was Sergeant Aylen, then aged eighteen and a student of McGill University in Canada. Of this number, approximately 1,600 men, there are now only about 175 survivors, most of whom have been honorably discharged by the British and Canadian governments on account of wounds received in service. Sergeant Aylen himself is among the latter, having, while on the battlefields of Belgium, received shrapnel wounds in the right eye, mouth and left shoulder. He has been fortunate, however, as the use of his arm was restored by electrical massage, and while he lost the sight of his eye the muscular control was not affected and his appearance is not disfigured.

JOHN BOWERS WITH GOLDWYN.

The apearance of a new leading man in Goldwyn Pictures is made known with the announcement of the engagement of John Bowers to support Madge Kennedy in "Primrose," written for her by Cosmo Hamilton. Mr. Bowers has been placed under contract and will be seen frequently opposite the Goldwyn stars.

Flossie A. Jones Dies Alone Among Strangers

ONE of the innumerable results of the epidemic of Spanish influenza among members of the moving picture fraternity was the death of Flossie A. Jones, an exhibitor of Waukesha, Wis., under particularly sad and distressing circumstances.

Miss Jones made her first trip to New York as a visitor to the N. A. M. P. I. Exposition at Madison Square Garden. There she caught cold and took to her bed at the Hotel Webster. Influenza developed and as a climax pneumonia set in. On Wednesday night, October 16, Miss Jones died among strangers, her only comforters being the trained nurses in attendance at her deathbed.

Shortly before she started East Miss Jones was elected vice president and state organizer of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Wisconsin and was planning to apply her great energy to the task of building up the state organization as soon as she should have returned to Waukesha. Miss Jones started in the picture business in her home town, developing her holdings from a dilapidated old house into three up-to-date picture theatres that had become famously prosperous under her management.

CLARA SWEARS WHEN NECESSARY

Clara Kimball Young succeeded in shocking some real "dough" out of the pockets of the Los Angeles people in Central Park in that city during the recent Bond drive. Clara swore Yes, sir, she swore right out loud in meeting, so that everybody could hear her!

This is what she said:

"In a few minutes Ambassador Gerard is going to tell you some of the things that happened in Berlin, and that he told us in New York.

"If it doesn't make your flesh creep, and if after he gets through you don't buy bonds,—well,—I'll be damned if I don't come down and choke the money out of you!"

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

ANOTHER big week in Filmland. A week that stretched the caoutchouc in inquisitve necks to the utmost notch. Another week of pictures mingled with patriotism and digging up dollars for democracy. A week that began on the night that Al Christie marched his Liberty Blondes into Central Park—and ended on the day that Senor I. N. Fluenza, accompanied by his two germy daughters, Sneezie and Hankie, descended on our fair city from the East, stopped the meetings in Central Park and closed every theatre in town as tight as the well known drum.

Twenty-five girls with golden hair, 22 karat, 14 carat, and a few just plain carrot, but not a bottle blonde among them.

As the bevy was brought into the park the hirsute effulgence irradiating from their gilded heads lit up the scene like a torchlight parade. The beauteous creatures were taken up on top of the tank, introduced to the great throng, after which they took their places in bunches of twos and threes in the booths placed here and there in the park—and the bond sale that broke all previous records was on!

Whole Christie Crew on Deck.

The Liberty Blondes were not the only attraction on Christie night, however. Doraldina, the dancer, was there; the girl stars from the William S. Hart studios; Francis Ford and his company, and, of course, the whole Christie crew, including Ethel Lynn, Eleanor Field, George French—and to top it all off, Bobby Vernon, who had left the Navy to take care of itself, came in from San Pedro Submarine Base looking nice and nifty in his sailor uniform.

Saturday afternoon Sessue Hayakawa, his talented wife, Tsuru Aoki, and other members of the Haworth company, had charge of the tank, which was decorated after the Oriental manner and charmingly ornamented by a row of little Japanese kiddies in national costume, who sat perched on the ridge of the tank looking down in solemn gravity on the scene below.

The crowd did not turn out as well on Saturday afternoons as they did at night, but the devoted little band labored mightily to sell bonds, and they sold them, too, sold them in bunches.

That night Famous Players-Lasky took charge. With their large force they were able to fill all the booths with stars, and rolled up a total of more than a hundred thousand dollars.

Ann Little, Lila Lee, Raymond Hatton, Wallace Reid, Vivian Martin, Constance Talmadge, Billy Elmer, Jack Mulhall, Theodore Roberts, Niles Welch—all sold bonds in the booths and helped to entertain the crowd.

McGaffey and Shirk Put On Bells.

Cecil B. De Mille made a stirring speech, and, of course, K. McGaffey and Adam Hull Shirk, the efficient Publicity Department, were there with bells on.

Sunday night was dark in Central Park, but it was not dark out in the tank town circuit, and Mary Miles Minter on Tank Liberty sold over forty thousand dollars worth of bonds down in the neighborhood of Chino Cordova and Riverside, with Roy Stewart and Josie Sedgwick on Tank Democracy running them a neck-and-neck race at Monrovia and thereabouts.

Monday night brought the Brunton studio forces to the tank in Central Park, and Dustin Farnum, Helen Keller, Kitty Gordon, Bessie Barriscale, Howard Hickman, Lillian Walker, Little Gloria Joy, Robert Brunton himself and others of the studio rolled up the biggest total of the entire drive.

Dustin William Aids Bondselling.

Dusty got right out in the crowd and hustled. He was here, there and everywhere. At ten o'clock I saw him in a booth holding a baby aloft.

"Look here," he said to the crowd. "Look at Dustin William Carter, named after me and my brother Bill. He's only one year old, and he's bought a bond."

And the crowd yelled their delight and came up and bought bonds for their babies.

Again at midnight, while on my way to the telegraph office I stopped long enough to see Dusty helping to direct a crowd of people who had bought bonds while they were having their moving pictures taken. I stopped so long that time that I missed the owl car and had to walk home.

Helen Keller Addresses Throng.

Helen Keller, however, was the chief attraction at the tank on Monday night. Miss Keller had sent appeals to many people throughout the country to buy bonds through her, and the answers to her letters and telegrams were read to the crowd. A telegram from Secretary McAdoo, another from Adolph Lewisohn, besides a numbers of others, were read. Thirty-five thousand dollars were added to the war chests through her efforts.

Miss Keller addressed the crowd in a touching and logical appeal for help in winning the world's freedom by buying bonds. It was a most inspiring sight to see this woman talking in words she could not hear to a multitude she could not see—a splendid commentary on the brain of the woman herself and a tribute to her teachers who helped her overcome her handicaps.

Her words were not clearly understandable to those at a distance from the tank, but they were taken down and repeated through a megaphone for the benefit of those who could not hear.

I saw a man, evidently a deaf mute, reading the words as they fell from the speaker's lips, and translating them in the finger language of the deaf to his woman companion. Sweet are the uses of adversity—at times.

Tuesday I went a-rubbering in Studio Land. At Brunton I saw a fine big set representing a French chateau, and nearby a number of vine-covered cottages, to be used by Kitty Gordon in her new play, "A Nurse's Story." All very fine and very realistic, but not a player in sight, but over on the stages the company was working on interiors, and Kitty Gordon herself being directed in a scene by Wallace Worsley.

Mahlo Hamilton, Wedgwood Nowell, J. J. Dowling, T. D. Crittenden, Capt. Leslie T. Peacocke and Vera Beresford were also in the cast, but they were marking time until Miss Gordon's scene should be finished.

I met Al Cohn, who used to be Mary Pickford's personal representative, and is now working with Jimmie Young, who is getting ready to put on a smashing big twelve-reel production. Al said things would start going in about two weeks.

That night at the tank Mack Sennett and his funmakers held the fort and entertained the crowd with some of the best free comedy it had ever seen.

Murray Shoots Turpin Abaft the Turret.

Charlie Murray was the announcer, and he started off by introducing Ben Turpin as the greatest cock-eyed comedian in the world, and then to show what a soldier does with guns bought by bonds he shot Ben just abaft of the turret—on the tank—and Ben did one of his best comedy falls.

Louise Fazenda, "the kitchen lady," made a few well-chosen remarks that were received with great delight by the crowd. Myrtle Lind, Phillis Haver, Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin, without his walrus mustache, also spoke, and Mack Sennett made quite a lengthy and telling speech, and everybody, including Sennett's dog Teddy, hustled for bond sales and put them over in great shape.

Wednesday, I went out and watched Sherwood MacDonald, of the Mission Productions, working on a film with the pleasing title of "Send Him Away with a Smile." Little Gloria Joy has the leading part and Charles Spere the role of her brother, who goes away to war "with a smile."

Eugenie Ford was the child's mother, Doris Lee the ingenue, and Frank Whitson, who villainized in the new Broncho Billy films, was there as the heavy.

MacDonald is one of the most patient of directors. He worked for a full hour to get a little fuzzy white dog to go to a window at the proper time and in the right way.

Gloria Poses for Rubberneck Man.

And little Gloria Joy, the kid, is a delight, and she posed for a little picture for the "rubberneck" man just as nice as you please.

Julian Eltinge and his leading lady, Alma Francis, helped the bond sale at the tank, and greeted one of the biggest crowds of the week on Wednesday night.

Contrary to the hopes of many people in the crowd, Mr. Eltinge appeared in a striking costume consisting of a gray cloth coat, form-fitted with skirts reaching just below the pistol pockets, and a pair of pants and a waistcoat—referred to as "vest" in Mo.—of the same material.

Purchasers of bonds that night got to appear in moving pictures with Mr. Eltinge. They were lined up twenty-five and thirty in a bunch, marched past the star and shot with the movie camera as they shook hands with him.

Thursday, up and betimes, as the late Sam'l Pepys was wont to say in describing his peregrinations, and out to the Haworth studios, where William Worthington was directing Sessue Hayakawa, in the role of a district attorney, in a dramatic courtroom scene.

Hernandez Has Important Role.

Talk about atmosphere; there is no little, or no big thing, in that courtroom, the etiquette thereof, or any of the legal procedure that the most captious critic could find fault with. Ogden Crane was the judge, and George Hernandez had an important part, but I got him mixed up with a reporter and the prisoner at the bar, so I am not going to say which he was, but George was as good as usual in the role.

Met Cliff Smith, who told me about killing a deer, and Ike St. John, who is going to join the army and kill some Huns.

Dropped out of this place into a Bessie Barriscale set, which, to again quote the late Sam'l, is "hard by." Saw Bessie all diked out in a cowboy costume making laughable stuff for her new play, "Two-Gun Betty," with friend husband, Howard Hickman, directing and getting as many laughs at Bessie's action in her chaps and spurs as the rest of us who stood by and watched.

That night the Pathe crowd was at the tank. Fannie Ward, Ruth Roland, Bebe Daniels, Harold Lloyd, George Larkin, Baby Marie Osborne, Franklyn Farnum, and all of the several Pathe companies. Fannie Ward made a very fine talk, and carried with her in all of her points and periods. Bebe Daniels came in for a lot of attention, and the whole affair was one of the most successful nights of the week, with a fine fat total of bond sales.

Gloria Joy
Posing for the Rubberneck Man.

Friday night was to have been Ince night, and the entire studio was on tiptoe with expectation, when late in the afternoon came the proclamation from the health department forbidding all public meetings and gatherings because of Spanish "flu."

FOX PICTURES FOR FIGHTING MEN.

Seven William Fox Productions have been selected by the War and Navy departments' commissions on training camp activities, to be shown to soldiers and sailors in training. These pictures are listed in the latest war service bulletins issued by the commission from its offices in 130 West Twenty-second street, New York, and were chosen from the lists of the National Board of Review.

In Bulletin No. 14, the William Fox pictures recommended to be shown in training camps are "Fame and Fortune" and "Mr. Logan, U. S. A.," each starring Tom Mix; "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's great drama of Hun activities in this country; "Queen of the Sea," the submarine phantasy produced by Annette Kellerman, and "Riders of the Purple Sage," William Farnum's picturization of Zane Grey's famous novel.

Bulletin No. 15 lists two Mutt and Jeff animated Cartoons, "Accident Attorneys" and "At the Front."

Educational's Players Go South.

On the final lap of their picture-taking expeditions the Educational's "Romance of Coal" players returned on October 5 to the West Virginia mining fields, where the picture was begun in July last. The objective is the former location at Omar, near Logan, West Virginia, after a week at which they will make the final "takes" of the picture mid mountain and river scenes near Charleston, the capital of the state. In the cast are Hugh Thompson, J. H. Gilmour, Stephen Grattan, Tom Burrough, Stephen Carr, Henri Rolf Otte, J. J. Dunn and L. F. Kennedy.

Army Designates S. B. Lust to Teach Maimed Soldiers

SIDNEY B. LUST, of the Super Films Attractions, Inc., of Washington, has been designated by the Surgeon General of the Army to open schools of instruction in motion picture operating, inspecting, rewinding, etc., at each of the Army hospitals where the work of rehabilitation is being carried on. For some weeks past Mr. Lust has been working on a program with War Department officials. Since the announcement of the proposed plans first appeared in these columns a number of offers have come to the Government from exhibitors everywhere to take crippled soldiers and give them employment as operators, etc.

Mr. Lust has volunteered his services for part time to arrange for the installation of necessary equipment and instruction in motion picture machine operation in Walter Reed General Hospital, General Hospital No. 2, at Fort McHenry, Baltimore, Md., and in other hospitals at a later date, to extend the work.

There is no appropriation, however, upon which the Surgeon General's office can draw for funds to carry on this work, and to this end Mr. Lust has invited the projection machine manufacturers to donate machines for the purpose for the duration of the war.

Instruction in these hospitals is under the immediate charge of a chief educational officer, and the status of Mr. Lust, according to a letter addressed to him by the War Department, will be that of adviser to these officers relative to whatever pertains to the instruction of motion picture operating. The War Department has expressed its appreciation to Mr. Lust for what he is doing, and has asked him further to furnish the names of expert operators in Class 1A for limited service who may be inducted into the army as instructors.

"Hearts of the World" Doubles Up.

So great has been the success of D. W. Griffith's American propaganda play, "Hearts of the World," now at the Knickerbocker Theatre, New York City, that the producer is compelled to seek another playhouse to accommodate the demand for seats. Consequently on Monday, October 21, "Hearts of the World" will begin a special engagement at the Standard Theatre, Broadway and Ninetieth street, where the uptown playgoers will have an opportunity to see the production over which Mr. Griffith spent eighteen months in the making. The fact that "Hearts of the World" is already in its eighth month in New York adds to the interest in the acquiring of a second theatre to take care of the vast audiences that have been attracted by it.

Test War Cameras at Vitagraph Studio.

The Vitagraph studio in Brooklyn is being used as a testing ground for the new battle-line motion picture cameras which the Government is using in war work. Lieutenant Nelson F. Evans, a Los Angeles photographer, is inspector of cameras and photographic supplies at the port of New York. Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, has placed at the lieutenant's disposal all the facilities of the Brooklyn plant for use in his work.

Epidemic of Influenza Darkens Chicago Houses

PENDING the abatement of Chicago's epidemic of Spanish influenza every theatre in the city closed its doors Tuesday afternoon, October 15, by order of City Health Commissioner John Dill Robertson. The action was taken at the instance of the special emergency commission created to direct defensive measures against the spread of the disease after prolonged deliberation. Peter J. Schaefer of Jones, Linick and Schaefer, participated in the interests of the theatres.

The result is a condition which reminds older theatrical men of the weeks that followed the Iroquois Theatre fire. Many exhibitors are facing serious financial losses which may amount to bankruptcy. A very few welcomed the closing order as the best possible solution to the losing business to which they were playing previously on account of the disease. In almost all cases theatre employes and professionals are suffering severely.

A disposition to accept the commission's measure cheerfully is evident on the part of the greater number, however, and many are taking advantage of their leisure to work, might and main, for the Liberty Loan. Bond posters and loan propaganda have replaced announcements of attractions in front of nearly every theatre, and a number are using their electric signs to flash Liberty Loan appeals. Fully half of the exhibitors, moreover, are continuing their accustomed advertising space in the newspapers with pleas for the purchase of bonds.

The decision of the commission to permit the holding of church services, however, has caused a certain amount of discontent in view of the fact that the average theater nowadays is far better equipped than the average church with hygienic devices. Motion pictures, furthermore, it is felt, have played a not inconsiderable part in the maintenance of war time morale and in the furtherance of Government propaganda.

"The committee scarcely realizes, I think, the far-reaching effects of the step it has taken with regard to the theaters," Mr. Schaefer says. "It means much to the motion picture industry and theatrical business, and, furthermore, it means a serious diminution in Chicago's total purchase of Liberty Bonds, since the theatres were the most effective agents in bond selling. The commission is disposed to reopen at the earliest possible moment in accordance with its view of the case, however, and we can only hope that the epidemic will be sufficiently lessened in a short time to justify speedy action."

Film exchanges are making a valiant attempt to retain their staffs, though for the most part at reduced salaries. Pathe and the George Kleine service alone so far have announced an intention of paying full salaries to their employees. A letter from the New York office received Wednesday by F. R. Rogers, of Pathe, carries instruction that salaries are to be maintained at 100 per cent., no matter how long the epidemic continues. With Indiana, Illinois, Michigan and Iowa theatres closed, activity at most of the exchanges is at a minimum.

The Orpheum and Castle theatres, among others, are putting in the time with redecorating and repairs. Ventilating systems also are being overhauled in anticipation of a speedy remanding of the closing order, and Chicago theatres are likely to be safer than some Chicago homes hereafter as a consequence.

Dr. Robertson is unwilling as yet to set any date for a possible reopening. Such action, he says, depends entirely on the progress of the disease. It is hoped, however, that the order may come within a week.

Chicago Film Division Oversubscribes Quota

CHICAGO film men oversubscribed their quota for the Fourth Liberty Loan by approximately $50,000 Thursday afternoon, with two days remaining before the end of the drive in which to solicit. Under the leadership of J. L. Friedman, of Celebrated Players, chairman of the Division of Films of the Chicago Liberty Loan Committee, they reached their quota Wednesday at 4 p. m., and the subscription of $50,000 sent in by George Kleine and his employes Thursday morning brought the total to $1,250,000.

Mr. Kleine's subscription was the largest received from any exchange or exhibitor. Watterson R. Rothacker and the employes of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company bought $10,300 worth of bonds, and several exchanges approached that amount. The American Film Company and its employees subscribed $4,500 to the loan.

Mr. Friedman and his assistants are confident the final day of the drive will see a $2,000,000 subscription to the credit of the trade in Chicago.

Government to Distribute "Relatives and Sweethearts"

ARRANGEMENTS are complete for the Chicago Herald-Examiner's "Relatives and Sweethearts" film, which is to carry glimpses of the folks at home to Chicago boys in France. Mothers and sweethearts according to previous instruction gathered by groups in Grant Park, Saturday, Sunday and Monday afternoons under the direction of Rex Weber, where camera men from the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company took the films. In accordance with a telegram received Wednesday, the Committee on Public Information, Division of Films, will undertake the distribution of the film in France. The picture is to be made free of charge to everybody who participates, and following its final showing in France it will be cut and the portions showing the relatives of each regiment will be left with their proper regiments.

Donnellan of Minneapolis Goes to Chicago for Mutual

DAN DONNELLAN, for the past year branch manager for Mutual at Minneapolis, has been appointed manager of Mutual's Chicago branch, succeeding the late E. H. Duffy. Mr. Donnellan, generally accounted one of the best posted and most successful exchange men in the film industry, has had a unique and varied career. His ability, initiative and personality have brought him to the front rapidly—his experience in the motion picture business covers a period of less than four years.

He has been a salesman out of the Seattle branch of V. L. S. E., has edited V. L. S. E. "Pals," was with the Seattle Triangle Exchange, and in Denver put across the "Seven Deadly Sins" for McClure. About a year ago Donnellan decided Mutual and Minneapolis looked like a winning combination.

L. B. Brown, former branch manager for Mutual at Cairo, Ill., and prior to that assistant manager at St. Louis, has been appointed branch manager for Mutual at Kansas City, succeeding I. F. Mantzke. Mr. Mantzke has been appointed branch manager at Minneapolis, succeeding Mr. Donnellan.

Mark Pickford Goes West Again.

Mary Pickford spent three days at the Blackstone Hotel here a week ago. She was on her way to New York in the interests of the Liberty Loan and an important contract which she has been making up her mind to sign for some time. A slight illness on her own part and the arrival of her mother on the way to California to see Lottie, who is said to be seriously ill, changed the star's plans. She left for Los Angeles Wednesday night with her mother.

Nehls Visits Santa Barbara Studios.

R. R. Nehls, general manager for the American Film Company left for American's Santa Barbara studios in California October 17. Exigencies arising from the difficulty of obtaining "extras" at the Santa Barbara studios following the government restriction of such hiring to government employment bureaus, of which there are none south of Los Angeles, made the trip necessary. It is expected interesting changes in American's executive and production policies will be made as a result of Mr. Nehls' trip.

Chicago Briefs of the Week.

The only theatre in Chicago to remain open under the eye of the city health commissioner last week was the "Democracy," owned by Balaban & Katz. They built it after all their other houses were closed for use in the Liberty Loan drive. It makes the tour of the loop every day by truck and from its miniature stage Harry Fox, Walker Whiteside and other stars of current productions make their loan appeals. The theatre has been the means of selling thousands of dollars' worth of bonds since its erection Tuesday.

Metro's Screen Classics and program departments have grown respectively to such dimensions that each is to have a manager of its own. M. C. Hughes, formerly of Montreal and Boston, will head the program department in Chicago. C. E. Smith of the Chicago exchange will have supervision of the Screen Classics.

Universal executives and film men in the Chicago offices took advantage of their forced vacation to go fishing. A party of eighteen left the home of I. L. Leserman, general sales manager, October 17, for Fox Lake. Among them were Mr. Leserman, S. J. Goldman, Morris Hellman and Irving Mack.

Al Tuchman, head of Universal's sale and purchasing department, stopped in Chicago last week with an eye to installing new efficiency measures if such should be needed. He is making a tour of Universal exchanges for that purpose as a result of the Government's plea for conservation in production and distribution materials.

The lobby of the Pastime theatre, 66 West Madison street, has been open all the final week for Liberty Loan meetings. Manager E. J. Barrett reported $37,000 in bonds sold Wednesday, Thursday and Friday in the Pastime lobby with $18,000 for Friday's sales alone. Four Minute men and songsters from the music publishing houses supplied the patriotic inspiration. Mrs. A. P. Cavanaro was in charge of the booth. A special concession from the Fuel Administration permitted illumination night and day for the purpose.

William S. Hart arrived here Saturday morning to help in Chicago's final drive for its loan quota. He spoke at Mandel Brothers' department store and at the Hamilton club in the afternoon and at several evening mass meetings.

Mrs. Schley To Be Official Reviewer.

The opportunity to accomplish a service for Uncle Sam has caused Mrs. Edna Rowell Schley, who has been connected with the Universal as chief of its reading department, to accept a call from Washington.

Mrs. Schley will act as a member of a board of cinemas review, with the object of eliminating any matter likely to offend allies of the United States and anything that is considered less than 100 per cent. American, derogatory to the Government's interests or inspired by pro-enemy propagandists.

The case of "The Spirit of '76" is the reason for the Government's establishing the cinema board, it is said.

Mrs. Schley is at Coronado taking a much needed vacation. It is understood that Los Angeles will be the headquarters of the board.

The Making of a Sailor Shown in Illuminating Film

THE families and friends of sailor boys in Greater New York assembled at the Fulton Theatre, on invitation of Lieutenant Wells Hawks, U. S. N., on Sunday evening, October 20, to witness the presentation of a six-reel subject, entitled "The Making of a Sailor," produced by the photographic division of the Bureau of Navigation, under the direction of Lieutenant Hawks. The feature lived square up to its title and visualized the training and environment of Uncle Sam's sailor from the time he "signs up" until he becomes a full-fledged and active unit in victory's marine forces.

Every detail is pictured with impressive reality. The scenes embody all of the drilling and schooling of the recruit, together with sidelights upon preparations that have been made for his welfare—even to showing how the money he "signs off" for his relatives is provided for in regular transmission to the sailor's loved ones.

Life in training school is followed by pictured details of the sailor's life on shipboard. There are drills and exercises, games and lessons; the routine of work and play being fully demonstrated by fledglings and graduate sailor boys in interesting detail. Lieutenant Hawks has taken his staff of photographers to many locations in Washington, Newport, and on the high seas, and the result has been entirely creditable to the photographic division in demonstrating that they "know the ropes" of picture production as well as they do those of the ships they sail.

Numerous singing and dancing specialties were provided incidental to the film showing. These specialists were all drawn from the navy; some from ships and others from Pelham Bay, the Navy Yard and Ellis Island. The music for the occasion was furnished by the Recruit Band from the Union Square "battleship"—and a dandy time "was had by all."

Universal Makes Fuel Picture.

Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal, announces the successful completion of the four reels made for the Fuel Administration Department of the Government. The films are now in Dr. Garfield's hands, and will shortly be shown under official auspices throughout the nation.

They are intended materially to assist in the conservation of coal by showing the public the cost of careless firing. So entertainingly is the visual appeal presented as to be without ostensible preachment.

Among the startling facts brought out are that industrial plants alone have been wasting fifty million tons of coal by careless methods. The picture shows how boiler-room efficiency in a few model plants has been carried to a high point by the aid of science and mechanics. The problems of the householder are dealt with in a most helpful and instructive manner. Many new solutions to vexed questions are offered.

Bans "Uncle Tom's Cabin," Fearing Race Disturbance

MANAGER CARSON BRADFORD of the Strand Theatre, Nashville, received an altogether unexpected disappointment just prior to the closing of the local motion picture houses to curb the influenza epidemic when Mayor William Gupton came forward with the announcement that "Uncle Tom's Cabin" should not be exhibited there owing to the danger of inciting race trouble. Despite all protests, the mayor demanded that the picture be stopped, and this was done after it had been shown one full day to large and appreciative houses, which seemed to find no fault with the picture. In explanation of his decision, the mayor said that he did not consider it wise to allow the showing of any play that would tend to intimidate the colored people. After viewing "Uncle Tom's Cabin," he said, he was convinced that the production would have such an effect.

Nashville exhibitors have never received what they considered full justice from the mayor and the other ultra-conservatists who dominate things in that city. Their opposition to Sunday pictures, which were proved by vote to be desired by nine-tenths of the theatre-going public, elicited much criticism. The pot is beginning to simmer again, however, and the passing of a few weeks may see a resumption of the fight.

Walter Hiers Engaged by Ince.

Walter Hiers, an actor of character roles and light comedy, has been engaged by Thomas H. Ince for Paramount pictures. He will make his first appearance with Dorothy Dalton in a picture to be released about holiday time. Mr. Hiers appeared in "The Mysterious Miss Terry" and also with Jack Pickford in "Seventeen."

Hiers was born in 1893, and received his education at Savannah and in Peekskill Military Academy. His stage experience has been confined to vaudeville, but he has had a rather lengthy career in pictures. Inasmuch as he is in the heavyweight class he has done many humorous parts on the "fat boy" order.

Metro to Make Mostly Comedies.

As a relief from the mental burdens of the war Metro has decided to provide the majority of its stars with comedies. Already two plays of this character are in production and others are being prepared by the company's large staff of scenario writers for other stars. While each play will be a comedy, cheerful in tone and packed with action and wholesome pathos, great care is being taken to select stories widely different in theme.

The first of these, "The Spender," Bert Lytell's starring vehicle, is now being photographed at Metro's West Coast studios in Hollywood.

E. S. Flynn, of Minneapolis, formerly of Fox, is now in New York. He says Minneapolis is closed, but St. Paul is open and crowding 'em in.

Second Lieutenant H. Clark Mooney, who was manager of the Triangle Theatre, of Brooklyn, and associated with the Big T., was seen on Broadway in uniform.

ASKS CONGRESS FOR MORE FILM MONEY

War Department Submits Supplemental Appropriation to Cover Expanding Picture Activities

SUPPLEMENTAL appropriations for the continuance of a number of moving picture activities have been asked of Congress by the War Department, several million dollars having been requested that the picture program of the department might be continued.

The increased program of the Signal Corps, it was declared at hearings recently held by a House sub-committee in Washington, would require an increase of 100 per cent. in the expenditures for photography, and an appropriation of $2,000,000 has been asked, part of which is to be expended in the erection of a fireproof structure for the storage of the moving picture films now being made as a pictorial history of the war.

During the current fiscal year the corps expects to spend approximately $2,500,000 for actual photography, and a building is to be erected in which "these priceless films will be preserved for the generations to come so that they can be shown a hundred years from now," said General Squier in speaking of this work. "If we could look back to the days of Washington now, for instance, it would be a mighty big thing."

The sum of $1,000,000 was asked for by M. L. McBride, of the commission on training camp activities, to be expended in the erection of theatres and the reconstruction of some of the existing houses.

"The enlarged military program recently approved by the War Department has necessitated a complete change of plans for the theatre construction division of this commission," he told the members of the subcommittee. "New theatres have been requested for new camps, and changes in construction of the small theatres in some of the old camps have been deemed advisable in order to take care of the greatly increased number of troops in many of the camps. These large, unforseen changes have necessitated greatly increased costs to provide for our building program for the remainder of the fiscal year. To meet this an urgent deficiency appropriation of $1,000,000 is requested.

Statistics On Theatre Finances.

"From January 1 August 31, 1918, the gross receipts from admissions were $914,366, receipts from curtain advertising, bookings at outside theatres, and sale of company properties, $3,226, making a total of $917,592. The expenses have been, administrative expenses $17,990, less amount prorated to theatres; by that I mean what the theatres have actually taken care of and absorbed themselves, $13,275, leaving $4,715; booking expenses, that is incidental to the expense of maintaining an organization to secure these shows in New York, $16,000, less amount prorated to theatres, the amount we have charged in to our running expenses of these theatres, $11,000, leaving $5,000; house expenses, which you have just been asking about, $242,000, and payments to the companies or the proportion that you have to pay to book these companies, $631,000, making a total of $884,000, and leaving a profit of $32,000. We have now 35 theatres, and we should do on an average $25,000 to $30,000 a week, I mean all through the year, $1,500,000; I would say that we would easily do that."

There is no longer any duplication of the motion picture censorship work by the Department of Military Intelligence and the Committee on Public Information, Brigadier General Churchill, director of military intelligence, told the sub-committee, in response to questions as to the work his department was doing along that line.

"The Committee on Public Information is one agency and the military censor is another," he said, "and when they are in doubt about something, or when they think it may contain information of use to the enemy, they send me the material, and I pass on it and send it back to them."

"That committee undertakes to exercise censorship over moving pictures and things of that sort, does it not?" queried Congressman Sherley, chairman of the committee.

Explaining Military Censorship

"They are doing practically nothing of that kind now in respect to any military information which may be contained in those pictures which it would be undesirable to show, with respect to harmful German propaganda, or anything like that. That work is being done by my office."

"But they are creating, on the positive side, moving pictures which they afterward sell to the trade and which are shown," responded the chairman. "There have been several of them. My understanding was that the Signal Corps of the army took official photographs, and that they were, to a certain extent, made the basis of some of these moving pictures which are built up. Do you have anything to do with that?"

"My representative sees them, and if there is any reason, from the point of view of the War Department, why they should not be shown, he so states. In other words, I exercise a military censorship; every film taken by the Signal Corps is passed upon by my representatives. Then of the film which is approved by them Mr. Creel takes such as he desires to put out in a positive way. In other works, my office and his are co-operating agencies, but I am not a part of his office, even by delegation. My assistants and his are in daily contact, and the possibility of duplication is always in our minds. We do everything in the world to prevent it, and I think there is practically none."

Government Announces Series of Two-Reelers

A SERIES of two-reel pictures, under the general title "For Life and Liberty," is announced by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. Three of these two-reelers are now in the laboratory and three more are in the hands of the directors and cameramen.

The stories for the series were prepared by Rufus Steels, scenario editor for the Division of Films, and the entire work of preparing the pictures is being done under Govermental supervision. Each picture takes up some vital war activity and illustrates how successful results are obtained.

Following the date of the initial release, which will shortly be announced by Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution, it is expected that one of these pictures will be issued every two weeks.

The direct title of the first of the new series is "When Your Soldier's Hit." It pictorializes the wonderful efficiency of the medical detachment and field hospital corps, by showing how the first aid detail goes forward behind the fighting line, how wounded men are rescued and taken to the advanced dressing station by stretcher bearers, given first treatment, then passed on to the field hospital, and finally to a place of safety. It is the first exposition of the work of the Field Hospital Corps that has been produced for the screen.

The five succeeding pictures are: "The Bath of Bullets," showing the use and destructive powers of machine guns and hand grenades until they are reinforced by the big guns; "Wings of Victory," a picturization of the actual progress made in airplane construction in the United States; "Making the Nation Fit," a Walter Camp exposition of how men and women are reaching physical perfection by war-time training; "The Storm of Steel," showing the inside of the great gunmaking foundries, where the artillery and munitions for crushing the Huns are made, and a picture devoted to the cavalry and artillery horses, which still do their bit in the war, despite tractors, trucks and tanks. It is entitled "Horses That Wage War," and has a singularly effective appeal.

Miller to Represent Mayer.

Bernard Miller, who has for the past year been secretary to Carl Laemmle, president of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has resigned his position to accept an appointment as assistant to the president in the Louis B. Mayer organization, which has just opened offices at 2 West Forty-fifth street. Although Mr. Miller has been in the photoplay business but one year, he has proved himself a highly efficient aid an executive of marked ability. He will have virtual charge of the New York office and will be Mr. Mayer's personal representative in New York City. His experience in handling contracts and purchasing photoplays will stand him in good stead in the Mayer organization.

Shipyards Film Strong in West.

One of the surprises in the distribution of "Our Bridge of Ships," by the General Film Company, has been the great demand for the picture in the inland Western states. When the Division of Films, of the Committee on Public Information, issued this comprehensive and illuminating two-reel picture of the ever-growing activities in American shipyards and the rapid bridging of the Atlantic with steel and wooden ships, it was supposed the coast cities would be interested to a greater degree than the inland towns. It has been found, however, that while the Atlantic and Pacific Coast cities have been strong for the picture, the interest in and around the plains cities and the mountain towns, has been remarkable.

FIGHTING THE INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC

How Managers Meet the Country-Wide Condition of Quarantine Which Now Confronts Them

EVERYWHERE the spread of the Spanish influenza is hurting business, even where the city or state authorities have not declared an actual quarantine. In many sections this quarantine seems arbitrary and perhaps a bit unjust, but we have yet to hear of a house manager who has attacked the ruling of the authorities, though some must feel sorely tempted to do so. Most of them have accepted the situation gamely.

It cannot be denied that many of them have cause for complaint. For example, theatres, saloons and churches are closed in Pittsburgh, but department stores are crowded, the sale of soft drinks has not been interfered with, and the public transportation systems are permitted to crowd their patrons into far closer and less sanitary contact than ever existed in the motion picture houses. Throughout the country similar moves have been made, and always it is the motion picture house that is the first to suffer.

About the best precautionary measure we have seen comes from Harrisburg, Ill. Here there are two houses, the Orpheum and the Grand, each management having a house in the nearby town of Eldorado. The two combine in a cross-page nines to tell the public how to avoid the epidemic. As Steve Farrar, of the Orpheum, remarks, few may read the small type to the right, but they cannot escape the twelve and eighteen point in the four-column space, and the rules, if followed, will probably enable the theatres to keep open. There have been a few cases in the two towns, but not enough to call for any official action.

The advertisement is paid for by the two managements and the newspaper itself, each taking one-third of the cost. The interest of the newspaper is explained by the fact that the loss of the two chief advertisers would be a serious matter to the small town daily. It is willing to make a price concession to assist the advertisers in keeping open. This scheme is recommended to all small towns not yet reached by the epidemic.

For towns where the theatres have been closed, Butte, Mont., offers an excellent line. The Rialto, managed by Ralph Ruffner, was the hardest hit. For nineteen weeks he had been booming "The House of Hate" serial, and just when he expected to clean up with the last installment he had to close with a single day showing. He took advantage of the wording of the ordinance to keep open until midnight to give all a chance to see the climax of the serial, but in his advertising he takes good naturedly the closing down. Even before the closing order came he noticed a falling off in the attendance, and he ran three comedy slides to lessen the tension. They may help others.

Old Mother Hubbard went to the cupboard
To get her poor dog a stew.
When she got there she tore her hair,
For the stew had the Spanish Flu.

Little Miss Muffett sat on a tuffett;
The tuffett was covered with dew.
Along came a spider and sat down beside her,
And they both caught the Spanish Flu.

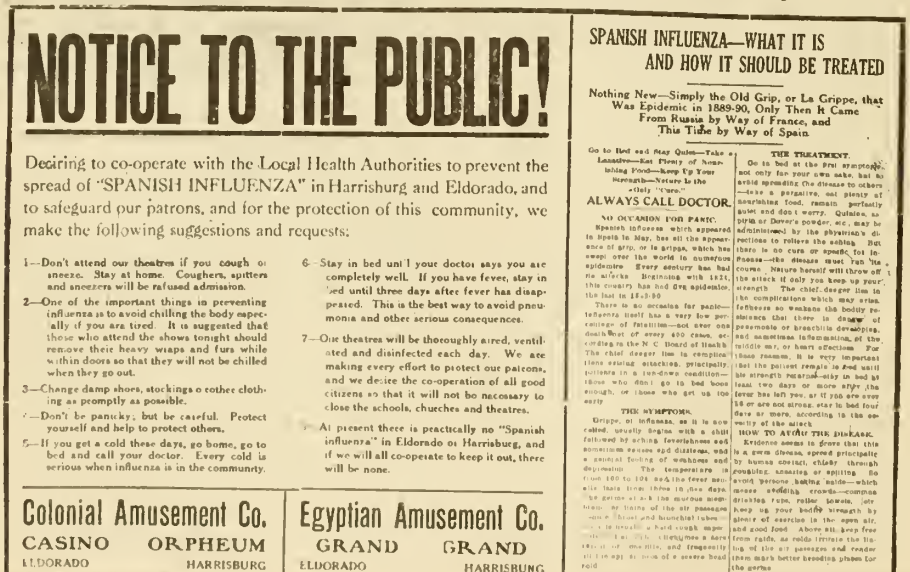
Hark! Hark! the dogs do bark
The Flu is coming to town.
"We'll close the shows until it goes,"
Said the hell-th board.

The poetical value is slight, but used on the slide and in advertising they will help to reduce the strain.

The American, in the same town, arranged a demonstration. A. C. Raleigh took inspiration from the statement of the local health officer that a good snowstorm would stop the epidemic. He bought up the local supply of confetti and threw this into the intake, showing by the course of the paper particles how thoroughly the fans reached all parts of the house. The demonstration came too late to avert closing, but it will help in the first few days following the opening order.

He also distributed small throwaways in which he announced that following the course of the disease there would be an epidemic of good pictures, saved up in the interval, and that meanwhile he was going to clean house.

Neither house attacked the order or questioned its wisdom. It met the situation cheerfully, closed for the safety of the public and made the best of a bad situation. It is all anyone can do. Try the Farrar preventive measure first, but if they do not work, then close with a good grace. It won't help any to complain and it assuredly will not have a good after-effect. SARGENT.



NOTICE TO THE PUBLIC!

Desiring to co-operate with the Local Health Authorities to prevent the spread of "SPANISH INFLUENZA" in Harrisburg and Eldorado, and to safeguard our patrons, and for the protection of this community, we make the following suggestions and requests:

1—Don't attend our theatres if you cough or sneeze. Stay at home. Coughers, spitters and sneezers will be refused admission.

2—One of the important things in preventing influenza is to avoid chilling the body especially if you are tired. It is suggested that those who attend the shows tonight should remove their heavy wraps and furs while within doors so that they will not be chilled when they go out.

3—Change damp shoes, stockings or other clothing as promptly as possible.

4—Don't be panicky, but be careful. Protect yourself and help to protect others.

5—If you get a cold these days, go home, go to bed and call your doctor. Every cold is serious when influenza is in the community.

6—Stay in bed until your doctor says you are completely well. If you have fever, stay in bed until three days after fever has disappeared. This is the best way to avoid pneumonia and other serious consequences.

7—Our theatres will be thoroughly aired, ventilated and disinfected each day. We are making every effort to protect our patrons, and we desire the co-operation of all good citizens so that it will not be necessary to close the schools, churches and theatres.

8—At present there is practically no "Spanish influenza" in Eldorado or Harrisburg, and if we will all co-operate to keep it out, there will be none.

SPANISH INFLUENZA—WHAT IT IS AND HOW IT SHOULD BE TREATED

Nothing New—Simply the Old Grip, or La Grippe, that Was Epidemic in 1889-90, Only Then It Came From Russia by Way of France, and This Time by Way of Spain

Go to Bed and Stay Quite—Take a Laxative—Eat Plenty of Nourishing Food—Keep Up Your Strength—Nature Is the Only Cure.

ALWAYS CALL DOCTOR.

NO OCCASION FOR PANIC.

Spanish influenza which appeared in Spain in May, has all the appearance of grip, or la grippe, which has swept over the world in numerous epidemics. Every century has had its attacks. Beginning with 1831, the country has had five epidemics, the last in 1889-90.

There is no occasion for panic—influenza itself has a very low percentage of fatalities—not over one death in four of every 400 cases, according to the U. S. Board of Health. The chief danger lies in complications arising, principally, in persons in a run-down condition—those who don't go to bed soon enough, or those who get up too early.

THE SYMPTOMS.

Grippe, or influenza, as it is now called, usually begins with a chill followed by aching, feverishness and sometimes nausea and dizziness, and a general feeling of weakness and depression. The temperature is from 100 to 104, and the fever usually lasts from three to five days. The germs attack the mucous membranes or lining of the air passages—nose, throat and bronchial tubes—to invade a hard cough soon [illegible] the chest, and frequently [illegible] of severe head

THE TREATMENT.

Go to bed at the first symptoms, not only for your own sake, but to avoid spreading the disease to others—take a purgative, eat plenty of nourishing food, remain perfectly quiet and don't worry. Quinine, aspirin or Dover's powder, etc., may be administered by the physician's directions to relieve the aching. But there is no cure or specific for influenza—the disease must run its course. Nature herself will throw off the attack if only you keep up your strength. The chief danger lies in the complications which may ensue. Feebleness so weakens the bodily resistance that there is danger of pneumonia developing, and sometimes inflammation of the middle ear, or heart affections. For those reasons, it is very important that the patient remain in bed until his strength returns—stay in bed at least two days or more after the fever has left you, or if you are over 50 or are not strong, stay in bed four days or more, according to the severity of the attack.

HOW TO AVOID THE DISEASE.

Evidence seems to prove that this is a germ disease, spread principally by human contact, chiefly through coughing, sneezing or spitting. So avoid persons having colds—which means avoiding crowds—compose drinking cups, roller towels, [illegible] keep up your bodily strength by plenty of exercise in the open air, and good food. Above all, keep free from colds, as colds irritate the lining of the air passages and render them more better breeding places for the germs

Division of Films Departments Merged.

Director Charles S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, announces that the department of feature films, from the management of which George Bowles has resigned to go to France, and the community section, recently under the direction of Ryerson Ritchie, have been merged, and will henceforth be conducted as a part of the department of domestic distribution, under the direction of Manager Dennis J. Sullivan. C. S. Trowbridge, for several months associated with the community section, has been named as manager of the merged departments.

Changes at Lasky Studio.

Through rearrangement of the technical and business management of the Famous Players-Lasky West Coast studio, Milton E. Hoffman, studio general manager, has been relieved of many of the details of production, which have been assumed by Fred Kley, who now becomes studio manager. Mr. Hoffman will have broader scope for the supervision of all work and will act in an advisory capacity largely, adjudicating matters of importance.

Frank E. Woods is now definitely in charge of all phases of cutting, editing, etc., of productions as supervisor of productions for the West Coast.

Perret Engages Mme. Blache.

Leonce Perret announces that he has secured the services of Mme. Alice Blache to direct a series of pictures under his supervision. Mme. Blache began her career as a motion picture director with the Gaumont Company when that firm started business in Paris. The first Blache picture for Mr. Perret will be from a scenario written by himself but not yet named.

The star, whose work will be supervised by Mme. Blache will be Dolores Cassinelli.

SHERRY TO RELEASE THROUGH GENERAL

Merger of Offices Into Those of Older Concern, for Conservation Reasons—Sherry Not Absorbed

TAKING effect forthwith, the William L. Sherry Service has been transferred to the General Film Company in so far as the selling and physical distribution of the product is concerned. The Sherry Service is not absorbed by this transaction, and will retain its identity and home offices as heretofore. The new arrangement was prompted by reasons of conservation.

According to the terms of the agreement the branch offices of the Sherry service will be discontinued at once, and will be taken over by the local branches of the General Film Company in the fourteen cities outside of New York where the Sherry service has been represented. The State of New York, Northern New Jersey and Western Connecticut will continue to be served with the Sherry program as heretofore from the Sherry home office and exchange at 729 Seventh avenue, New York.

"I feel free at last," said Mr. Sherry, "to give my full time and attention to the quality of the Sherry program, and the efficiency of the Sherry service now that the physical handling of the product is placed in the hands of a distributing organization that has facilities for handling film.

"By this arrangement a considerable load is taken off my shoulders. Of late, I have been severely hampered in my efforts to give genuine service because of the scarcity of men, able men, to carry on the work of my branch offices. The war has made such demands upon the man power of the nation that men of every kind are scarce everywhere. Too frequently it has happened that I have secured able lieutenants, only to have them called away by the greater call of war. As a consequence of this condition, I have found that much of my time that should have been devoted to service has been given over to keeping my organization intact. Hence my arrangement with the General Film Company to take over the actual work of distribution, which leaves me free to devote my entire time to the matter of service.

"According to my present plans, I expect to cover the entire territory two or three times a year and meet in person every exhibitor who does or does not use the William L. Sherry Service."

The arrangement with the General Film Company will bring about no change in the present Sherry program, except for the addition of one or two more stars. The Sherry program at present consists of the following contributing producing companies: Frank A. Keeney Productions, featuring Catherine Calvert; DeLuxe Pictures, Inc., featuring Doris Kenyon; Golden West Producing Company, featuring G. M. Anderson ("Broncho Billy"); Harold J. Binney Productions, featuring Vangie Valentine, and the Burlingham Travel Pictures.

HARRY REICHENBACH BEREAVED.

During the past week Harry Reichenbach, who is en route from London to Italy as a representative in the latter country of the Committee on Public Information, was bereaved by the death of his father, Charles Reichenbach, and his brother, Irving Reichenbach, who was employed by the Leslie-Judge Corporation. The family has been unable thus far to reach Harry by cable. Mrs. Irving Reichenbach is so ill from pneumonia that as yet she has not been informed of her husband's death. Two other brothers of Mr. Reichenbach are in the service—Joe, with the American Expeditionary Forces, and Howard, in training at Camp Gordon, Atlanta. The remaining brother, Walter, fortunately was in New York City at the time, and is making every possible endeavor to communicate with Harry.

WILLIAM BRANDT SERIOUSLY ILL.

William Brandt, one of Brooklyn's most prominent exhibitors, has been seriously ill from influenza during the past ten days. For three days in the week of October 14 his temperature remained at or above 104, receding on Saturday to 100. It was believed at that time the crisis was passed, and that "Bill" would be able to leave his bed in two weeks.

Goldwyn Will Open Up Coast Plant November 1

GOLDWYN made the move last week that transplants its studio activities from Fort Lee to Los Angeles. A trainload of properties and equipment are on the way to Los Angeles, and on November 1 the company will take formal possession of the big Goldwyn plant on the outskirts of Los Angeles.

Tom Moore has been at work in the West Coast studio for the last ten days. Under the direction of Harry Beaumont, Mr. Moore and his leading woman, Ora Carewe, enacted several scenes of "Go West, Young Man," thus giving Goldwyn's only man star the distinction of being the first to work on the new lot.

Mae Marsh left New York October 19 for the new studio. Her next production will be the first to be started following the completion of the Moore picture. Mabel Normand, who has just completed "A Perfect 36" will follow shortly.

Madge Kennedy has completed "Primrose," written for her by Cosmo Hamilton, at Fort Lee, and will have a well-earned vacation of several weeks before she goes to the Coast.

Geraldine Farrar, whose fourth Goldwyn picture is nearing completion at Fort Lee, will not go West until after the closing of the opera and concert season in April.

Hobart Henley and the Rex Beach Company, including Frank McIntyre, which has been secretly at work for several weeks on Mr. Beach's unpublished story, "Too Fat to Fight," have finished, and Mr. Henley will go to the Coast as soon as he has cut the new production. Rex Beach and Mrs. Beach will leave in late November. Pauline Frederick, who is shortly to begin on her Goldwyn starring career, will follow in a fortnight.

Samuel Goldfish, president of Goldwyn, does not expect to go until about the middle of November. Administrative affairs of the company will keep him in New York until work is well under way at the new studio.

The scenario department, in charge of H. R. Durant, will remain in New York, but the casting department will be moved to the Coast.

The company's home office organization, quartered at 16 East Forty second street, will remain intact in the East. Distribution, both domestic and foreign, accounting, advertising and publicity will continue to be handled from New York.

Exhibitors Enter Protest on Film Tax Amendment

ALLEGING that the manufacturers' branch of the National Association broke its agreement with the exhibitors' branch of the same organization in filing a substitute clause for the pending tax on films with the Senate Finance Committee calculated to place the burden of the film tax upon exhibitors, the exhibitors' branch has, through its committee, of which Alfred S. Black is chairman, filed a protest thereto.

The substitute clause complained of reads as follows:

Amend subdivision (5) of Section 900 to read as follows:

(5) On positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for projection and sold, leased, or licensed to an exhibitor for exhibition within the United States, 5 per cent. of the price collected for which so sold, leased, or licensed; said 5 per cent. to be paid by the exhibitor to the vendor, lesser, or licensor, provided, however, that if any person being a manufacturer, producer, distributor, or importer of positive motion picture film containing a picture ready for projection shall himself exhibit such positive motion picture film for profit, such person shall be deemed an exhibitor, and said 5 per cent. shall be calculated on the fair rental value of such positive motion picture film at the time and place where exhibited.

Replying to this the exhibitors' branch enters the following protest:

We desire to protest against the phraseology of the aforesaid amendment whereby it places all of said tax upon the exhibitors. We admit the manufacturers cannot stand the percentage tax as proposed in the House Bill, but wish to earnestly reiterate that the exhibitors would be doubly overburdened as stated in brief already filed with your committee. We wish also to call your particular attention to the fact that the manufacturers (other than the income tax to which all are liable) are not paying one cent of additional taxation, all the burden of various taxations being placed upon the exhibitors.

We believe that all branches of an industry should be treated equitably, and if, after considering our protests, Congress decides to place some excise or percentage tax upon the motion picture industry that said tax be equitably distributed over the different branches of the amusement business.

In view of the very serious condition the exhibitors of the United States now find themselves placed in, we believe it fair and essential again to strongly emphasize that excess burden of taxation upon the exhibitors will work out very much to the great disadvantage of the best interests of the Government for the reasons heretofore expressed. All of which is respectfully submitted on behalf of the exhibitors' branch of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry representing the motion picture theatres of the United States.

Ouimet Looks Over New York.

HOW TO CONSERVE FILM AND MACHINE

Vice-President of United Theatre Equipment Advises Exhibitors on Vital Trade Problems

By J. H. HALLBERG.

IT is a fact not generally known that valuable film is injured and its life much shortened by improper method of operation in handling and projecting the film after it has been delivered by the producer and film distributor to the exhibitor, and the following points are worthy of your consideration:

First. When a film is new and has not been specially treated, such as the ordinary positives are when delivered to the exhibitor in the majority of cases, the stock is what we call "green." In explanation of this it may be stated that the emulsion on a new film, while being dry, is still in a semi-plastic state.

Due to this fact, when such film is operated through a projector or moving picture machine, the emulsion retards the film movement and particles of the emulsion are deposited upon the sprockets and upon the film tension shoes, as well as upon the aperture runners.

This deposit welds itself in spots upon the above mentioned parts, causing an enormous increase in friction, which must be overcome by increasing the power applied for driving the machine so as to maintain proper projection speed.

Strain Elongates Sprocket Holes.

The increase in power applied puts additional strain upon all parts of the moving picture machine, and at the same time necessarily puts additional strain upon the sprocket holes which are being engaged by the teeth upon the sprockets of the projector. This strain in some instances elongates the sprocket holes, which, on subsequent runs of the film, impairs the steadiness of the projection and has a serious effect upon the life of the film.

To overcome this condition processes are available for hardening or treating the "green" film surface, which in a great measure relieves the friction.

Another method which may be recommended to overcome the friction incident to the use of "green" film is to apply a set of small wicks, feeding special lubrication to the edges of the film which come in contact with the sprocket teeth and the guides in the projector while the film is being projected. This method has been applied with much success in some of the film censorship exhibition rooms; but when this method of lubrication is used it is, of course, necessary, or at least advisable, to run the film through a film cleaner before it is put back on the reel and returned to the exchange so as to remove any lubricant remaining upon the emulsion.

First Runs Hard on Film.

It is safe to estimate that 20 per cent. of the wear on the film and upon the machine takes place during the first few runs with "green" film.

Second. The greatest abuse to and wear upon films, whether new or old, and to moving picture machines takes place when overspeeding the machine. This practice is, in the writer's opinion, the cause of more film and machine trouble and introduces more waste than any other fault in the projection of films.

The normal speed of a thousand feet of film is from twelve to fifteen minutes, but we know of theatres projecting the same length of film in from six to ten minutes so as to enable a greater number of exhibitions within a specified time.

The strain upon the mechanism of the projector is more than doubled by such increase of speed, and the strain upon the sprocket holes and the film splices is comparatively enormous. It is a wonder the projector and the film last as long as they do.

It is safe to estimate that more injury is done to a film operating above normal speed ten times through a projector than when the same film is operated through the same projector one hundred times at normal speed, and this also applies to the wear upon the projector.

Another serious consequence of excessive speed follows the opening of a splice or the breaking of the film, because at high speed the machine cannot be stopped instantly and therefore large lengths of film may be chewed up and destroyed before the projector can be stopped.

Film Splicing Device Essential.

Third. The general use of a small film splicing device, costing from five to fifteen dollars, will enable every operator of a projector to make a perfect film splice, which is absolutely necessary to the proper operation and conservation of film.

Fourth. Every theatre should be equipped with an approved type of film cleaning device. Such devices are very simple and cost less than $10 to install, and the cost is less than one penny for each thousand feet of film cleaned. It is not necessary to clean the film each time it goes through the machine, but the film should be cleaned at least once while it is in possession of a theatre, preferably just before the last run, so that there will be a minimum amount of dust and carbon deposited upon the film when it is returned.

Fifth. The writer has observed a lack of unity in the length of film titles and announcements of reading matter. A good many feet of film can be conserved by standardizing the length of the titles upon a uniform basis, depending upon the number of letters or words exhibited.

This brings us back to overspeeding, and it is well to remember that if a film title is prepared for proper projection speed the same title must be twice as long when overspeeded 100 per cent.

As to Importance of Repairs.

Sixth. Much film damage is done by improperly designed and constructed machines and also by standard machines of recognized high quality when not kept in proper adjustment and repair.

Under this heading the following points should be considered:

(a) If the take-up which winds the used film upon the receiving reel is not properly designed or adjusted, and if the tension should be too tight, or if reels with too small hubs are used, it is possible for the take-up tension to strain the film so that the lower sprocket will almost cut through the stock between the perforations. Even a slightly excessive take-up tension will elongate the perforations and injure the film. Operators should be warned on this point.

(b) A machine with a worn intermittent sprocket may destroy a perfect film by running it through only once.

(c) Worn aperture plates and excessive tension on the film guides or shoes will seriously increase the friction, with consequent damage to the film.

(d) Worn idlers, rough stripper plates and too long or too short loops may ruin a perfectly good film operating through the machine only once.

(e) The use of damaged reels with sharp edges and which do not run true should not be permitted, as they are the means of much film destruction.

Use Judgment in Lubricating.

(f) The lubrication of moving picture machines should be moderate so that a minimum amount of oil will deposit upon the film. In fact, a machine properly lubricated and cleaned will not deposit oil or dust upon the film.

(g) In many machines in service the fire-trap rollers on the magazines are either worn out, rough or stuck, due to lack of attention, allowing the delicate emulsion of the film to drag along this surface at a high rate of speed, injuring the film.

(h) In a properly designed, constructed, adjusted and operated projector a film is practically absolutely safe from fire; but when the film splices are poorly made or when the machine is not properly adjusted and in proper repair, as above referred to, the hazard from fire, with consequent destruction of part or the whole of the film, is likely to follow. A film fire not only ruins a part or the whole of the film, but it also destroys a considerable part of the projector.

Therefore it is reasonable to assume that great conservation in both films and machines can be effected by the very ordinary means suggested above.

Seventh. An observer in the operating or rewinding room of a theatre will in many instances find that the method of rewinding a film can do much injury to the emulsion.

A continuous steady speed with uniform tension packs the film gently and nicely upon the reel, whereas jerky action and overspeeding in rewinding is likely to do much damage.

In the ordinary theatres rewinding is done by hand, and can be done well and properly with little care, but in the more modern theatres rewinding is now done within fireproof inclosures automatically under uniform tension and speed by electric motor drive, which method should be recommended wherever possible, as it not only saves the film, but it also conserves man-power, as in many instances extra labor is employed in rewinding.

The better informed operater understands and realizes the importance of the foregoing, which is also well known to the maker and distributor of the film.

Eighth. Conservation of carbon electrodes, arc lamps, lamp houses, condensing lenses, asbestos covered copper cable and copper lugs:

Conserving Carbon.

The conservation of carbon electrodes as used in projector lamps with the electric arc can be effected by using what is known as "carbon savers," which permit the burning of the carbon with a waste of only about one inch for each twelve-inch length. The use of the carbon saver will conserve about 10 per cent. of the carbon consumption. Carbon savers cost about $1 each, and two are required for each machine. The life of a carbon saver when properly used is from three to twelve months, depending upon the amount of current used and the care with which the arc is handled.

The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has already made recommendations to the Fuel Administration, which include the possible limiting of the amount of current to be used at the electric arc for projection, and the enforcement of the suggestions which have been or will be made will have the effect of conserving carbon and to increase the life of the arc lamps, lamp houses, condensing lenses, asbestos covered copper cable and copper lugs used for the maintenance of the electric arc.

Annie Russell's Career Guarantee for Cavell Role

WHEN Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation, succeeded in persuading Annie Russell to play the part of Nurse Edith Cavell in the coming Screen Classics super-feature, "Wilson or the Kaiser?" one of the last of the great stars of the dramatic stage succumbed to the lure of the screen. Miss Russell is English by birth, and she considers her work in "Wilson or the Kaiser?" a patriotic privilege. Her husband, Oswald Yorke, is also English. He has gone overseas to do work in connection with the Y. M. C. A.

Annie Russell's parents brought her as a child to America, first settling in Canada. It was before her eighth birthday that she first appeared on the stage in Montreal, with Rose Eytinge in "Miss Multon." Her first New York appearance was in Haverly's juvenile opera company in "H. M. S. Pinafore."

After a tour in the name part of "Hazel Kirke" (this being her first grown-up part) Miss Russell appeared in the title role of "Esmeralda" at the Madison Square Theatre, New York, at the age of seventen, making a genuine sensation. She then launched on one of the most successful careers it has ever been the privilege of an actress to enjoy. A few of the plays in which she appeared in ingenue roles were "Confusion," "Pique," W. S. Gilbert's "Broken Hearts," "Sealed Instructions," "Engaged" and "Captain Swift." With the production of "The New Woman," in 1894, she assumed the leading woman roles, then joining Nat Goodwin in "A Gilded Fool," "David Garrick," "In Mizzoura" and "Ambition." The actress created a furore in "Sue," by T. E. Pemberton and Bret Harte, later playing the part in London, also repeating there another of her American successes, "Dangerfield, '95," a one-act play.

From this time until 1914 Miss Russell was constantly before the public in successful plays. Theatregoes in both England and America will watch with interest for Annie Russell's delineation of Nurse Edith Cavell.

Red Cross Issues Booklet.

In order to give theatre owners a complete understanding of the nature of its film issues and the circumstances under which they are available to the public the American Red Cross Bureau of Pictures has prepared a large edition of booklets. Half of this edition will go to motion picture exhibitors and the other half to Red Cross chapters in the United States. In this way information about the official war work films of the American Red Cross will reach those most directly interested on either side of the distribution. The aim emphasized in this pamphlet is that of getting the films before the twenty-three million Red Cross members in the United States in the most direct and expeditious manner.

Director W. E. Waddell has incorporated in the booklet synopses, descriptions and reviews of the current war work films, beginning with "The Historic Fourth of July in Paris" and a forecast of other releases now in work.

Gustavus Rogers for Congress

GUSTAVUS A. ROGERS, of Rogers & Rogers, who is quite well known to the motion picture industry, has been nominated as a Democratic candidate for Congress in the Twenty-ninth Congressional District, comprising Rensselaer, Saratoga, Washington and Warren counties.

Mr. Rogers has a residence in Warren County, where he spends a considerable portion of the year. He also has an office at Glens Falls, as well as at 66

G. A. Rogers.

Broadway in New York, and is connected with several of the industrial enterprises there. Ordinarily the district elects a Republican Congressman, but it is expected that Mr. Rogers will be elected. He has the backing of the national administration, and has been indorsed by the leading Democrats of the nation.

Mr. Rogers will be remembered on account of his activity in the motion picture patents suits and his being for many years the attorney for William Fox and the Fox Film Corporation. A resolution indorsing Mr. Rogers' candidacy has been adopted by the political committee of the National Association.

October 20 Attractions At the New York Theatres

RIALTO.—William Desmond, in the Triangle picture, "The Pretender," was the screen star at the Rialto the week of October 20. The story is full of breezy western humor and is cleverly played by the entire cast. "The Triumph of Transportation," the Animated Magazine and "The Great Vacuum Robbery" were also shown. The soloist was Lorrie Grimaldi.

Strand.—Charlie Chaplin, in his latest comedy, "Shoulder Arms," was the leading attraction on the bill at the Strand. Another feature was the Broncho Bill picture, entitled "Shooting Mad." The fourth Burlingham Scenic Study, "Our War Heroes Arrive in Switzerland"; the Allied War Review and the Strand Topical Review were included in the program. Jane Holder and Mlle. Michot were the vocal artists.

Rivoli.—"A Woman of Impulse," a Paramount picture, founded on Louis K. Anspacher's play of the same name, with Lina Cavalieri featured, had the place of honor on the Rivoli program. A new Van Scoy scenic, the Animated Pictorial, the Official War Review and "The Rose of Wolfville" concluded the list of pictures. Alberto Bachmann and Gladys Rice were the soloists.

Eighty-first Street.—First half, Louise Glaum in "A Law Unto Herself"; latter half, Fred Stone in "The Goat."

Knickerbocker.—Griffith's "Hearts of the World." Thirty-fourth consecutive week.

Broadway.—"The Yellow Dog."

Kellette Writes Loan Song.

John W. Kellette, assistant director to Kenean Buel, of the Fox Film Corporation, has written a Liberty Loan song that has been accepted by the committee and was sung by several of the units as an aid to the drive. James S. Donahue, a newspaper man of New Haven, collaborated on the lyric, and "Kell" wrote the melody. The Misses Hazel and Mary Washburne, of Zeigfeld Follies, both known to the screen, sang the number and appeared at the Green Room Theatre at Pennsylvania railroad station with Miss Mary at the piano. It is titled, "If You Can't Go Across with the Doughboys, Oh, Boys, Come Across with the Dough," and the chorus is as follows:

If you can't go across with the dough-boys,
Oh! boys come across with the dough.
If you can't fight the Hun with pistol or gun
Make your dollars deliver the blow—
Show the boys over there we are with them,
If it takes every dollar you own.
If you can't go across, then, by heck! come across!
Buy a bond for the Liberty Loan!

"Kell" went all over the city handing out manuscript copies as fast as he could write them, and what he'd call an evening's jaunt would take him from 14th street to 139th, while he'd rehearse some Loan worker in the swing of the melody.

Kansas Convention Postponed.

The Kansas exhibitors' convention, to be held at Hutchinson, Kan., October 21 and 22, has been postponed on account of the present unsettled conditions.

Rambles Round Filmtown

With WALTER K. HILL.

This Week's Idiotorial.

WITH Webster filled with terse expressions of English, why should we worry over our share of contributing to the war-world's non-essentials? There being no echo to answer, we turn at once to Noah's Ark of Words and find:

Industry.—The quality or habit of attention or devotion to any useful or productive pursuit, work or task, manual or mental; earnest, steady or constant application to business.

Taking its cue from the dictionary, industry has beeome so generally prevalent that it has finally reached the extent of an epidemic. Despite the skill of the brainiest men the plague maintains a breakless grip upon every form of occupation, pursuit, employment and other synonyms for work save the task of making, taking and circulating fixed and movable pictures. To the credit of the captains of cameracraft let it be said that they alone of all the industrious peoples in these busy war times have succeeded in fighting off the dread plague of industry.

As the M. P. industry swings idly at anchor under the lee shore of Utopia the milk of human envy that surges through our lazy carcass curdles with joy that for once the word "work" has been spurlos versenkt, because the hated phrase "industry" has been ditched, and has ceased to function. This happy state obtains in few of the other industries, a list of which we append in the order of their importance and essentiality:

First Industry: Clam Digging and Oyster Gardening.—Millions of men are employed; the result of their efforts gladden the Adam's Apple of still more millions. It is indeed the first industry—and like all the great industries there was a lay-off during the past summer from and inclusive May to August. To be a really first-class industry there must be a stoppage.

Second Industry: Garnering Drift-wood.—Lakes and creeks, the two coasts of the continent and the Harlem River are fields of great activities in the second of our great industries. The lay-off usually happens when cold weather sets in, and lasts while it stays set.

Third Industry: Hop Picking and Berrying.—From Texas to Central New York this great industry progresses, the wave of busy-fingered industrials starting with the advent of the Texas wootleberry carly in June and resting finally along the Mohawk Valley. Matters in this great industry take a vacation from late in the fall until the plaintivc whistle of the wootle beguile them to the Pan Handle with the first hot breath of a Texas sizzler.

Fourth Industry: Fishing for Fish.—Since nets were first discovered on the banks of the Seine in the Fifth Ward, Paris, France, this industry has spread until, in America, it is only exceeded as an industry by clam and oyster pirating, the search for free stove wood and the nimble hopping for berries and brewstock. It has been the source of more lies than all the mimeographs in captivity.

Fifth Industry: Here Discussion Enters.—Agriculture, steel and iron, railroading, mining and moving pictures have long scuffled for honors in this class. The best claim four of these occupations have for supremacy is based on continuous performance. There's always something doing on the farm—putting in the crops, taking them out and putting them in again is the non-stop joy of the farmer's life. So it is in continuity with the other great industries—but when Tennyson wrote "The Brook" moving pictures were not in his mind.

Other industries are too numerous to mention.

Therefore we will not.

Miss Walker's First Indiscretion.

Lillian Walker is nothing if not frank. She admits she went into pictures to make money.

"I wanted a home and a car," she says, "and I wanted to be able to do everything for my family. My experience as an artists's model, then as a fashion-designer, and later being a 'Follies Girl' did not give them to me."

"Well what can you do?" asked the kind gentleman whose duty it is to tell people looking for a job to come in again next Tuesday.

"Anything," she answered, not so mueh in confidence as in desperation.

"If you will promise to never stop smiling we'll try you in 'Indiscretion'."

"I kept the part, and so it happened that my first indiscre'on brought me the first new gown I had had in some time."

"I know an actor who, on his own statement to audiences, was born in no less than sixteen towns in the United States."

Small Wonder That Highbrows Sometimes Kid the Pictures

HERE'S a digest of the plot that held five reels together in a recent moving picture production:

Believing himself to be a leper when his physician treated him to mineral water the hero lepped into the sea presumably to drown.

But such was not in fact the case. When the leper lepped into the ocean desire to live leaped high within him, and he swam to South Africa with tne aid of a tramp schooner.

There the leper captured another championship when the owner of a diamond mine died and left to the leaping leper and swimmer a mine containing diamonds, with which he decorated his belt.

Vengefully the great leper, swimmer and lepper returned to America and gave a belt to the medico who had fed him the phoney mineral water.

But it was not a diamond belt.

Now, don't crowd.

You can't have the picture to exhibit in your theatre until some time after November 9.

Expert Opinion on Art of Lovemaking.

From a tenth-run example of mimeographing by W. H. Productions' educational department we clip and paste the following opinion expressed by H. C. Witwer, author of the "Baseball to Boches" we enjoy so much in Colliers:

"Mabel Normandy is Mickey, and she is some dame, believe me! Joe, she can swim, ride, scrap, dance, and oh, boy, how she can love!

"Joe, if I wasn't in the war I would rather be in the movies, especially one with Mabel Normandy in it. If the leadin' man in Mickey gets any wages it is a outrage, because he does nothin but make love to Mabel Normandy from start to finish, and if I could do that I would pay the people which made the picture."

The Back Wash of War.

THE humorist who asks if it is neeessary to stand up in bed when one hears the National anthem or publicly requests his next door neighbor to put the soft needle on that particular record on the "night of the bath" had no more patriotism, if as mueh, than Pierre, a little refugee in "The Common Cause." Pierre, in the person of Charles Stuart Blackton, son of J. Stuart Blackton, producer of this forthcoming feature, injects onc of the most human and humorous touches of the play into the scene which shows the heroine (Sylvia Breamer) giving a much needed bath to Little Pierre after he and Jeannette (Violet Blackton) have been rescued by her relief workers. During the ordeal (of the bath) Pierre hears the strains of the "Marsellaise" played by passing troops, and, regardless of place and condition, he stands at attention.

Non-essential of all non-essentials:

THE RAMBLER.

Some Practical Pointers on Announcement Slides

IT is often required to reproduce both reading matter and a photograph on the same slide, as in slide announcements for motion picture theaters. It is unsatisfactory to copy direct without any modification, the result being either weak lettering with good reproduction of the photograph, or strong lettering and a contrasty photograph with clogged up shadows.

In order to obtain accurate tone rendering in the photograph and at the same time get good contrast in the line portions, it has been found at the Research Laboratory of the Eastman Kodak Company that either of the following methods will give satisfactory results:

1. Assuming that the photograph and reading matter are arranged on the same card, when copying, use an emulsion similar to that of the Seed 23 plate or Eastman Commercial film, and adjust the exposure and developer so as to obtain good tone reproduction of the photograph, ignoring for the time being the line work. When dry, block out the photograph portion of the negative with lantern slide or negative varnish, and when dry "cut" or slightly reduce with a mixture of potassium ferricyanide and hypo, wash thoroughly and then intensify.

If the slide is now printed on an emulsion such as the Seed Lantern plate, the shadow detail in the photograph will be retained providing the negative in the first place was given a full exposure.

2. Instead of proceeding as above, the photograph and reading matter may be copied separately, using a process plate for the line work and Eastman Commercial film for the photograph, adjusting the size of the latter so that it just fits into the space allotted to it on the glass negative. After making a positive from the negative of the reading matter so as to obtain white lettering on a black ground, affix the film to the negative and use this as the master negative in the usual way.

Film may be affixed to glass by means of a solution of gelatine dissolved in glacial acetic acid. By warming the acid gently it will take up an equal weight of gelatine. If the solution is too thick it should be thinned with a little acetic acid. Apply a little of the cement to the corners of the film, and when tacky press the film into position.

3. A third method consists in printing the line work on one slide and the photograph on a second slide, the two being bound together face to face, thus eliminating the necessity of a cover glass.

In this case it is better to print by contact in order to insure accurate register. A master positive is prepared of the reading matter (reversed left to right) and a master negative of the photograph, the size of the latter being such that it just fits within the clear space on the positive.

In case a quantity of slides are to be made of the same subject the last method is to be preferred.

Correcting a Misunderstanding.

Through a misunderstanding it was reported in the trade press recently that the British Government was receiving the profits from the distribution of "Fighting For Freedom," the serial being released in this country by the Universal Film Manufacturing Company. The fact is that the revenue is paid by the Universal Company to the Official Government Pictures, Inc., and not to the British Government.

The British Ministry of Information, through its New York office, announces that it has leased the United States rights to "Fighting For Freedom" to Official Government Pictures, Inc., and that the British Government has no financial interest in the earnings of the pictures, although it is deeply interested in the wide distribution of the pictures among the people of the United States.

World Pictures Retaining Employes.

During the enforced layoff because of the influenza epidemic, World Pictures is keeping its office organization intact and at work in order that a resumption of its activities may not suffer through inability to keep the machine properly geared.

The scenario department shows no let-up. Stories, novels and plays are being read and passed upon. Last week World Pictures purchased from Kobby Kohn an original story, which will be converted into a photoplay for Montagu Love and June Elvidge. Mr. Kohn has just sold to A. H. Woods two plays which will be produced some time during the present season.

The sales force has been retained as the company considers the saving on salaries would not offset the losses growing out of the engaging of new men.

By having at least six months' reserve of negatives the hiatus of four weeks at the studio in no way affects the release dates on the pictures supplied exhibitors. This also holds good for the advertising material which has been made months in advance of the required time for its distribution.

Universal to Feature Local Publicity.

Universal set into motion last week a new newspaper publicity campaign. The project is directed by Tarkington Baker, a newspaper man of broad experience, who came from Indianapolis to take up his new duties. The plans have been under process of development for the last six months.

It is the purpose to establish intimate relation between the company's exchanges and the local press. All the newspapers of the country hereafter will be served with Universal publicity, largely through the channels of the local branches.

The material will be specially designed to meet the individual style requirements of the various newspapers.

Mr. Baker will leave shortly for a trip over the country visiting all the exchanges.

Hampton Del Ruth with Lehrman.

Henry Lehrman, vice president and general producer of Sunshine Comedies, Inc., has engaged Hampton Del Ruth, well known in Los Angeles as one of the cleverest scenario writers of comedy. Mr. Del Ruth is busily assisting Mr. Lehrman in turning out several excellent scripts, work on which already has been started.

Boone, Iowa, had its first Sunday pictures on September 29, when, despite strenuous opposition, the mayor refused to stop the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Princess Theatre.

Mutual Sells Foreign Rights to Sixteen Five-Reelers

TWO important foreign trade transactions have been concluded during the last week by James M. Sheldon, president of the Mutual Film Corporation. The rights to sixteen five-reel features have been sold in the British Isles and South America. Both deals include the productions of the Empire All Star Corporation, which picturized Charles Frohman's stage successes, together with six features starring Miss Edna Goodrich, which were produced by the Mutual Film Corporation.

The sale of the British rights was consummated through Frank S. Phelps, Mr. Sheldon's London agent, and the sale for South America was made through the Export and Import Film Company of New York.

There has been a persistent demand from England for the Ann Murdock and Edna Goodrich productions because of the popularity of these two American stage celebrities in the British Isles. The Empire productions featuring Miss Murdock include "My Wife," "The Richest Girl," "The Beautiful Adventure," "Outcast," "Please Help Emily," and "The Impostor." Virtually every one of these productions has been presented on the speaking stage in London, notably "Outcast" and "The Beautifull Adventure," which scored big successes. "Please Hely Emily" was adapted from one of the most recent of Frohman successes. "The Beautiful Adventure" is originally from a French farce and "Outcast" had its premiere on the London stage.

The other Frohman plays included in the sale are "The Girl and the Judge," starring Olive Tell; "The Runaway," starring Julia Sanderson; "Her Sister," featuring Miss Tell, and "The Unforseen," with Miss Tell.

The Goodrich productions which have been sold include "Reputation," "A Daughter of Maryland," "Who Loved Him Best?" "Her Second Husband," "Queen X," and "American Maid." They are all American motion picture plays, but Miss Goodrich's popularity in London has been built in American plays.

Fairbanks Writes Another Book.

Douglas Fairbanks has written another book. The title is "Making Life Worth While." The success of his first book, "Laugh and Live," is responsible for his reappearance as an author of a new volume of cheer. It is another message from the man who knows how to keep himself happy and well and is willing to pass his recipe on to others. According to the Britton Publishing Company over 400,000 copies of "Laugh and Live" were sold in this country.

Influenza Delays "America's Answer."

Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, announces that, owing to the epidemic of influenza throughout the country and the fact that in many states the prerelease showings will be stopped by the closing of the motion picture theatres, the release date of "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War Picture, has been changed from October 28 to November 11. This will simply suspend the bookings until the situation has been cleared.

Producers' and Distributors' News

All Five Select Stars Are Continuing Production

THERE has been no let-up in the production of Select Pictures. All five of Select's stars are at the present in the midst of production, and, therefore, the companies of Clara Kimball Young, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies go merrily on. As the Select product consists, with the exception of a few specials, only of feature pictures produced by Select's respective stars, the resumption of activities among the theatres of the country will find Select well prepared for the distribution of announced features.

Clara Kimball Young is busy at the Sunset Studio, Hollywood, on "The Road Through the Dark," Maud Radford Warren's clever story of the war. The leading man is Jack Holt. The picture is being directed by Edmund Mortimer.

In the same city Norma Talmadge is busy on her next Select picture, the David Belasco stage success, "The Heart of Wetona." This is an Indian story by George Scarborough. The reins of direction are in the hands of Sidney A. Franklin. Miss Talmadge's leading man again will be Thomas Meighan.

Constance Talmadge's next Select picture, in which she is presented by Lewis J. Selznick will be "A Lady's Name." This is an adaptation by Julia Crawford Ivers from the famous stage play of the same name by Cyril Harcourt. The piece is being directed by Walter Edwards while Miss Talmadge's leading man will be Harrison Ford.

New York City and its environs furnish the background for Alice Brady's forthcoming Select, "Her Great Chance," and the one which will follow this, on which Miss Brady is at present working, "In the Hollow of Her Hand." Both stories have been adapted and directed by Charles Maigne. David Powell is Miss Brady's leading man in "Her Great Chance," while A. J. Herbert plays the opposite role in "In the Hollow of Her Hand."

According to Julius Steger, who is directing Marion Davies in her forthcoming Select picture, "The Belle of New York," a number of the interiors already have been made, while sites are being selected for the exterior shots. Raymond Bloomer will be Miss Davies' leading man. The comedy role is in the able hands of Christian Rub.

Under the circumstances, and in view of the several productions which each star has ahead of her in her respective Select series, it would be next to impossible to curtail production work and keep abreast with the certain demand for new subjects that will obtain after the releasing ban has been lifted.

Universal Gets Close-Up of President.

Cameramen for the Current Events and Animated Weekly service of the Universal accomplished a feat when they captured a close-up picture of President Wilson marching at the head of the great Liberty Loan parade in New York. They did this in the face of organized preventive measures by a squad of police and in full view of thousands. Some suggestion of what happened is shown in the pictures they got.

The scene opens with a long shot view of the President and his attendants marching toward the camera. As the vanguard draws close there is a visible commotion in the front. Several plain clothes men scurry across the scene, several hands with shaking fingers gesture in the spectator's eyes, and suddenly a motorcycle sergeant "rides" into the picture full on.

The scene snaps for a second, then resumes just as the President is marching past. The cameramen brought back exciting tales of what happened to them in that brief incident.

Genuine Thrills in Pathe's Official "Naval Air Power"

SOME of the most intensely thrilling pictures of the war from a purely personal angle are show in No. 9 of the "Far Flung Battle Line," released by Pathe on October 27. It is called "Naval Air Power," and the photographic stunts accomplished by maneuvering aeroplanes high above the earth are as fascinating as they are amazingly unusual.

Even after four years of warfare in Europe, in which the supremacy of the air has been battled for over many bloody miles of Europe, few people of America realize the extent of Great Britain's naval activities. This reel opens with a statement by Sir Eric Geddes, first Lord of the British Admiralty now in this country, to the effect that "Naval Airmen are the terror of the submarine, and during one month of their patrol around the British coast alone they cover more than five times the diameter of the earth."

The reel concludes with what one enthusiastic critic has described as "the most magnificent scenes we have ever seen in a film." Many of these "shots" were taken from adjacent aeroplanes, and they give thrilling examples of the mammoth machines maneuvering above the clouds showing what trenches look like to an observer 3,000 feet in the air, and some really wonderful evolutions recording the hazardous feat of making a spiral nose dive and landing.

War Review Follows Fighting.

The Official War Review issued by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information through Pathe is keeping surprisingly close to the chronology of events in the European battlefields. The release for October 21, which will be No. 17 of the series, brings the war up to Chateau Thierry, where the Yanks proved their right to be considered among the great fighters of the world. It shows some thousands of prisoners taken by the Americans, and General Pershing inspecting camps where prisoners are guarded.

Hammons Completes Mining Picture.

General Manager E. W. Hammons and the members of the Educational's "Romance of Coal" Company completed West Virginia mining scenes, and arrived back in New York October 12. Director William Parke and the photographers stopping over at Charleston, West Va., two days for some long shots of the Alleghany Mountains. "We were unusually successful," said Mr. Hammons on his return, "in fact, so far as picture-taking is concerned, the coal feature is done."

"The American Spirit" (Hodkinson).

In "The American Spirit" E. K. Lincoln, the star, is surrounded by such capable players as Millicent Fisher, Hayward Mack, Helen Dunbar and Spottiswoode Aitken. Written, directed and produced by W. Christy Cabanne, "The American Spirit," which will be released by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on November 4, offers a new idea in patriotic propaganda.

Cromelin Tells Hirsch Why He Bought "Wives of Men"

IT IS SELDOM a purchaser of a film or the rights to a film tells the man to whom he pays his money why he made the purchase. President Paul H. Cromelin, of Inter-Ocean, is the precedent breaker. After concluding the purchase of the foreign rights to "Wives of Men" from the Pioneer Film Corporation, controlling the picture, he wrote President Nathan Hirsch, of the latter concern:

"You closed the matter of foreign rights to 'Wives of Men' with my company in record time, and I am now going to underscore the reasons. I believe in exporting a film that buyers can advertise well. It is a day of big publicity—advertising is one of the fields in which there has wisely been little war-time conservation. The very title, 'Wives of Men,' lends itself to big publicity, inasmuch as it is a kind of title that will arouse curiosity, and that is a leading object in any advertising campaign. In every foreign country exhibitors are going in for what we Americans call 'easer' advertising, that is, linking a question to the title of the film; in this case, for instance, 'What Sort of Women Are the Wives of Men?' etc.

"I also showed interest in your picture because it dealt with practically every class and condition of society, from the richest to the poorest. That gave it an appeal to all classes of audiences, permitting the cinema man to go after every class of patronage, not omitting the 'highbrows' of his community. The approval of the New York newspaper critics also impressed me, although not until I had seen the picture myself, when I was able coldly to check up these opinions. Newspaper comment doesn't spell perfection, but unanimous newspaper comment is very significant.

"My concluding reason dovetails with my opening one: Campaign book, photographs, lobby displays and posters are unique in an advertising respect. This means much to the people I serve."

While all of the foreign rights were disposed of to Inter-Ocean Mr. Hirsch announces that a number of good American states are still available.

Blackton Story Is of "Work or Fight."

The theme of "Safe for Democracy," the superfeature which J. Stuart Blackton has been quietly producing since he completed "The Common Cause," is Provost Marshal Crowder's famous "Work or Fight" law. It has for its principal locale important shipyards. Anthony Paul Kelly's fictional and fact story woven aroound the idea is expected to prove a surprise. Commodore Blackton also announced that "Safe for Democracy" is scheduled for a pre-release run at a popular Broadway house shortly.

The cast stars Mitchell Lewis as "Big Steve, a knight of the road. Ruby de Remer is leading woman, with Helen Ferguson, Ida Darling, Eugene Strong, Gus Alexander, Aubrey Beattie, John C. Wade, John H. Goldsworthy and Sidney D'Albrook in other prominent roles.

Star, Director and Cast for "Virtuous Wives."

Anita Stewart Returns in Mayer's "Virtuous Wives"

WITH production work completed and the task of assembling and editing well under way, announcement is made this week by Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, of the release soon of "Virtuous Wives," first of the special Anita Stewart productions made by him for distribution through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

"Virtuous Wives" is said to be notable in two ways. It marks the entry into the production field of one of the industry's prominent exhibitors and exchangemen and provides the vehicle for Miss Stewart's return to the screen after an absence of several months.

The production is an adaptation of the now famous story of "Virtuous Wives," by Owen Johnson, who is recognized by magazine and book publishers as the peer of authors whose biggest and most popular works have been founded on New York society life. The published version of the story first appeared in Cosmopolitan Magazine, in which it ran serially for ten months. Shortly before the last installments were printed it was got out in book form.

Introduced to the American public by a national advertising campaign conducted by the publishers of Cosmopolitan, in which space was used on forty-two thousand newsstands, thousands of billboards, and in hundreds of newspapers and nationally circulated magazines, "Virtuous Wives" made its first appearance to the one and one-half million readers of Cosmopolitan heralded as the greatest American fiction story of the year.

Mr. John's central character, Amy Forrester, the young society girl to whom marriage is only an incident and brief interruption in her endless social pursuits, is said ideally to suit Miss Stewart's personality and ability to portray roles requiring refinement and delicate shading.

Mr. Mayer, whose initial effort as a producer is along lines based on well-defined ideas of his own, is not only prominent nationally as an exhibitor and exchange man, but is probably one of the best known and largest of the theatre and exchange operators in New England.

The firm of Gordon & Mayer, of Boston, is controlled by Mr. Mayer and N. H. Gordon. In addition to owning and operating a circuit of twenty-seven of the largest theatres in New England, including houses in Boston, Worcester, Springfield, Rochester, New Haven and Hartford, they also conduct Boston's biggest independent film exchange, under the firm name of the Gordon & Mayer Film Service.

For several years, and during the last year particularly, Mr. Mayer has been keenly interested in the producing branch of the industry. The slow but certain change in the demands of theatre patrons for increasingly better quality in the productions they see satisfied him that a new era of greater features was coming. He explained that one positive indication was the comparatively long runs that many of the bigger special productions have had in New England theatres.

Miss Stewart's leading man in "Virtuous Wives" is Conway Tearle, well known for his work in a score of legitimate stage successes. Hedda Hopper, wife of De Wolf Hopper, portrays the character of Irma Delabarre, a typical member of the feminine branch of the Four Hundred. The part of Rudolph Delabarre, "a poor, spindling thing who finds only in his cups the courage to remonstrate, and then in tones inaudible," is played by Edwin Arden, who was a master character actor.

William Boyd, another New York stage favorite, who is now rehearsing with one of the forthcoming Shubert productions, has the part of Monte Bracken, society's pet. Captain Mortimer, but recently invalided to America as a British commissioned officed disabled by wounds received at the front and who was before the war a London favorite, plays the part of "Jap" Laracy, pal and confidant of Monte Bracken.

Prominent on the American stage, and several of them well known to the motion picture public through their work as principals in a number of recent special feature productions, are Phillip Leigh, Harold Gwynn, Virginia Nordon, Katherine Lewis, Lucille Clayton, Gwen Williams and Master Thomas Carr.

The direction of the picture was in charge of George Loane Tucker, who is now supervising the assembling, editing and titling. It is expected that he will conclude this work by the first week in November at the latest.

Julia Arthur Sees Herself as Screen Edith Cavell

A PRIVATE showing of Plunkett & Carroll's production, "The Woman the Germans Shot," was held last week for the star, Julia Arthur, the director and others connected with the picture. The final cutting and titling of the pieture was completed only recently, after several months of constant work.

Director John G. Adolfi declared the picture had more than come up to his expectations, and declared himself thoroughly satisfied that it would rank with his best screen productions.

John G. Adolfi.

As this picture marked the motion picture debut of Julia Arthur, who appears in the leading role of Edith Cavell, the British Red Cross nurse, the noted star was intensely interested in the showing. She had witnessed from time to time separate scenes of the picture, but seeing it as a whole was a new experience, according to her, and she expressed herself as much surprised by the final result.

"It is very hard for one who is new to motion pictures to realize how anything so connected comes out of the scenes taken in course of production," she said. "During the making of the picture I had very little confidence in my work or in the picture itself. I realized, of course, that the theme was a tremendous one, and I knew that the screen version of it was excellent, but I could not visualize it as a completed thing. I suppose every actress feels this way after her first screen experience.

"I am frank to say now that I think the picture is tremendous, and should do a great deal of good. Director Adolfi's handling is masterful; he has developed to the full all the wonderful possibilities of both the leading character and the story."

In the cast supporting Miss Arthur are Creighton Hale, George LeGuere, William H. Tooker, J. W. Johnston, Paul Panzer, Joyce Fair, George Majeroni and Sarah Alexander. The scenario is by Anthony Paul Kelly.

Hutchison Makes Dive in "Wolves of Kultur"

AT the stage of the scientific development of the photodrama where marvels are accomplished in showing seemingly difficult and dangerous stunts, a real perilous one without faking is to be truly appreciated by the lovers of romantic sensation. Such feat can be seen in "Trapping the Traitors," the third episode of the latest Pathe serial success, "Wolves of Kultur," released the week of October 27. Charles Hutchison as Bob, the hero, makes a dive from the window over a ledge, eight feet in width, and into the water sixty-five feet below.

The serial in the beginning shows the murder by German agents of an old inventor of a wireless torpedo. Alice Grayson, his niece, played by Leah Baird, swears to avenge him, and to recover the plans. She meets with many thrilling adventures, and is rescued from death many times by Bob Moore. As this episode opens, Bob is seen facing detective Barclay's revolver in the country home of Alice, where she had confined Hartman, the master plotter, who had possession of the plans.

This romantic and patriotic play is meeting with success throughout the country. "It is a bugle call to Americanism," says Allen Sangree, well-known editor and author.

Garson Pictures Not Yet Slated.

Harry Garson calls attention to the fact that he has made no definite arrangements for marketing or the distribution of the Blanche Sweet pictures, which includes "The Hushed Hour," already completed, and "The Unpardonable Sin," which is now in the making and which will be ready for release the early part of November. Statements have appeared in some of the trade papers and in the daily press which would convey the impression that the Sweet pictures were to be released on the Select program. This is not true. Mr. Garson has had many flattering offers, but will make no decision until his return east to dispose of the matter. This will not be until "The Unpardonable Sin" is finished.

Bloomer and Rub Play in "The Belle of New York"

JULIUS STEGER, who is directing Marion Davies in her Select picture, "The Belle of New York," paused long enough in his work at the Norma Talmadge Studio Monday to announce the names of Raymond Bloomer and Christian Rub, leading man and comedian, respectively, of the coming production.

Mr. Bloomer, who is well known both on the speaking stage and screen, will have the part opposite Miss Davies, that of the young and idle spendthrift who is "rescued" by the "belle." Last spring Mr. Bloomer played the matinee idol in the Shubert production of "The Squab Farm," which enjoyed a long and prosperous run at the new Bijou Theatre. Previous to this engagement he had appeared in a number of Belasco productions, including "The Good Little Devil" and "Fair and Warmer," in which he had the leading part. Mr. Bloomer has also played prominent parts in screen productions, the most important of which have been with Marguerite Clark.

Christian Rub, the other member of the cast whom Mr. Steger announced, is among the country's foremost character actors and comedians, having virtually starred in all the productions at the Irving Place Theatre for the last three years. Mr. Rub first appeared at the Irving Place in small parts, but was soon elevated to more important roles. During the last three years he played the lead in all of the plays produced at this playhouse. Mr. Steger is enthusiastic over the progress of "The Belle of New York," and predicts that it will be the greatest triumph of Miss Davies' career. "The Belle of New York" will be Miss Davies' next Select picture, and will follow "The Burden of Proof," which is now being distributed.

"Her Moment" Has Coast Debut.

A highly successful first run engagement of "Her Moment" at Clune's Auditorium, Los Angeles, during the first week of October is reported by Manager George J. Ekre, of the General Film Exchange in that city. The seven-part drama written by Samuel H. London, featuring Anna Luther, and directed by Frank Beal headed the week's program. An extensive billboard campaign was part of the picture's debut, and newspaper space was freely used as another advertising angle. The author, Mr. London, took direct part in the various arrangements, the result being that Los Angeles, which had been aroused to a pitch of anticipation, turned out strongly to see the picture.

The same General Film manager announces that John W. Noble's drama, "Shame," with Zena Keefe, has just concluded a favorable first-run showing in Los Angeles.

Sergeant Bryer Describes Post Exchange Theatres

Division Exchange,
Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio.

PERHAPS it would be interesting to some of your readers to know something about movie shows down here. We have two belonging to the post exchanges and a Liberty Theatre. The exchange theatres are operated independently of the Liberty circuit, as they are clearly a local proposition and the profits derived from them go into the company funds of the soldiers.

Both houses have a seating capacity of about 1,400. They are equipped with two Power's 6B machines and a Gold Fibre screen. The buildings are large and roomy and the ventilation is excellent.

The program consists of a five or six-reel feature and a two-reel comedy or a news reel and a cartoon comedy. We do all of our booking direct with the exchanges in Cincinnati and run the best programs within thirty days of release dates.

Our policy is to give the boys the biggest and best subjects obtainable at a standard admission price of ten cents. We change pictures daily and furnish exceptionally good music. There are ten pieces in each orchestra and they are conducted by Jerome Mihalovitch, the former leader of the Metropolitan theatre orchestra of Cleveland, and Courtney Turney, of the Colonial Theatre, of Cleveland.

We have built up a large number of steady patrons who attend the shows almost every night, many of the officers bringing their families regularly. The men enjoy clean dramas and plenty of comedy. They applaud and show lots of enthusiasm when the feature is good and laugh heartily when a good comedy is shown. I find that an audience made up mostly of soldiers is more critical than one would imagine. They know when a feature is poorly directed and they appreciate one that shows good work on the part of the star and the director.

Doug Fairbanks, William S. Hart and Charlie Chaplin are the biggest favorites, while Mabel Normand, Constance Talmadge, Madge Kennedy, Theda Bara, Clara K. Young and Mary Pickford are among some of the women stars that have a good following.

Captain Graham, of New York, who is in charge of the Camp Sherman Exchanges, has recently appointed me as manager of both houses. Before entering Uncle Sam's service I was special representative for Paramount-Artcraft pictures in the Chicago territory. I have made a large number of friends in that district as well as in Michigan, where I opened that territory for Pathe several years ago.

The Flu epidemic, which reached a high stage in camp, has shut us up and we will probably stay closed until there is no more danger of spreading it among our audiences. M. H. BRYER, Sergeant,

Trade Showing for "The Better 'Ole."

A new thing in producer's descriptions of films offered comes to hand in the announcement of Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather's feature, "The Better 'Ole." Notwithstanding the picture is replete with battle, mob and spectacular scenes, the description does not dwell on these easy-to-advertise points. Not as much as a single casualty is reported in the press matter despite the miniature war that was conducted so that the necessary battle color could be obtained. The World has already announced that the rights to "The Better 'Ole" for America had been purchased.

A New York trade showing of the film will shortly be arranged, when the details as to the method of American distribution will also be made public.

Many Flashes and Cut-Backs in Newest Petrova Picture

THE rather long interval between the issuance of the fourth Petrova picture, "Tempered Steel," and the fifth, "The Panther Woman," it is announced is due to the unusual efforts exerted in editing the film and preparing the advertising helps for the latter subject. Because of the nature of the story, dealing with the life of a woman unjustly condemned for murder, an extended use is made of flashes and cut-backs, and the Petrova executives decided that the greatest amount of suspense could be obtained through the expert use of scissors, and it is said that the result has more than justified their hopes as the First National Exhibitors' Circuit reports it is "the fastest moving Petrova production we have yet seen."

An interesting publicity campaign has been worked out for this production, and the special service bureau of the Petrova Picture Company has listed the following accessories: Single columns cuts, 8x10 photos of star, 9½x10 sepia photos, lobby display photos of star 15x20 together with autographed photos, also an artistic twenty-four sheet in black and white and a special electrical lobby display. In addition a complete list of accessories has been prepared by First National through whose exchanges this picture will be issued.

Twelfth "Hands Up" Episode Thrills.

The twelfth episode of "Hands Up," Pathe's Western serial featuring Ruth Roland, and released the week of October 27, is called "The Stranger from the Sea," and is crowded with thrills, including a sensational dive from a cliff into the water by Echo Delane, the heroine, who goes through the adventure with her cowboy protector, "Two Gun."

Pathe Releases Historical Picture.

Pathe announces the release on October 13 of an interesting topical reel entitled "Victory's Triumph," which praises President Wilson and his War Cabinet, showing the admirable manner in which the Nation's Chief Executive has superintended the prosecution of America's war activities—not only since the day in April, 1917, when he approved the declaration of war against Germany, but showing the preparations which were made prior to that time.

"Dancing Excellent Training for Screen," Says Tourneur

DANCING is excellent training for screen acting," declares Maurice Tourneur, and may in time overtop the dramatic stage in fitting a person for the films. There are a number of reasons for this. Dancing requires complete control and flexibility of the muscles. The dancer must be able, by a single fleeting pose, to indicate a variety of emotions. Grace of movement is a requisite. The dancer must be a master of graphic pantomime. Every one of these things are essential elements of screen acting.

"I applied this idea to the casting of 'Woman.' Every feminine member is a dancer. Flore Revalles was a prominent member of the Bakst Russian Ballet; Gloria Goodwin is well known as a modern dancer in vaudeville and in musical comedy; Rose Rolande was a solo dancer with the Morgan Dancers and has her own company of classic artists; Ethel Hallor is a dancer in the Century Roof show; Diana Allen is a dancing member of the Ziegfeld Follies; Lyn Donaldson and Fair Binney are also dancers.

"I found that my theories worked out satisfactorily with 'Sporting Life.' Constance and Fair Binney played the sisters. It was their first appearance on the screen, but their dancing training came in good stead.

No definite arrangements for its distribution have been made. The few privileged members of Mr. Tourneur's staff who have had an opportunity of seeing the production feel sure that "Woman" will mark a milestone in the history of the screen. The releasing arrangements of this and forthcoming Tourneur productions are in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Goldwyn Ready With Rex Beach's Latest

REX BEACH and Goldwyn have completed a Rex Beach "surprise" production, "Too Fat to Fight," and announce it for release in November, simultaneously with the inauguration of the financial drive of the Young Men's Christian Association, the Young Men's Hebrew Association and the Knights of Columbus.

"Too Fat to Fight" is a dramatic picturization of a story to appear in the mid-winter issue of a magazine, and it represents the first dramatization of the activities of the American organizations, including the Salvation Army, that are backing up the American soldiers in the fields of France and Belgium.

Frank McIntyre is the featured player in the production, which was directed by Hobart Henley. S. L. Rothapfel, who scored a directorial success with his Marine Corps picture, "Flying with the Marines," directed certain of the military scenes.

One of the great advantages of this production for exhibitors is that it will at once receive the benefit of the hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of advertising and publicity that the Y. M. C. A., Y. M. H. A. and K. of C. will get in the daily newspapers of the nation during their drive.

"Whose Little Wife Are You?"

Picture patrons are promised twenty minutes of simon pure hilarity in the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "Whose Little Wife Are You?" Charlie Murray, Wayland Trask and Mary Thurman are the featured players, but the cast includes many other well-known persons, among them Eva Thatcher, Joseph Baldy Belmont and Alice Lake, and before the action is over pretty nearly everybody in the Sennett roster of comedians appears. Even the redoubtable Ben Turpin and Charlie Lynn have "bits," as do Vera Steadman and all the Sennett girls, the famous dog Teddy, and also that ever-popular actress, the clever feline comedienne Pep.

Twin Cities Enthusiastically Greet "The Yellow Dog"

THE patriotic principles in "The Yellow Dog" have been enthusiastically received in the twin cities—Minneapolis and St. Paul.

J. A. Burnquist, Governor of Minnesota, has accepted the position of generalissimo in the state-wide drive on yellow dogism. Secretary of State Julius A. Schmall is acting major general.

In Minneapolis within a month Anti-Yellow Dog Clubs, with a membership of over two thousand, have been organized in the public schools. The work of these youngsters has already been noticed.

J. Edward Meyers, whose election to the office of Mayor of Minneapolis is practically assured, is the active head of the Minneapolis Clubs with the title of colonel. The city has been divided into sixty school districts, and the clubs of each ten districts are placed under the supervision of a prominent business man who bears the title of "major," and are indirectly connected with the Department of Justice; two colonels and a lieutenant colonel, who is the divisional organizer and secretary, comprise the general of the colonel staff.

In St. Paul, Commissioner of Education Albert Wunderlich has taken up the Anti-Yellow Dog Club organization work with considerable enthusiasm. He has followed the Minneapolis idea of dividing the city into districts and appointing majors as sectional chiefs.

Four High School principals are working as majors, and Carl Dresher, deputy school commissioner, is acting chief of staff.

Commissioner Wunderlich expects to develop a division of three thousand members within a month. Mayor L. C. Hodgson, of St. Paul, a sterling patriot, poet, and enthusiastic boys' worker, is backing the St. Paul Anti-Yellow Dog Campaign.

Plans for the organization of Duluth, Minn., are now under way and a full report of the campaign in that city will be made shortly.

Third Pyramid Production.

The Pyramid Productions, whose first two features, "Inside the Lines" and "The Man of Bronze," starring Lewis Stone, have proved successful beyond the expectations of the producers, now announce a third picture, "The Charm of Nasoni," which will soon be ready to put upon the market. Doraldina, star of the production, is also author of the story upon which the picture was based. Dancing, which is part of the daily life of Doraldina, plays a great part in furthering the plot of the story. The heroine finds herself on a cannibal island in the South Seas, where she is taken up by the savage inhabitants of the island, who hail her as their long promised goddess of the sea. Doraldina's success in "The Naulaka" has earned her commendable praise from the critics, and hearty approval from the picture patrons.

Vitagraph Players Work on Blue Ribbon Productions

VITAGRAPH'S production of "The Lion and the Mouse," featuring Alice Joyce, will be a most lavish program production. Miss Joyce will be surrounded by a exceptionally strong cast, and production has already been started. It will be released on the regular Blue Ribbon program as one of the eight productions in which Miss Joyce is scheduled to appear during the coming year.

Earle Williams, who returned from the Coast after an absence of ten months, has begun work on "A Gentleman of Quality," by Frederick Van Rensselaer Day, under the direction of Wilfrid North. Mr. Williams came East especially to make this picture in Eastern surroundings, and he has with him a popular company, including Agnes Ayres and Florence Deshon.

Harry T. Morey, whose "The King of Diamonds" was released last week, is in the midst of work on a Blue Ribbon feature having the tentative title of "Dan LaRoche." He is working under direction of Paul Scardon.

Corinne Griffith is working under direction of Kenneth Webb. She has also been out on location for the better part of two weeks making scenes for a new Blue Ribbon feature, which will bear the title of "The Adventure Shop." The story was written by "Bud" Fisher, creator of "Mutt and Jeff."

Gladys Leslie, under direction of Joseph Gleason, is almost finished work in "The Beloved Imposter," a quaint drama.

At the Vitagraph's Hollywood studio Bessie Love, under direction of David Smith, is reported to be well advanced in making the picturized version of Grace Livingston Lutz's novel, "The Enchanted Barn," which will be the second of her Blue Ribbon feature releases.

Airplanes Exploit "America's Answer."

Detroit witnessed the most remarkable exploitation of a motion picture in the history of the industry as a preliminary to the opening of "America's Answer," the U. S. Official War Picture, at the Majestic Theatre, Monday, October 14. Twenty airplanes from Selfridge Field circled over the city, dropping paper bombs advertising the film. The unique method of publicity created a sensation.

Keenan Brings His Best to Making of "The Bells"

FRANK KEENAN, though he followed in the footsteps of such an eminent star as Henry Irving, gave to his stage interpretation of Mathias in "The Bells" such graphic, minute, subtle characterization that he created a new life and interest in the play which brought to the British player so much fame. And to the vivid screen version a Pathe extra-selected star photoplay, which will be released the week of October 20, is added subtle atmosphere and a psychological quality in action, lighting and development that were impossible within the limitations of the stage. In it Mr. Keenan considers that he has given the very best of his talent.

Realizing the broader scope of the picture as a medium, Mr. Keenan worked to produce effects, some of which are hypnotic in the appeal they exercise on the beholder. Where in the spoken play the profoundest appeal was by the sound of a voice which rises from the tortured soul of the murderer, here in the picture it is a silent play of emotion calling for the supreme art of the player to "get it across." Mr. Keenan brings to what he calls in this play the supreme test a long and varied schooling in the drama.

"The Unconquerable Spirit" (Pathe).

"The Unconquerable Spirit," No. 18 of the Official War Review released by Pathe October 28, brings significantly to the beholder the declaration of President Wilson that "the Allied Commanders in the field will dictate the terms of an armistice, which can only be considered after the enemy has ceased his atrocities on land and sea." This splendid series of war pictures, in scenes, in action and in grim, set feeling, gives the beholder a thrill of the unconquerable spirit.

All through these views is expressed the purpose to win, and the course of the Huns' flight is shown—where he leaves his gun and munitions in his headlong haste, with the Yankees close upon him harrassing his rear guard. The camera shows that along the Oise the captured guns were swung about, and German shells were poured into the ranks of the Kaiser's retreating hordes.

Eight Reels for "Unpardonable Sin."

Marshall Neilan, who is directing Blanche Sweet in "The Unpardonable Sin" on the Coast, reports this production rapidly nearing completion. The picture, when finished, will be in eight reels, and from all reports will be the best thing both star and director have done.

In the cast besides Miss Sweet, who plays Deminy Parcot and Alice Parcot, are Matt Moore as Noll Winsor, Wallace Beery as Colonel Klemm, and Mary Alden as Mrs. Parcot. The picture will be finished about November 1, and, after a private showing to Government officials and the press, will probably be put on for a run in one of the New York theatres.

This will be decided by Harry Garson as soon as he returns East with the prints, and it will also then be announced as to how the Blanche Sweet pictures are to be released.

"The Common Cause" Sent to Exchanges.

Although the definite date of release for "The Common Cause" has not been fixed the Vitagraph Company, through which Commodore J. Stuart Blackton's drama is to be offered, is going ahead with its plans for an extensive campaign in the United States and Canada. For two weeks artists have been engaged in making sketches for the paper and advertising material that is to be supplied to exhibitors.

Advance prints on the production have been shipped to all Vitagraph exchanges, and it will be available for showing to exhibitors this week.

Hiller & Wilk Handling New Francis Ford Serial

TO HIS already lengthy list of serials, beginning with "Lucille Love," Francis Ford has added another, the "Silent Mystery," which is being handled by Hiller & Wilk, Inc. The title explains the character of the story, which is in fifteen episodes, and featured with Mr. Ford is Mae Gaston and Rosemary Theby. In addition, there is an unusually large cast composed of favorites who have appeared in Mr. Ford's former productions, which are too well known to motion picture audiences to necessitate their being enumerated here.

The editing and supervision is in the hands of John B. Clymer, the well known scenario writer, while Peter Gerald, who has had considerable experience with Francis Ford in the staging of the mystery elements of his previous productions, is the technical director.

Mr. Ford is a firm believer in building up big situations in his serials with a plausibly developed plot, and in the present serial he is said to have outdone his former efforts in producing novel and mysterious situations. The story of the "Silent Mystery" has to do with the theft of a jewel of great monetary and sentimental value, as it is held sacred by a sect in Egypt. It is called the "Eye of the World." Its first theft is from an Egyptian mummy case; an American woman secures it, and, just as her daughter is being wedded to a wealthy suitor, a seemingly detached hand appears, grasps a revolver and fires a shot which lands in the head of the bridegroom. Among the guests is the famous American detective, Phil Kelley (the character which Mr. Ford has also portrayed in previous serials). Within an hour Dr. Phillips, a wealthy scientist accredited with having created a soulless creature over which he lost control, is found dead. After this, numerous entanglements follow, and many amazing situations have been contrived by the director who is said to have used to full dramatic effect the fact that so many of the wedding guests are under suspicion of the murder.

Dalton Brothers' Exploits Furnish Subject for Film

PRACTICALLY everyone has heard of the Dalton brothers, who, a number of years ago terrorized Oklahoma, Indian Territory and Kansas by their daring bank and train robberies. Their exploits form the basis for a sensational feature film in six parts, which is being released by the Southern Feature Film Corporation, 1476 Broadway, New York. Emmett Dalton, who is secretary and general manager of the company, is featured in this production, entitled "Beyond the Law," which is being offered on state rights basis.

This picture is described as a real Western picture, full of appealing human interest featuring a man who made history before moving pictures were known. The scenario is the work of William Addison Lathrop; the production was directed by Theodore Marston and photographed by Robert A. Ollsson. Prominent in the cast, in addition to Mr. Dalton, are Virginia Lee, who plays the part of young Emmett Dalton's sweetheart, and Harris Gordon, who portrays Dalton as a youth.

Mr. Dalton, who is now a respected and law-abiding citizen, when interviewed, appeared averse to talking about his exploits. He stated, however, that he was not a newcomer in the motion picture field, as for the past ten years he had been delivering lectures in various parts of the country accompanied by motion pictures. He started in this work soon after being pardoned by Governor Hoch, of Kansas, in 1907, after having served a portion of a life sentence imposed in connection with an exploit in Coffeyville, Kansas, wherein two banks were robbed, and in the melee which followed four civilians as well as four members of the Dalton gang, including two of his brothers, Bob, the leader, and Frank, were killed, while three others of the band were wounded. A full account of the exploits of the Dalton brothers appeared some time ago in the Wide World magazine.

The Southern Feature Film Corporation is composed of North Carolina capitalists; C. A. Turner, of Gastonia, being president, and C. D. Gray, of the same-city, vice-president and treasurer, while R. D. Craver, the well known film man, is one of the directors. Mr. Dalton stated that it will be the policy of the company to continue making feature productions for the state rights market, all of which will be real Western stories.

Says Production Curtailment Enhances Value of Reissues

ACCORDING to an official of the W. H. Productions Company during the period while many of the companies have temporarily shut down on production the reissue is proving a friend in need, and in this connection they call attention to the fact that their products have been culled from a vast number of productions made during the past few years, and that the new productions which will soon be released through independent exchanges represent the pick of the entire output. These subjects are released in four new series as follows: Twenty-eight single reel Liberty Keystone Comedies, twenty-eight single-reel Eagle Keystone Comedies, fifteen two-reel Union Kay-Bee Western dramas, and fifteen two-reel Columbia Kay-Bee Western dramas.

Regarding the excellent business that is being enjoyed by the W. H. Productions' reissues many favorable comments are being received from large exhibitors and exchangemen throughout the country. R. C. Cropper, of the Bee Hive Film Exchange, Chicago, says: "Aside from their purely conservation values these reissues are certainly a great success. Our exhibitors all over the state are more than satisfied, and from them I gather that their patrons also are."

State Rights Sales Reported This Week

ARROW Film Corporation reports the following sales: To W. B. Towne Photoplay Company, St. Louis, for Missouri and Kansas, "The Perfect Model," "Her Aviator," a re-issue of four Allison-Lockwood subjects, "My Husband's Friend" and "The Woman's Law"; and to James V. Ritchey, "The Perfect Model" for Maryland, Delaware, District of Columbia and Virginia; also "Huns Within Our Gates" to J. J. Goodstein, Denver, for Utah, Idaho and Montana.

Greiver Distributing Corporation announce that arrangements have been completed for the distribution of the Ford Educational weekly through the following exchanges: To Peerless Film Service, San Francisco, for California, Nevada and Arizona; to Southwestern Film Corporation, Dallas, for Texas, Arkansas and Oklahoma, and to First National Exhibitors' Circuit for Louisiana and Mississippi.

Suggests "Wives of Men" as Good Embargo Feature

WITH the releasing and production of new pictures stopped for several weeks, exhibitors throughout the country are turning their attention more than ever to state rights attractions, particularly those which can be played for several days. In this connection, the Pioneer Film Corporation invites the attention of theatre managers to its latest attractions, "Wives of Men," as being a feature that can be booked for a run, as demonstrated by its two weeks showing at the Casino, one of the prominent Broadway theatres in New York.

Says an official of the company: "It can be shown as a special attraction for a week or more in most theatres, and even in the smaller theatres it is good for a run of from three to five days. This is a proposition that should be of interest to all theatre managers whose houses are still open. Here is an opportunity for exhibitors to put over something big. The feature stars Florence Reed in one of her greatest emotional roles. The story is one of deep and general interest, and the paper and advertising helps available all combine to be of great help to exhibitors at the present time."

Full details as to how and where bookings for this production can be made may be obtained from offices of the Pioneer, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York.

Unusual Cast Appears in "Deadly Sins."

The famous McClure series of "Deadly Sins," now being released in condensed two-part form by the General Film Company, form a series for exhibitors of all classes. The episodes are titled as follows: "Envy," "Pride," "Passion," "Wrath," "Greed," "Sloth" and "The Seventh Sin," but they are not allegories or morality dramas. Each one is said to be packed with heart throbs, thrills, flashes of comedy and human interest. Each of the stories deals with an entirely different theme and could be presented as special two-part film attractions, irrespective of their value as a series.

From the point of publicity, the McClure productions have received countryside advertising in several of the leading magazines and newspapers and the fiction version of the "Deadly Sins" also appeared in periodicals with large circulation.

Added to this is the popularity and reputation of Shirley Mason, the leading figure, together with the large following enjoyed by the five prominent stage stars who appear with her: Ann Murdock, Nance O'Neil, Holbrook Blinn, H. B. Warner and Charlotte Walker.

ESTABLISHES EMERGENCY FILM STATIONS

Northwest Film Trade Board Helps Exhibitors to Secure Pictures if Their Shows Are Delayed in Transit

By S. J. Anderson, 807 Leary Building, Seattle, Wash.

AS an effective agent of co-operation between exhibitor and film man the Northwest Film Board of Trade again comes to the front, this time with a plan of establishing emergeney stations at convenient points throughout the territory where exhibitors may get extra films if late trains, wash-outs, or accidents of any kind should leave him without a show. A list of towns where these stations will be established has been prepared by a eommittee, but they will not be decided upon finally until business has returned to its normal routine, after the influenza epidemic has been checked.

Ben Abbott Victim of Influenza.

The Spanish influenza epidemic struck close to the heart of all motion picture men of Washington State when it claimed as one of its victims Ben Abbott, manager of the Dream Theatre at Sedro Wooley. Mr. Abbott was a young man in his early twenties, but had been managing the Dream for several years. He came to Seattle during the last days of September to bring his mother, who was ill with pneumonia, to a hospital. The mother died a few days later, and the son was striken with influenza, which quickly developed into pneumonia. He succumbed after only two or three days' illness, following his mother to the grave in just one week. He is survived by his father, a brother, and a sister, the latter being now ill with influenza.

Mr. Abott was a frequent visitor on Seattle's Film Row, and the film men were always glad to greet him. They all agree that he was a good business man and a pleasant companion at the same time, and they felt keenly his going.

Epidemic Stops Showings of Griffith Film.

It was announced from the office of the DeLuxe Feature Film Company, which, with the All-Star Features of San Francisco, controls the Griffith film, "Hearts of the World" in the Western territory, that all "Hearts of the World" road companies had been called in before the closing of the towns through the territory.

J. A. Brehaney, general manager of "Hearts of the World" for the DeLuxe Feature Film Company and All Star Features, is in Seattle conferring with Mike Rosenberg, president of DeLuxe, on the subject of their road companies.

Louis Rosenberg, of the DeLuxe Company, presented himself for draft call at Portland last week, but was given final exemption on account of poor pedal extremities.

"Finger of Justice" Breaks Another Record

"The Finger of Justice," or "The Fall of the Barbary Coast," as it has been advertised through the Northwest, has broken another house record within the last two weeks. John Hamrick, who, after showing it for four record weeks at his Rex Theatre in Seattle, leased the Star in Portland for an indefinite run of the picture there, has wired Miss Grace Sanderson, who is handling her production in this territory, that it has broken all records at the Star during the two weeks that it has been there.

Makes Film of 2,000 Sailors.

At the beginning of the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign in Seattle a motion picture was taken of 2,000 sailors at the University of Washington training station as they marched out on the big parade grounds and formed the words, "Buy Bonds for Liberty." The picture was taken from an airplane by Frank A. Jacobs, who makes the Star-Liberty News Weekly for the Star newspaper and the Liberty Theatre. It was used to create enthusiasm for the campaign by being shown on the screens of the various motion picture theatres.

Cleveland Trade Letter

By M. A. Malaney, 206 Sloan Building, Cleveland, O.

Many Exhibitors Welcome Order to Close.

MOST of Cleveland's motion picture theatres welcomed the order to close up for two weeks, or until the epidemic of Spanish influenza abates. The theatres received notice that they would have to close Saturday night, October 12, but at a meeting held October 11, Health Commissioner Rockwood gave them one day longer, so that they closed Sunday night.

"We are glad of the order for several reasons," said one first-run exhibitor. "We will have a little rest, and a chance to catch up in our work. We have had good weather all summer, and many had no chance to take a vacation on that account. Now we can take the rest."

Another manager who runs a neighborhood house said:

"We might just as well close without hollering if it will prevent the spread of the disease. Our business has fallen off because of the scare, and we will be better off for closing."

The manager of a small downtown all day house said:

"This will give me a chance to redecorate my lobby and maybe the theatre. Business has fallen off, and, when I open, my theatre will look like new."

Following the notice from the health department the State Board of Health at Columbus issued an order to all officials to close theatres, churches and other places of assembly wherever the influenza has made its appearance.

There were very few towns which had no cases, but they continued to keep the theatres open, the mayors notifying the managers that as soon as a case or two was discovered they would have to close.

The Exchange Managers' Board of the Chamber of Commerce held a special meeting, and passed a resolution dealing with the situation.

This letter says: "Any theatre closed by authorities Monday, October 14 (as in Cleveland), using a picture on Sunday, October 13, wherein contract calls for more than one day, exhibitor shall pay full price named in contract, and shall fulfill the balance of contract commencing on the day of the reopening of his theatre. All companies have agreed to release no new subjects after October 14 for four weeks, although this period may be modified later.

As regards the payment of help in theatres and exchanges some are paying them and some are not. Most theatres laid off their help for the period, retaining only a few to make repairs, clean, etc.

Cleveland Short Items.

Ira West, of the Appolo Theatre, Oberlin, in Cleveland, October 12, says there were no influenza cases there, and he would continue to run until some were discovered.

Up to October 13 no order had been issued by the Toledo Board of Health to close up the theatres.

Messrs. Greenwald and Cohn, film exchange men, turned their idle time during the epidemic to selling theatres. They disposed of the Daisy to G. M. Sanders.

Joe Deutsch, Sun Theatre, staged a one-man wrestling match at the Winton that certainly entertained the exhibitors.

John Alexander Needham, our old friend Jack, was in town representing the Bureau of Films Committee on Public Information.

Strand Gets Them Coming Early.

A peculiar thing about the movie-going public in Sydney is that, according to Harry Beaman, manager of the new Strand Theatre (J. M. Franklin's new house), the people of that town do not like to go to the theatres early. They prefer to come about eight o'clock and thus they will have to be educated to starting early and coming to two performances. The line-ups at the Strand Theatre, however, show that the public is very willing to learn.

Canadians Like Gerard's Film.

The Imperial Theatre, St. John, N. B., has had splendid business on "My Four Years in Germany," and the picture has been received with great enthusiasm. It ran for four days and the contract had one more day to run when the Board of Health ordered the theatres closed. A deputation of motion picture men met the Board of Health to ask if the week's contracts might not be carried out, but the request was not granted and the managers expressed their willingness to fall in with the orders for the general good.

While at the California Theatre she raised a neat sum for the Navy Red Cross clubhouse on lower Market street. She visited some of the shipyards, and also spent some time in the suburban city of Oakland, her first visit there since a little girl. Her cameraman, Charles G. Improving Pathe's Office.

While the moving picture theatres have been closed during the influenza epidemic in Baltimore, the department of the Pathe Exchange, 210 North Calvert street, where paper, slides and photos are kept, has been greatly improved by Louis John Frederick, who now acts as shipping clerk, booker and cashier. The improvements have cost the company very little and will save them money. Mr. Frederick sold some of the obsolete paper, after discussing the plans with Nat Glasser, the manager of the exchange, gaining $7, and with this money, bought the wood, nails and paint he needed and went to work. He took down one set of unnecessary shelves, and rearranged the others in sections and compartments, doing his own carpenter work. The sections are for slides, paper and photos and each compartment is numbered. A book which he has made out gives the key to the films in each number. "It will save money and time for the company," said Mr. Frederick," and I can always be certain that no one will take photos and paper and forget to tell me about it, they will never get mixed up. It will also give him a complete check of the stock. Nat Glasser has also been very much on the job.

"AMERICA'S ANSWER" SHOWN IN DETROIT

Presentation of Second Official War Film at the Majestic Impressive and Beautiful—Turn Thousands Away

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Michigan.

SUNDAY, October 13, was a gala day for the premier of "America's Answer," the second official war picture, which opened a two weeks' engagement at the Majestic Theatre, Detroit. It was simply impossible to handle all the people who came and it assures the Majestic of crowded houses throughout the balance of the engagement.

Almost as notable as the picture is its presentation. When the orchestra plays Victor Herbert's "America Fantasia" the lights go down and a portrait of President Wilson is unveiled above the proscenium arch. There is an elaborate prelude, its scenes being placed just behind the front line trenches where the Knights of Columbus, Y. M. C. A. and Salvation Army have refreshment stands. Here soldiers, Red Cross, K. of C., Y. M. C. A. and Salvation Army workers take part. The Majestic Trio sing, assisted by a quartet and a large chorus, and the special effects include a vision of an old lady knitting while "Just Break the News To Mother" is sung. Throughout the whole arrangement of the song numbers the scenic effects were carried out under the personal direction of M. W. McGee, managing director of the theatre.

Besides the feature, the Majestic is showing a "Happy Hooligan" cartoon (Educational) and "American at Play" (Ford).

The formal opening took place Monday night at eight o'clock, there being one performance only. Governor A. E. Sleeper and staff, Mayor Oscar Marx of Detroit, and many city offcials, representatives of the army and navy and some Washington visitors were in attendance. Raymond S. Harris, of the committee on public information, was in charge of the ceremonies. Abner Larned, of Detroit, delivered a patriotic address. Mr. Harris and Manager McGee have arranged for special nights throughout the engagement. Tuesday was Y. M. C. A. night, Wednesday, Knights of Columbus night, and Friday, Dodge night, for officials and their employes. There will be a Ford night, Packard night, Shipbuilding night and so on throughout the two weeks.

On Saturday, October 12, preceding the opening, and through the efforts of M. W. McGee and representatives of the United States Government, thirty-six aviators from Selfridge Flying Field, Mt. Clemens, "aviated" to Detroit and dropped 100,000 heralds over the city. Incidentally, they did all sorts of daring stunts in the air, thrilling several hundred thousand people in all parts of the city. The heralds were printed on both sides and advertised the engagement of "America's Answer" at the Majestic, and urged every man, woman and child to see it. It was the biggest advertising stunt ever known to Detroit and it was the kind of advertising that money could not buy at any price. Think what it means in the way of publicity—thirty-six aeroplanes dropping down advertising circulars for a motion picture theatre.

Caruso Visits the Broadway-Strand.

Caruso gave a recital in Detroit on October 15. It so happened that the same week he was in Detroit the Broadway-Strand Theatre was showing first-run "My Cousin," Caruso's first photoplay. When notified of the attraction he went there Monday afternoon with several of his secretaries, bought parquet seats at the box office without in any way making himself known. It wasn't long, however, before the entire first-floor audience knew of his presence, and all eyes were turned that way. After viewing the picture he was taken into custody by Phil Gleichman, managing director of the theatre, who chatted with him for some time. In connection with the engagement of this picture at the Broadway-Strand, Eddie McGrath, the soloist, rendered the Neapolitan folk-song, "O Sole Mio," in Italian—this being one of Caruso's favorite songs. Eddie learned it, by the way, from a phonograph record by Caruso.

Whirlwind Campaign on Fox Specials.

Last week Manager M. S. Bailey, of the Fox Exchange, had all his salesmen in Detroit. Each man had a certain territory, and was instructed to specialize on the big Fox productions, such as the "Big Six," "Queen of the Sea," "Prussian Cur" and "Why America Will Win." The total result has been that scarcely a theatre in any part of the city is now without some Fox bookings.

Paul Bush Now Universal Manager.

Paul Bush, recently manager of the Goldwyn Exchange in St. Louis, Mo., has been appointed manager of the Detroit Universal Exchange. He is a former resident of Detroit.

Ward Is Sales Manager for Jewel.

W. D. Ward will hereafter devote his entire time as sales manager for Jewel Productions at the Detroit Universal Exchange. The switch is to relieve Mr. Ward of any office responsibilities, and to permit him to devote his entire time to sales work. Under his management the Detroit Universal Exchange had a very successful administration, so much so that it took first prizes for August and September, having the biggest increase in business and the best collections. Joe Friedman continues in complete charge of the office, operating and service departments at the Detroit exchange.

Abbot Has Successful Trip.

Harry Abbot, manager for the Educational, returned Monday, October 14, from his first trip through the state, which proved a successful one. He secured contracts from the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids; Censor Theatre, Albion; Garden, Marshall; Majestic, Jackson; Garden, Muskegon, Fitzpatrick & McElroy Circuit.

World Shipper Captures Ten Germans.

Word comes from across the sea that Frank Huber, of Company C, 125th Regiment, 32d Division, and former World shipper at the Detroit exchange, has been recommended for the Distinguished Service Cross as a fitting recognition of valorous conduct during the fighting at Chateau Thierry. In the face of the murderous fire of the Fourth Prussian Guard, the Kaiser's favorite regiment, Frank captured ten Huns. For his work Huber was taken out of the ranks and sent to the officers' training school, where he is now studying.

Charles Seaman Signs for Goldwyn.

Charles Seaman, of the Majestic Gardens, Grand Rapids, has signed for the entire Goldwyn output for the coming year. He will play them at the Majestic Gardens and the Strand.

Simons Returns from Business Trip.

Elwyn M. Simons, of the new Family Theatre, Adrian, has returned from a trip to Chicago. He took his family along, combining business with pleasure. He went to the Windy City principally for the reason to get new ideas on how to put on special stunts and novelties. He also bought a series of patriotic decorations and seasonable decorations for such occasions as Hallowe'en, Thanksgiving, Christmas, etc. Mr. Simons is often spoken of among Michigan exhibitors as a "big time showman in a small town."

Foley. Mr. Moule formerly managed the Alhambra for Mr. Kunsky. Fishman, manager of the Detroit branch. Mr. Charnas recently purchased from $25,000 to $50,000 worth of film for the three Standard exchanges. The Standard offices have been hard hit in Cleveland and Cincinnati on account of most of the theatres closing in those territories.

Cincinnati News Letter

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

No Loan Films Shown in Cincinnati.

WHILE Cincinnati went "over the top" of her Fourth Liberty Loan quota at the end of the second week largely without the aid of the Liberty Loan films, it was a matter of great regret among exhibitors and film men that these pictures could not be shown in the city to enable the surplus over the quota to be as large as possible. As the closing edict went into effect at the beginning of the second week of the campaign, however, both the second and third weeks of the drive were conducted not only without the aid of these special pictures, but without the stimulus and encouragement which Liberty Loan slides and Four-Minute speakers had been given regularly in the theatres. The speed and enthusiasm shown by the city in subscribing its forty-odd millions so promptly, therefore, was considered more praiseworthy.

Exhibitors Clean House During Epidemic.

Many Cincinnati exhibitors, either on their own initiative or following the suggestion of the health authorities, have been taking advantage of the period of inactivity to give their houses a thorough cleaning and airing. The extremely cool weather of September had resulted in the theatres being kept rather well closed during that month, but the desirability of plenty of fresh air was strongly emphasized by the influenza outbreak, and, in consequence, many houses have been thrown open and aired from top to bottom. This was true, for example, of the three big downtown houses operated by Manager I. L. Libson—the Strand, the Walnut and the Family. These three houses had their regular fall cleaning a few weeks ago, but during the closed period Mr. Libson put his staff to work at a still more thorough cleaning and airing.

Ruth Virginia Libson Dies.

Ruth Virginia Libson, the little four-year-old daughter of I. Libson, manager of the Walnut, Strand and Family theatres, and a prominent figure in moving picture circles, died on October 6, after a brief illness. Mr. and Mrs. Libson have received heartfelt expressions of sympathy on their loss from a wide circle of friends.

Labor Films to Be Shown.

The theatres may be closed, but the moving picture film is still on the job doing a generous and effective share of war work. Plans have just been perfected by which films showing the importance of labor's share in the war, and the necessity of steady and regular work by men employed in plants engaged in Government contracts, will be shown throughout this section of the Ordnance Department, comprising Southern Ohio and Southern Indiana, Kentucky, Tennessee, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, Florida and Alabama. Over 600 plants in this immediate vicinity will see the pictures, which are designed to stimulate the patriotic interest of the industrial workers and induce them to stick to their jobs with the feeling that they are as much in the war as the men in the trenches.

Incorporates Bennett Theatre Company.

Logan, W. Va.—The Bennett Theatre Company has been incorporated here, with a capital stock of $10,000, for the purpose of operating a moving picture theatre. B. C. Harris, Charles Bennett, Jos. Logan, H. H. Farley and S. M. Jeffries are interested.

Philadelphia Trade Letter

Film Men Push Loan Despite Influenza.

DESPITE the epidemic of influenza which has generally demoralized the picture business for the present in Philadelphia, great interest has been shown by the exchange managers in behalf of the Fourth Liberty Loan. Max Milder, chairman of the exchangemen's committee, reports that he has positive assurances that $52,450 worth of bonds have already been disposed of by the various managers and through his own efforts. John Clark, manager of the Paramount and Artcraft Exchange, announced that his employees had subscribed to the extent of $4,500, and there was more coming. Jack Levy, of the Fox Exchange, states that nothing short of $20,000 worth of subscribtions is expected to be his share from his exchange. In fact, the Triangle, World, Masterpiece, Goldwyn, General, Select, Peerless, Pathe, Kleine, Sherry and Vitagraph exchanges are all working with full steam ahead. Frank W. Buhler, chairman of the Liberty Loan Motion Picture Committee, of Philadelphia, when interviewed last week, expressed himself as entirely pleased with the way the men of the motion picture industry were working for the Liberty Loan despite the many draw backs.

Exhibitor Advertises in Street Cars.

Alexander Boyd, of the Arcadia Theatre, has entered into a contract for advertising in the street cars of Philadelphia. An artistic design displaying the Arcadia Theatre has been made for the regular sized cards, with sufficient space to allow the announcements of the weekly program to be printed in the centre of the special cut. Mr. Murphy, who will have charge of this car advertising, has arranged to have each week's program appear regularly.

Arranges Patriotic Window Display.

Harry Saunders, of the Swaab Supply House, is credited with having arranged the most artistic and patriotic window display along Film Row.

FOX LEASES MINNEAPOLIS SHUBERT

Will Have It Refurnished and Redecorated and Will Install Largest Pipe Organ in the City

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

CONTRACTS were signed recently whereby the Shubert Theatre in Minneapolis will be operated this season as a moving picture house by the Fox Film Corporation, of New York City.

The new lessee will assume control of the house after the present indefinite run of "Hearts of the World." The Fox Company is operating in the principal cities of the United States a chain of thirty-six theatres, the Shubert making the thirty-seventh in the circuit.

John Zanft, general manager of the Fox Circuit, was in Minneapolis to make plans for the complete refurnishing and redecorating of the theatre.

Contracts have already been let for the erection in the Shubert of what will be the largest pipe organ in the city. The orchestra pit is to be raised, and a sounding board placed back of the players that the volume of sound may be increased. A big symphony orchestra will be engaged and a complete program of interpretative music is to accompany each picture.

Both exterior and interior of the Shubert will have new and novel lighting effects, and a general decorative scheme is to be employed similar to that of other playhouses of the Fox Company. The projection booth will be removed to the gallery to provide more seating space on the parquet floor.

Mr. Zanft announced that work on the refurnishing and redecorating of the theatre would be started at once. Installation of the new pipe organ will begin as soon as material and men are secured.

L. M. Scott holds the original lease for the Shubert, as well as the lease for the Metropolitan Theatre.

With the Griffith production, "Hearts of the World," halted at the close of its sixth week by the influenza epidemic order, it is impossible to state at present just when the Shubert will be opened as a Fox theatre.

General Crowder Thanks Lochren.

William A. Lochren, manager of the Lochren Slide and Film Corporation, of Minneapolis, has received a personal letter from Provost Marshal General E. H. Crowder expressing thanks and congratulations for Mr. Lochren's accomplishment in making 17,000 feet of patriotic film in a period of three days, and of distributing them to all parts of the United States in a week. The films were used in moving picture houses throughout the country to impress upon all men of military age the importance of registering for the selective draft on September 12. A copy of General Crowder's letter follows:

"I have been informed of the first rate work done by you in preparing and distributing the films for securing publicity for Registration Day.

"The task of manufacturing seventeen thousand films within three days, and of distributing them promptly to all quarters of the United States within a week, was one which might well have been deemed impossible; but your skill and energy proved to be equal to the task, and it was achieved in record time. I am sure that this method of publicity must have been of especial value in fixing the day in the popular mind, and I wish to express my thanks for your share in the task.

"Yours faithfully,

"(Signed) E. H. CROWDER,

"Provost Marshal General."

Mile of Smiles for France.

Minneapolis boys and girls, several hundred strong, posed before the moving picture cameraman at Loring Park that their daddies "over there" might see them in "reel life" in the "Mile of Smiles for France" film which will soon be sent to the trenches by the Women's Committee of the Council of National Defense. Another section of film taken the same day by William H. Lochren shows a happy throng of soldiers' sweethearts fondly waiting at the gateway of Minneapolis for the boys to come back. A group picture was also taken of one hundred Minneapolis mothers of marines in service. Babies born since their fathers went to France were also photographed. Their daddies will see them (on the screen) for the first time before Thanksgiving.

Winona Theatre to Open.

The new Broadway Theatre recently constructed at Winona, Minn., by H. A. Rolbiecki opened this week. The theatre has a seating capacity of 600. It is finished in golden rod brick, and is modern in every respect. Mr. Rolbiecki opened the Strand at Winona two years ago, and also operated the Dream Theatre in that city. Both of these houses proved money makers.

TO ENLARGE PATHE'S BOSTON OFFICE

Growth of Business Necessitates Extensive Alterations—Reorganize and Increase Sales Force

By Robert N. Howe, 80 Summer Street, Boston, Mass.

ACCORDING to Manager Stanley Hand the space now occupied by the Boston office of the Pathe exchange is not large enough to handle the business that has been built up in New England, since the exchange has been under his management. Due to this feat extensive alterations are to be made and within a week the Pathe exchange will have double the room to work in that they formerly had.

The office as it is at present is of an oblong shape. Manager Hand's office is in the foreground on the right hand side as you enter the doorway on Isabella street. The office is divided into two sections by a counter which extends the entire length of the room. The right hand side of the counter is vacant, and the side to the left is occupied by the general office force. The second floor consists of the exhibitors' room and the poster department.

When the alterations are completed, Manager Hand's office will occupy the space formerly taken up by the booking department. The elimination of the counter will allow double the working space the office force formerly had, and the booking office will be removed to the front of the exchange. The exhibitors room and the poster department will remain unchanged.

Manager Hand has reorganized his entire force of salesmen, and has taken on three new men in the past week. Joseph Mack, well known in film circles of New England as president of the first motion pictures exhibitors' league in Massachusetts, and as former manager of the Hub Theatre, has been assigned to cover Western Massachusetts. Mr. Epsteln, another well known to exhibitors of New Hampshire and Vermont, will cover the entire state of Maine. A. M. Hersee has been appointed to replace Jack Jennings, who recently joined the navy and who is now stationed at the United States Naval Training Station at Hingham, Mass.

Mr. Jones leaves a widow and child. He was a 32d degree Mason and in addition to his connection with the Olympia Theatre was associated with the Gordon-Mayer Film Corporation.

The funeral was held October 10 at his home, 43 Richards street, Brighton, with services at the Nedham cemetery.

Grand Opens with Gerard's Film.

THE GRAND THEATRE, at Bluffton, Ind., which had been closed since April 4, when it was damaged by fire, was reopened October 1 with a three-day exhibition of Gerard's film, "My Four Years in Germany." Many compliments were received by the management on the attractiveness of the house.

The building has been entirely remodeled, reconstructed and redecorated and now compares favorably with any of the large theatres in that section of the state. The new projection equipment is one of the most complete in the state. The booth is absolutely fireproof. All in all the theatre is one of which the management may justly feel proud.

New American Pleases Its Patrons.

Hard luck hit the American Theatre, at Terre Haute, Ind., a pretty stiff jolt last week. The theatre was reopened on Friday afternoon, October 4, after having been closed for more than a month for improvements, and three days later was ordered closed because of the influenza epidemic.

On the afternoon and night of the reopening all of the old patrons—and a number of new ones—of the theatre flocked to the place to see what had been done during several weeks of darkness. After the "Oh's" and "Ah's" and "Isn't it pretty" of admiration drawn by the view of the beautifully, artistically and expensively decorated walls and ceiling, the new chairs and comfortable manner of their arrangement and all that, patrons settled down to enjoy the antics of Mabel Normand in the Goldwyn comedy, "Peck's Bad Girl."

The whole theatre was changed during the closing period and now presents one of the most completely equippel motion picture theatres in the Middle West. Shannon Katzenbach is the genial manager of the theatre.

To Show "America's Answer" in Evansville

Arrangements have been completed by a division of army registrants at Evansville, Ind., for an exhibition there about the first part of November of the second government war film, "America's Answer." Otto Behrens, president of the organization of registrants, closed a contract this week with J. G. Conner, government representative for the picture. The proceeds from the exhibition of the film will be used to furnish the hospital for soldiers and sailors that has been established at the Boehne camp, at Evansville.

Moore and Reed Open the Paramount.

"The Paramount" is the name of the new motion picture theatre that has been established at Kokomo, Ind., in the room under the Elks headquarters. The large crowds attending the opening of the theatre last week tell better than words how the film devotees of that city appreciate the efforts of the managers—Merle Moore and Ira Reed—to give Kokomo another amusement place of unusual merit.

A. F. Brentlinger Ill.

A. F. Brentlinger, manager of the new Liberty Theatre at Terre Haute, is confined in a hospital at Fort Wayne, Ind., suffering from the effects of an abscess which developed recently. Manager Mason of the Orpheum Theatre at Fort Wayne, which is also controlled by the company which Mr. Brentlinger represents, has assumed the management of the Terre Haute theatre during Mr. Brentlinger's illness.

Influenza Demoralizes Film Business.

THE Spanish influenza epidemic, which has resulted in the closing of all motion picture houses, theatres, schools and churches, and, in fact, prohibits any public gathering, has had a very serious effect upon the moving picture industry. Not only has it affected business conditions the past week, but quite a number of picture men have felt the effects of the disease.

Dale P. Hill, Kansas and Oklahoma traveler for the World Film Corporation, is seriously ill at the hospital with the influenza.

The release date on "America's Answer" has been set back to November 11 by the Government. The former date was October 28.

Eddie Carr, Kansas traveler for the William L. Sherry Service, is ill in Augusta, Kansas, suffering from a slight attack of influenza.

The William L. Sherry service has called its travelers in from the territory in view of the fact that all picture houses are closed by order of the health boards.

Mrs. L. Reynolds, wife of Mr. Reynolds, the representative of the American Film Company in this territory, died recently from pneumonia, contracted after an attack of influenza.

Fred Savage, of the De Luxe Theatre, Hutchinson, Kansas, is ill with influenza.

Mantzke Goes to Mutual in Minneapolis.

I. F. Mantzke, for the past year manager of the Kansas City branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been transferred to the Minneapolis Exchange. Minneapolis is Mr. Mantzke's home city, and, therefore, the transfer comes as a highly welcome move. L. B. Brown, who has been acting as assistant manager of the St. Louis Mutual Exchange, is in Kansas City taking charge of the local office. Mr. Brown has been associated with Mutual since its beginning, and has had a wide experience in the game, having held practically every possible office in his eight years of experience.

Many Theatres Install Photoplayers.

Quite a number of moving picture theatres in Kansas City have recently installed American photoplayers. The J. W. Jenkins Son's Music Company, of this city, has taken the agency for the instrument, and it seems to be rapidly earning a favorable reception. Some of the houses to install photoplayers are: The Elliott

Despite Epidemic Exhibitors Push Loan.

DESPITE the closing of the theatres Buffalo exhibitors have organized a number of units to hold outdoor meetings in different sections of the city, so that audiences which in the past were reached in the theatres regarding the Fourth Liberty Loan will still get the important message. The units are operated under the direction of Walter Hays, chairman, and the following men, chiefly exhibitors, are assisting him: Main and Utica streets, J. Michaels; Lafayette square, Samuel Carver; Genesee and Jefferson streets, L. Isenberg and C. Higgins; William and Jefferson streets, M. Michaels; West Ferry and Grant streets, H. Greenman; Elmwood avenue and West Ferry street, E. Weinberg and M. Lewis; Seneca street, near Abbott road, G. Haney; Central Park section, E. Winegar.

Entertainers are provided at each location. Musicians from the theatres play and speakers make short Liberty Loan talks. Despite the epidemic the crowds are very satisfactory. Moving picture house managers, operators and ushers sold bonds to the amount of $3,600 at their Loan rally at Lafayette square recently. Webb's band, of Tonawanda, assisted them in their entertainment.

Film Men Sell $3,700 of Bonds.

The film men and their staffs conducted a second Liberty Loan meeting at Lafayette square and sold $3,700 worth of bonds. Pictures and vaudeville were given. The committee in charge was Charles A. Taylor, John M. Sitterly, Samuel Carver, F. S. Hopkins, M. Cohen, T. R. Gardiner, E. Eisenberg, Samuel Geddes, W. Swartzemeyer and William Kohler. The film exhibitions were conducted nightly at the square during the campaign.

Picture Men Aid Four-Minute Speakers.

Clarence MacGregor, who had charge of the Four-Minute Men who spoke at the moving picture theatres and elsewhere throughout the city during the last Liberty Loan campaigns, is conducting an outdoor drive of Loan speakers during the present campaign. The film men are cooperating with him in every way in supplying him with pictures, cars for carrying the speakers, etc.

Epidemic Cancels "Fit to Fight" Show.

On account of the epidemic and the closing order which resulted, "Fit to Fight," the Government health film, was not shown at Elmwood Music Hall, October 16, as formerly scheduled. Arrangements for the show had been made by Dr. Walter S. Goodale, representing the state department of health.

EXCHANGES CENTRALIZING IN ST. LOUIS

Plaza Building Now Home of Several Distributing Companies—Structure Taking on Appearance of Film Center

By Mary Moore, 6035 Kingsbury Boulevard, St. Louis, Mo.

THE Plaza Building in St. Louis gives promise of becoming the Film Building in the near future. The Standard Film Company, or the American-Standard, as they call it now, under the direction of Barney Fegan, this week moved into beautiful quarters in the Plaza Building, and, together with the Vitagraph, the Hoddup, the Select and a number of others, is making the place look like a real film centre. It is understood that a number of the other large exchanges are contemplating similar moves.

Tompres Buys the Duchess Theatre.

The Duchess Theatre on Grand avenue, near Washington, was sold during the week by Sam Bromley to George Tompres. This theatre should be a good investment, as it is on the Grand avenue "white way," within two blocks of Film Row, and a block from the New Grand Central and Liberty theatres.

Charles Vollmar Resigns.

Charles Vollmar has resigned as manager of the Columbia and Strand theatres, two of the Cella string, and has been supplanted by Dave Russell, who already handles the booking and virtually the management of the Park, King and Shenandoah theatres. Mr. Vollmar will leave this week for Belleville, where he will manage the Lyric, a vaudeville house.

Thieves Rob Mogler of $2,700.

Joseph Mogler, president of the Exhibitors' League, had a thrilling experience during the week. After closing the Bremen and Mogler theatres last Monday night, October 14, he took his wife to an exchange office and delivered two films. Riding back in his car to his home he let his wife precede him into the house, while he placed the car in the garage. He then went into the house, where two masked bandits had his wife at bay at the point of revolvers. He, too, was ordered to stand quietly by while the bandits relieved him of several hundred dollars, a part of the night's receipts at one of the theatres. They also stripped his fingers and those of his wife, of diamonds, and left, after threatening to kill either if aid was summoned.

After the departure of the thieves, Mr. Mogler found that they had rifled and cracked a safe in one of his rooms, and taken $800 in cash. The evening cost Mr. Mogler about $2,700 all told.

McKean Succeeds Thomas at Fox.

George McKean, formerly manager of the Paramount-Artcraft office, has succeeded D. M. Thomas as manager of the Fox Exchange in St. Louis. Mr. Thomas left the Fox Company recently with the intention of going to New York. He left the week the Fox Company opened its beautiful theatre, the Liberty, in St. Louis. This theatre was in charge of M. Marcus, who came out from New York to direct its opening. Mr. Marcus was supplanted last week, and is expected to return to the East.

Floyd Lewis Returns to General Film.

Floyd Lewis has returned to the General Film office. He has been for some time with the United Picture Theatres Company as local manager, and was with the Hoddup-Towne Photoplay Company.

To Explain Film Trade Board System.

J. Ray Weinbrenner, counsel for the Film Board of Trade of St. Louis, has been called to Kansas City to explain to the exchange managers of that city the system by which the St. Louis Beard of Trade sprang into existence and worked out a satisfactory and successful organization. There are plans afoot also for similar organizations in Chicago, Indianapolis, Memphis and Dallas. The Kansas City Board of Trade will probably affiliate with the St. Louis Board at once after its organization.

The St. Louis Board has virtually wiped out "bicycling" in this district, and has done much to rid the game of the obnoxious system of C. O. D. by parcel post under which certain unscrupulous persons "hooked" a number of the exchanges for freight charges.

Baker Pushing First National Pictures.

Sid Baker, who was censor in Kansas City up until a short time ago, and who was formerly manager of the Foursquare offices in St. Louis, has assumed a sort of managerial charge over the Grand Central film district surrounding St. Louis, and is working under Manager Sievers to build up the First National Exhibitors' Circuit business in this territory. Reports state that he has been most successful in his initial steps.

How Gardiner Syndicate Gets Its Business.

In forwarding the accompanying photograph, T. R. Gardiner, of the Gardiner Syndicate, vouchsafes the information that it gives one of the reasons why this concern, of which he is the general manager, is enjoying a large volume of business. The gentleman to the left is Mr. Gardiner, and he is being assisted by John M. Sitterly, sales manager of the Gardiner Syndicate, while the gentleman who is being thus "induced" to sign a contract is James Wallingford, of Buffalo. Said contract calls for first-runs for the Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance," at Keith's and the Hippodrome theatres, Buffalo.

Though it has been in business less than six months, having purchased the interests and offices of the Veribest Photoplay

Corporation, 47 West Swan street, Buffalo, the Gardiner Syndicate is one of the most progressive state rights concerns operating in upper New York State and enjoys a large share of the business. This company specializes in short subjects, the majority of which are reissues, including Mack Sennett Keystones, Chaplin reissues, Fatty Arbuckle reissues, and Shorty Hamilton reissues, as well as Billy West comedies, together with William S. Hart and Bessie Barriscale feature reissues, and is releasing the new Gaumont serial, "The Hand of Vengeance."

On account of the increase in business the Gardiner Syndicate expects within a short time to open a branch office in Albany to better serve exhibitors in that section, and John Sitterly will be in charge.

ALLENS TO BUILD ON DANFORTH AVENUE

Permit Granted to Erect Big Theatre on an Important and Growing Toronto Thoroughfare

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ont.

THE Toronto city architect has issued a permit to Jule and J. J. Allen for the building of the proposed new theatre at 31 Danforth avenue, one of Toronto's coming thoroughfares. According to the permit, the building alone is to cost $60,000.

With the granting of this sanction has come the end of an agitation on the part of clergymen of the Danforth district, numerous exhibitors of Toronto, nearby property owners, the civic property committee, and others, to prevent the erection of this and any other new theatres in Toronto for the remainder of the war. The Ontario Government heard several deputations, who protested against the issuance of a license for the new house, and the property committee of the city decided by a vote of 6 to 3 to memorialize the Ontario Government with the same idea in mind. The situation was discussed by several meetings of exhibitors who desired to protect the interests of the three theatres now in operation on Danforth avenue.

In an interview, T. W. McGarry, provincial treasurer, stated that the Ontario Government had nothing to do with the construction of theatres, and that as long as persons comply with the law in respect to amusement places the Government has no option but to grant the license.

"All the Government can do," said Mr. McGarry, "is to regulate the kind of entertainment, electrical appliances, exits and entrances."

At its meeting on October 9, the Toronto City Council refused to oppose the erection of one or more moving picture theatres in the city, and a day or two later the city architect granted the permit for the erection of the new Allen house. This theatre will be situated near an important intersection and traffic at this point will be very heavy in the near future through the completion of a mammoth concrete viaduct which will connect Bloor street with Danforth avenue, making the two streets one long artery of traffic across the northern part of the city.

Two Toronto Film Men Die of Influenza.

Up to Saturday, October 12, two deaths from influenza, pneumonia or kindred causes among Toronto moving picture men had been recorded. One victim was Maurice Kauffman, of the Famous Players' Film Service, Ltd., brother of Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Monarch Film Company, Toronto. It was officially reported that the deceased had succumbed to influenza.

Another victim in Toronto was Frederick R. Harris, manager of the Carlton Theatre, who died of pneumonia in St. Michael's Hospital on Wednesday, October 9. The funeral was held privately from his late residence, 510 Ontario street, on Saturday, October 12. Among the floral remembrances was a wreath from the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association of Ontario.

Would Close Theatres to Save Coal.

The opening guns of a verbal duel between the exhibitors and some of the churches of the Province of Ontario with respect to a question as to whether the churches or the theatres should be closed if the coal situation becomes acute this winter have been fired. The first volley was fired when the convention of the Epworth League of the Methodist Church, in session recently at Stratford, Ont., voted to ask the Government to close the theatres to conserve coal, if necessary.

The answer came from Manager James Crang, of the Oakwood Theatre, one of Toronto's brightest and best suburban theatres, who offered the use of his theatre rent, heat and light free for Sunday church services, so that there would be no need for the opening of one or more churches in the Oakwood district at all this winter. It was pointed out by Mr. Crang that his theatre was heated by oil-burning furnaces, so that the coal question really does not affect him at all.

Another salvo now comes from Dr. Richardson, part owner of the Crown Theatre, Gerrard Street East and Broadview avenue, Toronto, who points out that the churches pay no taxes of any kind, while the theatres pay all kinds of taxes, real estate, war, business, etc., two license fees, and other assessments. He has asked the local newspapers to make a note of this point when touching upon the matter from an editorial viewpoint.

It is also pointed out that almost one-quarter of the moving picture theatres in Toronto have been using wood, soft coal or oil to heat the buildings.

Stephenson Postpones Trip.

Charles Stephenson, general manager of the Exhibitors' Distributing Company, Toronto, planned to make a trip to the Canadian West for the purpose of opening branch offices of the company at Calgary, Alberta, and possibly at Vancouver, B. C., but he postponed his trip indefinitely on account of influenza epidemic developments in Ontario.

A Unique Stunt to Increase Patronage.

For the purpose of securing better patronage for the first evening show the Dreamland Theatre, Edmonton, Alberta, has adopted the plan of admitting the first one hundred adults after 6 p. m. each evening free of charge. Thanks to this stunt the house is always quite full for the first show, and the pictures are not shown to empty seats. The net result has been a good attendance right through to eleven o'clock. The Dreamland charges 15 cents for admission during the evening, and 10 cents for matinee performances.

The New Allen an Up-to-Date House.

The projection equipment of the new Allen Theatre, 5038 Sherbrooke street west, Montreal, includes two Power's Model 6-B motor drive projection machines, a Model D-50-50 Hertner Transverter, an Acme Gold Fibre Screen and Speer carbons.

The theatre seats 1,100, all on the one floor, and there are about 150 chairs in the loge boxes, which are located at the rear of the theatre. A paneled glass windshield protects the patrons from draughts from the front doors. Ventilation is taken care of by a large fan in the roof. A heavy wine-colored curtain, with gold trimmings, hides the screen when not in use.

After an opening run of three weeks with "Hearts of the World" the new house went on its regular policy of three changes of program per week. The theatre was closed on the following day, however, on account of the order from the authorities to close all theatres. Afternoon prices will be 10 cents and 15 cents, war tax included, and the night price will be 25 cents, war tax included, with the loge seats 35 cents. There will be no Sunday shows, although it is the general practice of Montreal picture theatres to operate on Sundays.

Rosedale Theatre Will Save Coal.

The Rosedale Theatre, 803 Yonge street, Toronto, is the first Toronto theatre to come out with a definite announcement in local newspapers that it has arranged to save hard coal during the coming winter. The manager declares that the consumption of hard coal this winter will be kept within twenty per cent. of the quantity used last wintor, and that the house will be heated mainly with wood and soft coal. The Rosedale is one of the oldest theatres in Toronto.

Dallas News Letter

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

Exchanges to Aid Small Town Theatres.

DALLAS film exchange managers, confronted with a situation unparalleled in the history of the moving picture business, are nevertheless planning for the future.

The local film men believe that financial ruin stares some of the exhibitors in little country towns in the face as the result of the protracted closing of their theatres. They are afraid that many of the small picture shows will not be able to reopen when the influenza epidemic has passed.

Accordingly they are planning to investigate every theatre which does not reopen, and to offer their full assistance, so far as is consistent with good business principles, to exhibitors who may have been hard hit financially. They expect to aid in getting many exhibitors on their feet.

Owens Sick with Influenza.

Manager Harry Owens, of the Dallas Paramount branch, has been seriously ill with Spanish influenza, but now is able to be back at his office.

Raise Influenza Quarantine.

A note of optimism for motion picture exhibitors is sounded in the announcement that at Fort Crockett, Galveston, the Aviation Repair Depot and Love Field, Dallas, the influenza quarantine has been raised, and community shows permitted.

Breaks Consecutive Weeks' Run Record.

Griffith's "Hearts of the World," completing its third week at Hulsey's Hippodrome, was one of the star films missed by Dallasites owing to the closing order. This is the first time on record that any film has ever run three consecutive weeks here and drawn record-breaking crowds.

Doctoroff a Victim of Influenza.

Abe Doctoroff, salesman for the Paramount for many years, died at Palestine, Texas, October 7, of Spanish influenza. He is survived by a widow and son. Dallas film exchange managers attended the funeral, which was held in Dallas.

Wilson Succumbs to Influenza.

James B. Wilson, owner of the Gem and Jewel theatres at Sherman, Texas, died of Spanish influenza, October 8. Mr. Wilson was one of the best known exhibitors in North Texas. Burial was at Sherman.

Texas Exhibitor Dies in New York.

News was received in Dallas, October 9, of the death of Ben Myer, of the Queen Theatre, Tyler, Texas, which occurred in New York. The pioneer Texas exhibitor had gone to New York for a vacation. While there he contracted Spanish influenza and died at a sanitarium. He is survived by a widow and daughter.

Gauze Masked Soldiers See Picture Show.

While Liberty theatres and picture shows in Y. M. C. A. huts are generally closed at all cantonments and army camps in Texas, the soldiers are allowed in most instances to view picture shows in the open air.

At Camp Bowie the soldiers are permitted to see films screened out of doors, with the provision that they sit three feet apart and wear gauze influenza masks. The picture show audience presents a strange effect scattered across the greensward with their noses and mouths muffled.

At Camp Dick, the officers concentration camp at Dallas, the soldiers under quarantine have asked local film exchanges to aid them secure amusement. Films have been lent the camp, and nightly open air picture shows are being given at the camp band stand.

Exhibitors Who Visited Dallas.

Only a few exhibitors visited Dallas film row during the second week in October. They included M. E. Wooldridge, Wigwam Theatre, Athens; A. F. Chavey, Hippodromo, Commerce; H. H. Elliott, Amuseu, Corpus Christi; W. R. Farman, Dixie, Bryan.

"SHOULDER ARMS"

Charley Chaplin in His Second Million-Dollar Comedy Exceeds Himself in Originality and Effectiveness.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

CHAPLIN has lined the clouds of war with silver festoonings of laughter in creating his second comedy feature for the First National Exhibitors' Circuit. He has carried glee into the trenches, and made waves of laughter glint from the deceptive sides of camouflage.

"Shoulder Arms" is a greater inventive comedy than "A Dog's Life," and the new merrymaker will be remembered when the "dog" episodes are forgotten. Comedy becomes a classic work in the field of picture production in this newest Chaplin—for there is as much skill and inventiveness in the conception and fulfillment of Chaplin's comedy ideas as there are in the development of intense dramatic elements in photoplaying.

The new Chaplin is divided into laughter "zones," and every episode is worked out to the last ounce of its comedy possibilities. From a raw recruit in the hands of a drill sergeant, Chaplin passes to his bunk post-haste when the "awkward squad" is dismissed, and dreams that he is "over there." Life in the trenches begins forthwith, and the discomforts of war are changed into locations for joyous laughter. Chaplin has here developed an entirely new routine of "stunts" rushed into sequences of utterly ridiculous comicalities.

Our "hero" bungles his way into a series of scrapes only to immediately bungle himself out again. When rain floods the trenches and water stands shoulder deep in the dugout, Chaplin there develops a routine of comical situations that would make a dyspeptic discard his pepsin. When Chaplin charges into the enemy trenches and affects a triumphant capture new drolleries develop, with the Hunzollern military squad the victims of Chaplin's inventive genius.

Next there is dangerous work to be done, and Chaplin, to his immensely humorous discomfiture, is selected from a squad of hundred per cent. volunteers. He goes into enemy territory on scout duty, and we find him now disguised as a stump, with his arms serving as vengeful instruments of defense and attack—the lively branches of a dead tree trunk. Fritzie is dealt with severely in surprise attacks, and, when a fat Hun takes up the chase, Chaplin shows how cleverly he is camouflaged.

There is a chase through a thickly treed bit of forest. Chaplin zig-zags to escape the shots fired at him by the pursuing Hun. While the spectator searches for Chaplin in one scene, even with the Hun to help hunt, the comedian is so well disguised that there is amazed surprise when he jumps down from a stump in the foreground and discloses himself to view. This "chase" feature embodies a succession of continuous laughs.

Ultimately captured, Chaplin makes ready escape, and typifies the Irishman's flee to exactness: "When you put your finger on him he is not there!" This, indeed and forsooth, is the photographic fact in the case. As Chaplin goes on with his wild cavortings the scene cuts into a ruined house, shell-shot, with a defenseless heroine war-shocked and in pitiable distress. Chaplin becomes a hero, thwarting the Boche at a dozen turns in the comedy adventure.

There is no end of fun in this devastated cottage, and when all of the laughs have been whipped out of the situation the scene changes to German headquarters, where the Kaiser, the Crown Prince and Hindenberg are expected. Chaplin and the girl he has rescued from the Hun in the wrecked shack have considerable fun with the ordinary soldier, and when the "All Highest & Co" arrive the Kaiser and his kind get plenty of bruising, to be finally captured, with Chaplin running the royal automobile right into the Allies' camp with its load of Hunzollerns.

In all this Chaplin never stoops to a single vulgar act. Right at the finish he plants a sturdy kick right where everybody in the audience will want to extend their own compliments—and so, despite opportunity, Chaplin restrains his favorite method of comedy impulse until the right time and place. Chaplin has never done anything in such artistic low-comedy cleverness as "Shoulder Arms." It is a comedy classic.

It is worthy of remark more than incidentally that Syd Chaplin, brother and manager of the star, works all through the film as Charley's first aid and comedy assistant. Syd proves that Charley was right in his earlier claims that of the two brothers Syd was not such a bad cut-up after all. Syd is Charlie's "bunkie" and pal all through the new comedy, and contributes in no small degree to the results.

"THE IRON TEST"

First Two Episodes of Latest Vitagraph Serial Promise Plenty of Excitement.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

CIRCUS life is the background against which the deeds of daring in the new Vitagraph serial, "The Iron Test," is shown. Like all the other continued-next-week stories produced by this company it was written by Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady, and has the same jump-and-ginger situations and appeal to the seasoned taste of the confirmed serial fan. Constructed to supply the needs of the spectator who craves the tabasco of excitement in his movies and cares not a whit how or where it is put into his mental desert, "The Iron Test" starts off on the dead run, and the heroine and her sweetheart receive quick assurance that the villains of the plot are going to serve their dastardly deeds red hot and frequent, to borrow from the style of the man who writes the subtitles.

In Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway the serial has two actors whose supply of nerve will never fail them. This important point being satisfactorily settled, it is next in order to state that both leading members of the cast are uncommonly adroit at the kind of acting required. As Bert Forde, a nervy young chap, who is thrown suddenly on his own resources, and joins a circus as a rough-rider and expert rifle shot, Antonio Moreno brings his likeable personality and knowledge of screen art into full play. Carol Holloway as Edith Paige, a well bred young girl, who is the lady rider of the show, shares honors and dangers with her co-star.

The first episode is called "The Ring of Fire." Bert's cousin is the chief villain of the story. The rough rider's grandfather has just died and left ten millions. If Bert is out of the way this money will come to Craven. With this incentive the cousin bends all his energy to invent some sure method of death for his grand-uncle's heir. He tries to poison him, burn him to death and crush him under a centre pole. In the second episode, which is called "The Van of Disaster," Bert and Edith, who are traveling in a covered wagon, are sent at headlong speed toward the edge of a cliff a thousand feet high. A character know as the Red Mask adds mystery to the story.

"WHEN DO WE EAT?"

Paramount Presents Enid Bennett in a Comedy by Gardner Sullivan.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THE title has nothing to do with the story except as a starting point. Some barnstormers of exaggerated type—the real ones are funnier—are playing in "Uncle Tom's Cabin." Miss Bennett is in the cast, and very hungry, when the sheriff appears. She escapes, enters the car of a freight train, sleeps there on some straw, wakes in the morning, and is so frightened by a tramp in the car that she jumps the train. She rolls down an embankment uninjured, and makes for a farm. The action now becomes farcical, some very theatrical farmers, not the real kind, chasing the girl about, and eventually arresting her on no charge whatever. A Keystone marshall takes her to a farce jail, and all this is very stupid. She is released for no reason, and becomes a member of the household of an old lady who keeps boarders. In this household are two crooks waiting to rob the village bank and its young and innocent cashier. The crooks are operating under a Chicago leader known as Uncle Tom, and here Mr. Sullivan devised the elements of a very clever comedy.

In order to rob the bank there is to appear an expert at opening safe combinations known as "Velvet Mary." The crooks expect "Velvet Mary," and realize that she will only make herself known to them by indirection. If the director of this comedy knew as much about "indirection" as the gifted playwright it would have developed along more entertaining lines. The thieves are led to believe that the hungry little actress is "Velvet Mary" by entirely natural means, and some flashes of real comedy appear. Wherever there is theatrical exaggeration, artificiality and no revelation of human nature there is stupidity, largely that of direction, but there is a good laugh or two in the final courtship between the young cashier, impersonated by Al Ray, and Miss Bennett, some redeeming glimpses of true humor which operate as a saving grace and may put the play over.

"LAFAYETTE, WE COME!"

Leonce Perret Has Made a Dignified Appeal for Franco-American Unity of Spirit.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THERE is need for Leonce Perret's presentation of "Lafayette, We Come!" in these times of melodramatic "Kaiser killings" on the screen. Perret seems to have based his appeal upon the glorification of Franco-American unity of purpose and spirit. He has accomplished his purpose in dignified manner, made all the more convincing through the omission of the slam-bang assault upon Kaiserism that has been exploited so generally in earlier propaganda features.

In making this war picture Perret has pictured war just enough to carry the point, and so deftly has he turned the scenes that there is as much patriotism and propaganda in "Lafayette, We Come!" as there is in the more flamboyant screen "strafings" the Hunzollerns have received at the hands of the moving picture industry in many other phases of the screen-war.

The production is elaborate in detail. There are some extremely ornate settings, and what there is of the story has been developed by skillful direction. While the plot is rather slight, it is direct, and serves well to hold in interesting continuity a series of events that move rapidly and with entertaining results.

E. K. Lincoln gives a fine, manly presentation of the heroic lead, and Dolores Cassinelli is adequate to the requirements of a role that exacts little save fleeting vistas of her attractive personality. She is a pretty girl, and pleasing in method and manner. "Lafayette, We Come!" is sure to please the average run of picture audiences, and its purpose in more closely cementing the cordial relations that are increasingly advancing in the spirit of friendship between the two great Republics will be effectual to a degree.

As a new side light on the war the Leonce Perret production will be hailed as something in the manner of an innovation. It should prove a profitable investment for exhibitors.

"EVERYBODY'S GIRL"

Vitagraph Production of O. Henry Story with Alice Joyce Will Make Many Friends.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

SOUTH AMERICA and the Far West were favorite fields for character and plot with O. Henry, but a number of his best stories are about New York and the people that are continually striving to rise above their lowly surroundings. "Everybody's Girl," produced by the Vitagraph, with Alice Joyce as the heroine, and directed by Tom Terriss, is not only a bully bit of romance, but it turns the light of O. Henry's sympathetic soul upon a phase of New York City life that explains why so many young girls drift away from home influences when forced to live in one room and meet their men friends on the streets.

Florence is a pretty, healthy-minded young working girl who shares a room in Brick Dust Row with her friend Eila, and goes out and sits in the park when she wants to meet her beau. Eila is forced to do the same thing. The parlor of their rooming house has been sublet, and there is no other place to go. Both girls have picked up chance acquaintances and gone to the theatre with them without being made to pay too dearly for their fun. One day, on a Coney Island boat, Florence starts a flirtation with a wealthy young chap who turns out to be the owner of Brick Dust Row. Their romance ends happily, but Florence almost loses young Blinker, when she confesses about her chance acquaintances. He is finally made to see that it is mostly his fault in not giving the lodgers the use of the parlor.

There are other characters and incidents in the story that strengthen it dramatically. The doings of Bill, a gang leader, who is saved from the police by Florence, and who becomes her protector, and the husband of Ella, are among the most interesting features. With the exception of an entirely unnecessary and badly directed fire episode on the boat the picture is expertly produced.

Alice Joyce makes it easy to believe in the character of Florence, and that the young millionaire has not done a rash act in marrying her. This is an achievement of which any actress might be proud. May Hopkins as Ella, Walter McGrail as Blinker and Percy Standing as Bill are the principal members of a uniformly competent support.

"SNOBS."

Reissue of Jesse L. Lasky Production Starring Victor Moore Contains Many Laughs.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

PRODUCED three years ago by Jesse L. Lasky and now reissued on the Paramount program, "Snobs," a five-part screen comedy taken from the stage play of the same name, again reveals itself as an amusing satire on the American love of a title. None of the situations need be given any serious thought. Victor Moore, who created the star part on the stage, plays the milkman who becomes an English Duke in the spirit of broad farce and gets many laughs for his efforts. Anita King as Ethel Hamilton, Constance Johnston as Laura Phipps and Ernest Joy as Phipps are the leading members of a competent support.

"THE WOMAN WHO GAVE."

Evelyn Nesbit, with Her Son Featured, Appears as Star of a William Fox Six-Reeler.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

IF old George Underwood can be induced to register proper restraint, the task of reporting Evelyn Nesbit's William Fox debut will be herein accomplished without any unmanly tirades against a woman who is "trying" with such talent as she possesses to pick up a good living for herself and child. Fate has buffeted Miss Nesbit about with sufficient uncharitableness to restrain any impulse to hand her another "wallop"—so it might just as well be said, in such mildness as we may command, that if Evelyn Nesbit were plain Mary Smith she would not be on the Fox program of stars.

Despite the prevalence of Smiths throughout the country, it is not likely that Mr. Fox would make a picture for the principal purpose of capitalizing the ancient name with a view to enticing all the Smiths into theatres where "The Woman Who Gave" might be shown. Evelyn Nesbit, one is free to admit, is a name with more ticket-selling possibilities than Mary Smith—even if she were given the middle name of Jones for extra measure.

"The Woman Who Gave" has evidently been devised to make Evelyn Nesbit's picture path smooth and easy to travel. If there are any demands upon the lady's abilities in the melodramatic chain of coincidences Isola Forrester has devised, Miss Nesbit fails to respond. She bears a fixed expression of determination to bear the abuse the scenarioist has heaped upon her with a calm and fixed purpose to get the six reels over with.

Notoriety counts when properly commercialized and exhibitors who play "The Woman Who Gave" will very likely find themselves cashing in on Evelyn Nesbit and her featured son, Russell Thaw, to the full extent of public curiosity. And one violates no secret of the trade to print the conclusion that exhibitors are in business for profits. Such being the case—and who is there to deny?—William Fox offers in "The Woman Who Gave" a promising medium for much moneymaking.

"THE GYPSY TRAIL"

Second Bryant Washburn Paramount Release Utilizes Prominent Stage Success.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ROBERT HOUSUM'S admirable stage play, "The Gypsy Trail," with its charming romance and finely written dialogue, has been turned into scenario form by Julia Crawford Ivers, and produced by Paramount, with Bryant Washburn as the featured player. The screen version departs widely from the original. Leaving out the question of which is the better story, and judging the picture version solely on its own merits, a just verdict must credit the Paramount production with many entertaining qualities.

Two chaps are in love with the same girl. One of the young fellows is a diffident son of wealth whose want of anything approaching cave man dash is very much against him. The other suitor is a breezy young reporter who is hired by his rival to assist in an elopement, when the society chap concludes to carry off his lady love, with his grandmother as a chaperon. Michael Rudder, the reporter, is intrusted with the responsible task of piloting the car containing the lady to the home of grandma, where Edward Andrews, the impatient eloper, is awaiting her.

During the trip Michael's quick way of making love takes the young woman's fancy by storm, and she is ready to throw over Andrews. But the reporter is not of the marrying kind. He runs off to a gypsy camp, a wild strain in his blood drawing him to life on the road. When Andrews finds out that Frances cares for Rudder he goes after him, and his generosity so appeals to the girl that she accepts her first suitor.

Bryant Washburn plays Edward Andrews. The character lacks the winning qualities of the wide-awake young Irishman, but the actor contrives to secure considerable sympathy for him, and acts with his customary earnestness and finish. Casson Ferguson is easy and amusing as Rudder, and Wanda Hawley's good looks explain much of the rivalry for the hand of Frances. C. H. Geldart as Frank Raymond, little Georgie Stone as John Raymond and Edythe Chapman as grandma are all excellent. Walter Edwards directed the picture with his usual skill.

"HER FIRST MISTAKE"

M. Sennett Farce of Unusual Features—Babies, Dogs and Chickens Rival Grown-ups.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN UNUSUAL farce in many respects, "Her First Mistake" is chiefly remarkable for being the most amusing vehicle ever shown on the screen. This is a doubtful compliment, for vehicles are never amusing, and this farce is highly so, a revelation of human nature in the primitive, a baby furnishing some astonishing comedy stuff, a big dog and some little pups playing a close second, and, almost neck and neck, is a game-cock with a spirited interpretation of the fighting spirit of this time—there is no compromise in him. Louise Fazenda and Chester Conklin are as good as usual, but they and the entire cast merely play up to the trained animals and remarkable baby, the funniest little tot of his age ever seen in moving pictures. The farce is one big laugh.

Pioneer Stars Billboard Campaign.

The Pioneer Film Corporation announces that commencing October 20 pictorial twenty-four sheets are being posted on the billboards in connection with an elaborate publicity and advertising campaign on "Wives of Men," and it is said that the paper available for exhibitors in connection with this production is especially attractive.

COMMENTS

General Film Company

A RAMBLE IN ASPHASIA (Broadway Star Feature).—An O'Henry story of very mild interest, depicting the wandering away of a young husband under pretense of asphasia.

LITTLE MISS GROWN-UP (Oakdale).—In this five-reel feature little Gloria Joy appears as a child who believes she is already a "grown-up." The action is slight and not altogether consistent. However, the acting of the little star will be found pleasing to both young and old.

WANTED, A BROTHER (Oakdale).—This is the last number of the Oakdale series of five-reel features starring little Gloria Joy, who does excellent work. There is plenty of heart interest in this offering, The work of the diminutive star is excellent. Altogether it is a pleasing example of her work.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

THE GYPSY TRAIL (Paramount).—Robert Housum's stage play furnished the scenario for this five-part picture, in which Bryant Washburn is starred. It is the second Washburn release under his Paramount contract. The picture has many amusing qualities. . It is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

SNOBS (Jesse L. Lasky).—This reissue of a Victor Moore screen comedy contains many laughs. It tells of a milkman who becomes a Duke and is taken up by society. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

A DAUGHTER OF THE OLD SOUTH (Paramount).—The story of a romantic girl's foolish infatuation and her attempt at revenge, Pauline Frederick in the leading role. Reviewed in last week's issue.

SEVENTEEN (Paramount).—A reissue of the story by Booth Tarkington, with Jack Pickford fairly good in a role without adequate support.

THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN (First National Exhibitors' Circuit).—An illustration of the concluding chapters of the book "Tarzan of the Apes," with a visualized synopsis of the first part. Reviewed in last week's issue.

SHOULDER ARMS (First National).—Here is Charley Chaplin's second million dollar contribution to the screen. It is far and away the best comedy he has ever created. While all of his recognized cleverness is employed in developing the laughs there is a new and even more ridiculous Chaplin in the tornado of merriment that accompanies the advancing situations. "Shoulder Arms" is a comedy classic—just as inventive and structurally artistic as the most intense dramatic production the screen has ever carried. The world will "laugh it's head off" at Chaplin in this, his newest and by far his best mirth-provoker.

Fox Film Corporation

THE WOMAN WHO GAVE (Fox).—Evelyn Nesbit, divorced wife of Harry Thaw (with her son, Russell Thaw, featured) is star of this six-reel Fox affair that should prove a big money maker for those who exhibit it. That the picture of itself will entirely please those who see it is questionable. Miss Nesbit may not be considered a great actress, but there is the commercial possibility that curiosity seekers will be satisfied with the mere screen showing of an unfortunate woman who has been distressingly buffeted about by relentless fate. Right there is the advertising angle and the attending possibilities for a "clean-up."

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation

THIRTY A WEEK.—Tom Moore and Tallulah Bankhead play the leads in this five-part picture, taken from a stage play by Thompson Buchanan. It is the story of a chauffeur who marries a society girl and makes good. The acting is excellent and the story is amusing. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

EVERYBODY'S GIRL (Vitagraph).—A; O. Henry story directed by Tom Terriss and featuring Alice Joyce, this five-part picture has its author's usual entertaining slant on life. Cast and production are worthy of the subject. The picture is reviewed at length on another page of this issue.

THE IRON TEST (Vitagraph.—The first two numbers of the new Vitagraph serial are called "The Ring of Fire" and "The Van of Disaster." Albert E. Smith and Cyrus Townsend Brady are the authors of the serial. It is a story of circus life and starts off like a circus parade. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 65 (Mutual), Oct. 12.—This issue contains interesting scenes from the seat of war, Salvation Army members selling Doughnuts, a life-saving exhibition at St. Louis and a game of water football at Venice, California.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 66 (Mutual).—The opening item in this issue shows President Wilson leading the Liberty Loan parade down Fifth avenue. Other items are logs being floated from Oregon to Southern California; Knights of Columbus entertaining soldiers at San Francisco; women at Philadelphia taking to picks and shovels to help out railroad section gangs, and society women at work in big Government plant at Seven Pines, Virginia.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW NO. 17 (Pathe).—Transportation of supplies in Italy opens this number. A striking feature is that in which French Observation balloons of the elephant type are led out of the hangars. General Pershing is shown inspecting German prisoners. Scenes from Chateau Thierry and the ruined town of Dormans are pictured at the close.

THE SUN MESSAGE (Pathe-Astra).—Episode No. 10 from "Hands Up!" Some startling occurrences take place in this installment, which keeps up the interest well. Echo finds her father, Col. Strange, in the same prison in which the Incas have confined her. He tells her his story and reveals to her the hiding place of the Sun Message, a talisman of great value. This is afterward sought by Killman and his followers, who endeavor to kill Echo at the close.

TRAPPING TRAITORS (Pathe).—Episode No. 3 of "Wolves of Kultur." The action steadies down considerably in this number, which is better constructed than the previous ones. It concerns the further efforts of Alice and Bob to get the stolen papers, through Hartman, who is held a prisoner. Barclay and Helen also figure prominently in the number, which contains good dramatic suspense throughout.

Universal Film Company

WHIRLWIND FINISH (Star), Aug. 24.—A two-reel subject by Mrs. A. G. Robinson featuring Marie Walcamp, Harry Blake, Clara Horton and others. This starts off like the average story of the race track, but develops later an original and diverging plot, with some amusing features. The girl's father loses his fortune in a race and in later years the same jockey wins it back for him. This has the atmosphere of the paddock in good measure and the closeups of the racing events are excellent. A good, lively number.

NEARLY A CHAPERONE (Star)., Sept. 21.—A two-reel comedy by Harry Edwards featuring Eddie Lyons, Lee Moran, Harry Nolan and a bevy of college girls. The boys have a lot of fun with the faculty of the college in the first reel. In the second all hands go to a house party, where Lee takes the place of the chaperone. Some breezy situations result, but nothing offensive occurs. The number is not very original in plot, but has a strong juvenile flavor and will please.

HIS ROYAL NOBBS (Nestor), Sept. 22.—An eccentric comedy with poetical subtitles. Charles Evans appears as an escaped convict who tells of his adventures in matrimony, which led to his incarceration. The humor is of a somewhat crude sort, but will appeal to the not overly particular.

FRENZIED FILM (Star), Oct. 5.—One of the Lyons-Moran comedies that will be liked by the public. It presents a burlesque on the making of a picture based on an Alaskan story. The comedy is good and quite inoffensive and has been cleverly designed.

KING OF THE KITCHEN (L-KO), Oct. 30.—A two-reel comic with Harry Gribbon, Mae Emery, Billy Armstrong and Eva Novak in the cast. This begins in a restaurant, where Harry Gribbon acts as chef. A city couple drop in and make an effort to steal the cash box. This has a number of laughs in it, the action being of the nonsensical, knockabout sort.

DON'T FLIRT (Nestor).—An eccentric comedy by Walter H. Newman, featuring Ernie Shield, Ed Sedgwick, Marcia Moore and Jane Bernoudy. The proprietors of two beach concessions get their love affairs entangled and this leads to a general mixup. There is hardly enough plot to hold this together and the action never becomes really humorous. This should have had a stronger idea behind it to hold the interest well.

OH, MAN (Nestor).—A domestic farce-comedy by Tom Gibson. This is another variation of the familiar plot in which the young man borrows a wife and child to fool his uncle. The colored baby brings the usual laugh, and the number will succeed with those in particular who are not too familiar with the plot.

The HUMAN TARGET (Western).—This two-reel picture tells an interesting story. Harrison Craig, with the aid of a woman who has lost her husband through the sinking of a ship, uses her wiles on a member of Saxonia's royal family and obtains valuable drawings. There are some fairly exciting scenes when the Prince and his lieutenant plot to demolish the block house in which Craig is a prisoner. But one of the artillery shots frees his bounds and he escapes. Kingsley Benedict, Claire Du Brey, M. K. Wilson and Clyde Benson are seen on the screen.

SHOT IN THE DUMBWAITER (Star).—An amusing "flat" comedy, in which the stay-at-home wife thinks she hears burglars. She and the stay-at-home husband from the flat above rush about in pajamas looking for the invaders. When the gad-about wife and husband return all sorts of complications follow. The dumbwaiter feature is very funny. This is O. K.

MIDNIGHT FLYER (Western).—A two-reel number by George Marshall, featuring Helen Gibson, Hoot Gibson, G. Raymond Nye and Violet Mesereau. The story concerns two former convicts, one the brother of a girl station agent. The second ex-convict tries to blackmail the youth and drag him back to a criminal life, but the sister intervenes. The plot and action in this number are quite interesting and one or two thrills are recorded, but the close is not very strong. This is about an average number.

Western Life Pictured in Graphic Appeal by Famous Players.
Stirring Drama of Western Life Based on Famous Novel.

"HER GREAT CHANCE"

Select Pictures Presents Alice Brady Taken from the Novel, "Golden Fleece," by Fannie Hurst.

Cast.

Lola Gray.....Alice Brady
Charles Cox.....David Powell
Mrs. Gray.....Nellie Park-Spaulding
Ida Bell Gray.....Gloria Goodwin
Genevieve.....Gertrude Barry
Cox, Sr.....Hardy Kirkland
Kitty.....Miss Ormi Hawley
Lawyer.....C. A. de Lima Boniface (Hotel Prop.),
Jefferson de Angelis

Directed by Charles Maigne.

The Story: Lola Gray, a shop-girl, has won the love of Charles Cox, known as her "Million Dollar" sweetheart, because of his father's great wealth. Lola refuses to marry him because she despairs of happiness with a man of his wild habits, but when a particularly pronounced escapade causes his father to disinherit him she telephones him her promise to marry. The ceremony takes place at once. Next morning Cox reads in the papers of his father's death, and tells her that they are rich, but Lola explains that her sister is confidential secretary to the lawyer who made the changed will, and that she married him only because she knew he would be forced to settle down. They will face life together—penniless, but happy. It is her one chance.

Feature Alice Brady as Lola Gray and David Powell as Charles Cox.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Startling Contrasts in Modern Life Presented in Sensational Photoplay.
How Happiness Came from Union with the "Upper Ten" and "Lower Five."
Marriage Out of Class and Station Brings Unrestrained Happiness.
High Society Shocked by the Antics of One of Its Pet "Lions."
Photoplay Reflects the Gaieties of New York Society Life.
Strange Contrasts in Romantic Marriage Disclosed in Gripping Drama.

Advertising Angles: In addition to capitalizing Miss Brady's popularity you have Miss Hurst's fame to draw upon. Work both angles. Recall the magazine publication of the story. For a catch phrase work the "million dollar sweetheart" idea. Allude to the innumerable stories of girls who married for money, and tell that this is the story of a girl who didn't. Play it up as a "different" story.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one 24-sheet. Lobby display. Photographs, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28. Slides, cuts, two one-column, two two-column, one three-column, one one-half-column cuts of star, and one one-column and one two-column cuts of star. Released in October.

"THE STILL ALARM"

The Pioneer Film Corporation Presents in Graphic Screen Version One of the Most Thrilling Melodramas of the English Stage.

Cast.

Jack Manley.....Thomas Santschi
Eleanor Fordham.....Bessie Eyton

The Story: Bird, a clerk in Fordham's drug store, receives from a country man a large sum of money to place in the safe for him. The next day a prescription comes in for the man, who is ill at a hotel. Bird, watching his chance, dispenses poison, and, taking the money, flees. Some years later Bird, now a derelict, returns, and seeks to blackmail Fordham, threatening to accuse him of the murder unless Eleanor Fordham consents to marry him. Fearing that his scheme will be exposed and that he himself will suffer the punishment, Bird plans to destroy Eleanor and her father by setting fire to the house, first cutting the wires of the fire alarm telegraph. A still alarm is sent in over the telephone, and Jack Manly, a dashing young fireman, who is Eleanor's choice, comes with his company to her rescue. Bird is exposed, and the tangled skein of incident is made smooth.

Feature Thomas Santschi as Jack Manley and Bessie Eyton as Eleanor Fordham.

Program and Advertising Phrases: The Melodrama of Your Youth Brought Up to Date by the Skillful Tricks of Photoplaying.
Joseph Arthur's Companion Piece to "Blue Jeans."
Harry Lacey's Famous Play Revived with Splendid Effect.
Reaching the Pinnacle of Dramatic Effort in Photoplaying.
Pulsating with Heart Throbs and Tingling with Thrills.
The Greatest of Typical American Melodramas Screened to Perfection.

Advertising Angles: "The Still Alarm" is still one of the most popular stock melodramas, and has been played in practically every town large enough to support a drama house. The original six and twenty-four sheets are provided, and at least one twenty-four and several sixes should be used. Work the latter only for your advertising. In towns and even the smaller cities you can get the fire department to work a "demonstration" in front of your house that will bring the crowd. Where there is a volunteer department offer to give them a benefit reel on the tickets they sell to apply to the company fund.

Advertising Aids: One one-column cut, one two-column cut, one three-column cut, two one-sheets, two three-sheets and two six-sheets, one twenty-four-sheet. Press book.

"A WOMAN'S EXPERIENCE"

The Bacon-Backer Company Presents Many Stage Stars in a Screen Version of Paul M. Potter's Famous Stage Play, "Agnes."

Cast.

George Roydant.....Sam Hardy
Agnes Roydant.....Mary Boland
Nicholas Barrable.....Lawrence McGill
Lord Sulgrave.....Robert Cain
Attlie Damuron.....Corrine Uzzell
Rufford.....Bradley Barker

Directed by Perry N. Vekroff.

The Story: Nicholas Barrable has retired to the country. He has with him his niece, Agnes, and her husband, George Roydant. He seeks to keep them from the dangers of the city, but they long for excitement, and flee the quiet of the country. Agnes enters society, and George becomes engrossed in speculation. She becomes entangled with an English nobleman, Lord Sulgrave, who falls into the clutches of a vampire. The climax comes when Agnes faces her desperate husband in her own room in which lies hidden the corpse of her admirer. It is no wonder they agree that the quiet country life is best after all.

Feature Mary Boland as Agnes and Sam Hardy as George Roydant.

Program and Advertising Phrases: Country Life and City Existence Contrasted in Vivid Reflections of Forceful Conviction.
How Temptations of High Life in Great City Nearly Blasted Two Lives.
Husband and Wife Caught in the Swirl of City Life Nearly Perish.
Man and Wife, Victims of Social Ambition, Narrowly Escape Destruction.
Originality in Photoplot Carries Lesson in Contentment.
Sensational Outcome of a Married Couple's Resolve to Live the Swift Life of Fast Company.

Advertising Angles: Paul Potter's play was a huge success. If it has played your town you have only to refer to it. If it has not, use the situation in Agnes' room without telling how it came about or how she escapes the problem. Work heavily on this and you can capitalize curiosity.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, one twenty-four sheet. Slides. Cuts. Press book. Lobby displays, 8x10, 11x14, 22x28.

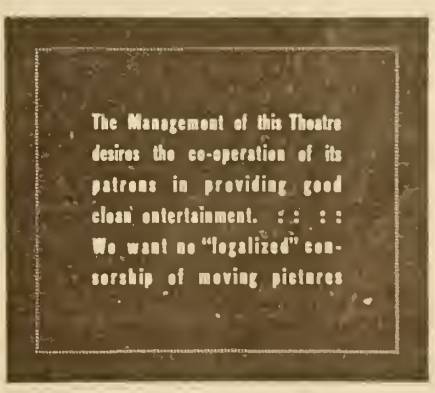
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

The "Y" and the WAR

When an officer said to Elsie Janis at the close of an entertainment in a Y.M.C.A. Hut: "You have kept my men from thinking of tomorrow's battle; they will fight better because of tonight," he expressed the big, underlying purpose of the Y.M.C.A. work. In other words, the

Y.M.C.A. is Helping Win the War

The Y.M.C.A. of wartime is vastly different from the Y.M.C.A. as most people know it. Its work has assumed tremendous proportions and achieved tremendous results. It is supplying a vital need—one that is not supplied in any other way. Its work is as important as that of any other organization which the war has developed.

Those of us who are bearing the lighter part of this great war burden must realize that it is not enough to raise and train an army. It is not enough to feed and clothe our men. It is not enough to care for those who are wounded. Soldiers are people, not machines. They must be kept mentally fit to make them efficient.

2,500,000 letters are written every day on "Y" Stationery

It has been demonstrated—is being demonstrated all the time—that the nation gives freely for the building of ships, for the manufacture of munitions, for the housing, clothing and feeding of our fighting men and for providing medical aid to those who are wounded. It will give just as freely when it understands that without the games, shows, stores, reading, educational courses and home comforts which the "Y" provides, all this other giving will be futile.

Consider yourself in relation to your own work. Suppose you were taken from your job, removed to another town and put to work. Suppose at the end of each day's work you ate your supper, went to bed, got up in the morning, had your breakfast went to work and kept this up for weeks and months—nowhere to go in your idle time; nothing to do; no friends who cared about you. How long could you keep it up? How long could you do your work? That would be the soldier's life without the "Y."

Somebody said, "beware of the army that sings." Armies do not sing in response to orders. They do not sing because of the joy of fighting. They sing because their spirits are high, because they are mentally, morally and physically fit; and it is this condition of mind and body, this building up and maintaining of the morale of our men, which is the deciding factor between a victorious and a defeated army.

Everything is free in the front line canteens

Four allied activities, all endorsed by the Government, are combined in the United War Work Campaign with the budgets distributed as follows: Y.M.C.A., $100,000,000; Y.W.C.A., $15,000,000; War Community Service, $15,000,000; American Library Association, $3,500,000.

Steady, Flickerless Light

One of the features of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP for motion picture projection, which will appeal to all progressive exhibitors and operators, is its simplicity of operation. When it is once properly focused, it requires practically no further attention or adjustment. The light source remains absolutely steady and uniform in intensity.

Three-wing shutters may be used with machines operated on alternating current circuits, and a perfectly steady picture obtained.

The WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP is more reliable than the arc light, radiates less heat, and does not give off carbon gas or dust. (The latter is exceedingly injurious to the lungs of operators.)

We have prepared a booklet describing the use of the WESTINGHOUSE MAZDA LAMP and its many advantages in motion picture projection, and will be glad to send a copy to any one interested.

THE STRAND THEATRE

HAROLD EDEL, Managing Director

We think the capacity business of the Strand has done this week when most theatres have been shunned by panic-stricken people because of the epidemic is the most remarkable tribute ever paid any star of stage or screen.

We think it a most wonderful appreciation of "Shoulder Arms" that people should veritably take their lives in their hands to see it.

We are gong to break our "one week run" rule and continue "Shoulder Arms" next week.

We are shouting this news from the housetops because we know you have chosen to make but two great pictures this year while you could have made double or treble the money by producing twelve mediocre ones.

We want you to know that your ideals are going to lead other true artists away from machine production—that your success has demonstrated what a star can do when he controls and is responsible for his own productions and we want you to know that, so surely as the day follows the night, the public will reward you.

We feel that the Strand through its efforts for the betterment of exhibitors has earned the right to thus publicly commend your efforts for the production of truly great pictures.

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC ON THE WANE

Reports from State Chairmen of National Association and from Correspondents of World Indicate General Opening of Houses Early in November—Chicago Prospects Good

WITH the exception of a few isolated states the epidemic of Spanish influenza is on the wane throughout the entire country, and it would appear that there would be a general opening of the motion picture theatres in most states on or before November 4. This statement is made as the result of thirty-two telegrams received from the state chairmen of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry who were requested to report by wire on the conditions in their states.

Conditions are extremely bad at the present time in Washington, Colorado, Nevada, Idaho, Texas, Iowa, Louisiana and Nebraska. In all of the other states from which reports were received conditions are improving, the epidemic is being conquered, and the theatres are expected to open within a week.

Reports from Rhode Island and Maryland state that the theatres are open in those states and the epidemic conquered. The opening dates for the theatres in the other states of the Northeastern division of the country are as follows: Ohio, November 3; Indiana, November 2; Maine, November 4; Pennsylvania, November 4; Washington, D. C., November 4; Illinois, November 4, and Vermont, November 3.

The Southeastern section of the country is likewise in very good shape, with the exception of Florida, which will not be open throughout the state for another week or ten days. The theatres of Jacksonville, however, opened on October 29, and the epidemic throughout the state is on the wane. Virginia, West Virginia, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia all expect to reopen the theatres on November 4. All of these states report a vast improvement in conditions, and state that the epidemic is on the wane.

Conditions Bad in Washington.

The reports from the far Northwestern states are particularly bad. Washington reports that it is impossible to determine the reopening dates of the theatres, and that it will be at least five days after the epidemic has reached its crest. New cases are increasing, and the death rate is climbing higher every day. Extremely drastic measures are being taken to check the epidemic, only essential workers being allowed on the streets, and all stores, with the exception of food and drug stores, being closed. No relief is expected inside of two weeks.

The epidemic is likewise on the increase in Idaho, Colorado and Nevada, with no relief in sight. It is expected that it will be at least two weeks more before the theatres of these states are permitted to reopen. Conditions in Wyoming, Montana and Utah are said to be improving, and it is expected that the theatres will be doing business on or before Election Day. In Wisconsin the epidemic is being conquered in the southern half of the state, but is spreading in the northern half and in the rural districts. It is expected that the State board of Health will authorize the local boards to raise the ban at their discretion after November 1. In Minnesota cold weather and snow have arrived, and it is expected that this will wipe out the epidemic. It is believed that the theatres will be permitted to open about November 3.

Serious Also in Southwest.

In the Southwestern section of the country, Texas, Iowa, Louisiana and Nebraska are still confronting a serious condition. The cities of Des Moines and Omaha show a litle ray of light, as the theatres in the former city opened on October 28, and will open in the latter on November 3. Conditions throughout the rest of these two states, however, are bad, as the theatres have been closed for three weeks, and the present outlook is that they will not be reopened for another two weeks. In Texas only a few towns are open, and the death rate is high. Conditions in Louisiana and Nebraska are likewise bad. In Arizona it is expected the theatres will be open on November 4; Arkansas, November 6; Kansas, November 2, and Mississippi, November 4.

In Denver no official date for reopening theatres in that territory has been set. The epidemic is on the increase in many sections. A general order permitting the reopening of theatres is not expected for at least two weeks.

What World Correspondents Report.

The following reports from World correspondents in various parts of the country will be found of marked interest. Among the most important of these messages is that from Chicago, in which we are told that indications forecast the opening of the theatres in that city this week:

Chicago Expected to Open Houses by End of October

Chicago, October 28.

SUBJECT to the approval of the state director of health, Dr. Drake, Health Commissioner Robinson has announced the lifting of the quarantine on picture theatres in Chicago as follows under subjoined conditions:

On Wednesday, October 30, all houses north of Diversey Parkway; Thursday, all houses as far south as the north side of Twelfth street; Friday, all houses in the city, probably excepting those in South Chicago. The epidemic has been abating rapidly for the past three days, and if today's reports show a continuation of the downward curve, Health Commissioner Robertson will recommend the foregoing modifications of the city quarantine to State Health Director Drake, who is ready to act.

McQUADE.

Indiana Extends Closing Order Until November 2

THE ban on public meetings, theatres, schools, churches, etc., in Indianapolis, which was to have been lifted on Saturday, October 26, has been continued until November 2, as a result of an order issued October 25 by the State Board of Health. The decision to extend the order, which, by the way, is the third time it has been extended since it has been in effect, was reached after reports from out over the state are said to have convinced the board members that the time for lifting the ban is not yet ripe.

The only modification to the new order provides that in any county where influenza has not been epidemic for five days or more a special officer representing the national and state governments will be sent by the health board to make an investigation, and, if his report and other reports seem to justify it, then the state board will issue such modification of the general order for that particular community as in its judgment seems proper. This means that theatres in some sections of the state may be reopened before the end of the week.

Conditions in Indianapolis have shown some improvement in the last few days. Up to 2 o'clock Saturday, October 26, 150 new cases were reported for the day, bringing the total in the city alone since the epidemic started to 5,317. The number of deaths reported for the day was 17.

More new cases were reported to the State Board of Health on Friday than at any other time during the week. Forty-seven counties reported 1,519 new cases. In all there are about 43,000 cases throughout the forty-seven counties.

The Indianapolis health authorities are now discussing the question of ordering everybody outside their homes to wear gauze masks as a preventive measure against the spreading of the disease. It is pointed out that in several other cities masks are being worn to a more limited extent, and have aided materially in cutting down the disease.

Some Seattle Exchangemen Work and Draw No Salary

BEGINNING with Seattle the Spanish influenza has quickly spread all over the Northwest territory, its appearance everywhere being quickly followed by orders from the local or state health authorities that all theatres, churches, and other places of public assembly close and remain closed until the epidemic was under control. So far it has not been controlled sufficiently to admit the opening of the theatres, although in Bremerton, where it first appeared, and where it exacted a high toll of deaths both among the men in the Puget Sound Naval Station and among inhabitants of the town, the fatalities and the number of new cases appearing are decreasing. It is thought that the theatres there can be opened in another week. In Aberdeen, also, the closing order will probably be lifted within a few days, the epidemic having been very light there. In Auburn there have appeared no cases, but the theatres were ordered closed on Sundays only, because the inhabitants of neighboring towns which have cases of influenza are accustomed to come to Auburn on Sundays to see the shows.

The cities and towns of Oregon were the last of the Northwest to be reached by the epidemic, and Salem, the capital, was not closed until October 15, ten days after Seattle. A few of the towns in central and eastern Oregon are still open. About half a dozen towns of Washington, also, have not received a closing order at this writing, but all of Montana and Idaho are closed.

Exchange Managers Work in Shipyards.

With such a state of affairs the Seattle exchanges, which serve the entire Northwest, have practically nothing to do. Consequently at a meeting of the Northwest Film Board of Trade late last week it was decided to offer the services of its members as a body to work in the shipyards of the city, which are so pressed for men. The offer was gratefully accepted by the shipbuilding companies, and at 4 o'clock each afternoon the film managers doff their high-brow, shell-rim spectacles and natty business suits for flannel shirts and overalls.

In the meantime shippers and inspectors have been discharged in most of the offices, and in some cases the companies have gone even farther. For instance, in the Mutual office there are only a manager, a booker, and a bookkeeper. The World office is closed during the afternoon, and the entire staff is on half pay. The staff of the Universal office, upon having the proposition put up to them by Manager Mead, agreed to continue work without expecting their salaries to continue. The Artcraft-Paramount office is holding its large force together, however, and is continuing with the daily routine. Pathe and one or two smaller office forces are continuing complete also. The Exhibitors' Film Exchange has closed until the epidemic is over.

All theatres have discharged all their employes.

Southern Picture Patrons Eager for Theatre Openings

SPANISH influenza has occasioned a complete abatement in amusement activities in the South, and especially has the New Orleans film territory been hard hit, both in the matter of the ravages of the disease upon the business interests and its invasion of the ranks of exhibitors and others, and causing suffering and death.

The closing of all theatres and other places of amusement in Louisiana, Mississippi and Alabama has made the people restive. Their chief attention has been centered upon the contagion, but they have become amusement hungry, and they appear to be at a loss since they have no place for recreation and relaxation. Exhibitors regard the closing order as a sort of a blessing in disguise. Their patronage had been "spotted" previous to the order partly because of inclement weather and partly because of public unrest. Some of them were barely making expenses, and a few closed even before the official notice was given. Immediately the theatres were closed, the patrons began to realize that one of the diversions which they had come to regard as a matter of fact had been denied to them. Their discomfiture has been manifested in various ways. Hence the exhibitors figure that when the permission is again given to open the theatres the people will crowd them. The best information now at hand indicates that Louisiana places of amusement will not be allowed to open much before November 10, if, indeed, they shall be so fortunate as to open on that date. Some of the shows in Mississippi are running, but this is not generally the case.

Philadelphia Closed Indefinitely.

Philadelphia exhibitors and exchangemen whose hopes had risen that they would be permitted to reopen their theatres and resume business again beginning Monday, October 28, were sadly disappointed at the outcome of a special meeting held by the Board of Health on Wednesday, October 23, when the members decided to continue the closing order affecting schools, churches, theatres, places where liquor is sold, public meetings, etc., indefinitely. The board will not meet again until "some time next week," at which time, if the death rate shows a sufficient decrease to warrant it, a date will be set for the lifting or the modification of the closing order.

Baltimore Theatres to Open for Evening Shows Only

COMING to the conclusion that the influenza situation in Baltimore recommended the action, the closing orders which were recently issued by Health Commissioner Blake, of that city, were greatly moderated on Thursday afternoon, October 24.

The new rules and restrictions as they apply to the theatres now to be enforced during the influenza epidemic are as follows: All the theatres, as well as the pool and billiard rooms, beginning with Monday, October 28, may open at 7:30 p. m., and close not later than 11:30 p. m. Meetings may be held by subordinate lodges of secret orders between the same hours. Matinees are prohibited from being held by the theatres. The sale of tickets can only go on for evening performances until the seating capacity is filled, as no persons will be permitted standing.

Smoking in the theatres and spitting on the floors of such places also come under the ban of the health commissioner.

The health authorities throughout the State of Maryland were also notified by Dr. C. Hampson Jones, chief of the State Bureau of Communicable Diseases, on the same day that any restrictions of quarantine which had been established by them at the recommendation of the Government they were not permitted to raise.

San Francisco Houses Closed by Order of Health Board

San Francisco, October 18.

A DATE line is almost necessary in connection with anything written concerning the moving picture industry at the present time, for what is true today may be far from representing the situation tomorrow. A week ago theatres were being operated as usual in this city, with attendance but little below the normal. Within the week the cases of Spanish influenza increased from about two hundred to more than three thousand, and theatre attendance dropped more than 50 per cent. Less than a week ago theatre owners expressed the opinion that their places of business would not be closed, but of late conditions have taken such a change for the worse that drastic action on the part of the health authorities was regarded as a foregone conclusion.

A meeting of the San Francisco Board of Health was held on the afternoon of October 17, and a resolution was passed closing all theatres, moving picture houses, concert halls, dance halls, churches, schools and places of public gathering, the order being effective the following day. Dr. William C. Hassler, city health offices, informed the members of the board that from three to five weeks would be necessary to control the spread of influenza. Dr. George E. Enbright, president of the State Board of Health, has announced his approval of this action, and further states that the state board will adopt most of the provisions of the local resolution at a meeting to be held shortly, thus closing theatres throughout California.

Theatres in Many Towns Closed.

Many individual communities in the San Francisco territory have already placed a temporary ban on theatres. The list to date, with the number of moving picture houses affected, including the following: Atascadero, 1; Antioch, 1; Berkeley, 6; Burlingame, 2; Benicia, 1; Colusa, 2; Clovis, 1; Chico, 3; Dunsmuir, 1; Dinuba, 1; Exeter, 1; Fresno, 10; Fremont, 1; Fort McDowell, 1; Gilroy, 1; Haywards, 1; Hilt, 1; Kennett, 1; Los Gatos, 1; Larkspur, 1; Los Banos, 1; Livermore, 1; Lemon Cove, 1; Mare Island, 1; Menlo Park, 2; Mountain View, 1; Modesto, 2; Mendocino, 1; Montague, 1; Mayfield, 1; McCloud, 1; Oak Park, 1; Palo Alto, 2; Point Richmond, 1; Redwood City, 2; Richmond, 2; Redding, 1; Red Bluff, 2; Rio Vista, 1; Riverbank, 1; Spreckels, 1; San Jose, 6; Suisun, 1; South San Francisco, 1; Salinas, 1; Santa Cruz, 2; Stockton, 7; San Mateo, 2; Sacramento, 10; Sanger, 1; Santa Clara, 1; Sisson, 1; San

Kansas Health Board Extends Closing a Week

KANSAS CITY, like other sections of the country, is suffering materially from the epidemic of Spanish influenza, which has been making itself felt through the past two weeks. The medical authorities early took steps to stamp it out if possible, and a meeting was called October 7 at the Chamber of Commerce, attended by the city health board, members of the Chamber, and members of the allied theatrical interests, moving pictures, vaudeville, burlesque and operators. The result of this gathering was that resolutions were adopted urging that places of amusement, churches and schools should be closed, and that crowds in other places of business, street cars and cafes should be limited. This went into effect at midnight Tuesday, October 8. A week later, conditions looking favorable for a control of the epidemic, a second meeting was called for October 14, attended by the same representatives, with the result that the theatres again opened and remained so Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday. This proved to be an unfortunate move, as the cases of influenza, instead of decreasing in number, appeared to increase slightly.

October 16, physicians of the City Board of Health, amusement representatives and other public-spirited men met for a joint conference. The theatre men stoutly maintained their willingness to co-operate in every way to stamp out the epidemic, and asserted that if closing would bring about the desired result they were more than willing to do so. However, they also insisted that no discrimination should be made, and that the number of other gatherings should be reduced as well—in department stores, street cars, hotels and every other place—stating it as their opinion that a very strict quarantine should be instituted immediately. Members of the Chamber of Commerce, however, seemed to feel more or less in sympathy with the merchants, and indorsed the propositions submitted by the retailers; namely, that the number of shoppers was already reduced by the scare, and that stores should open at 9 and close at 4 o'clock.

The closing order for Kansas was extended another week by Governor Capper and the State Board of Health. This applies to theatres, schools, churches and all public meetings.

Michigan's Health Board Shuts Theatres Indefinitely

SPANISH influenza has finally dealt its death sting to the amusement business throughout the entire State of Michigan. Up to a week ago the epidemic was raging in sectional parts of Michigan only. The governor and the State Board of Health held a meeting on October 19 at the state capitol, and after a two-hour discussion, at which were present the Detroit city health officer and several prominent doctors, it was decided to close all theatres, dance halls, skating rinks, churches and pool rooms, effective from October 20, for an indefinite period.

Dr. Inches and the Detroit doctors bitterly fought against closing the theatres, arguing that keeping them open did more good than harm not only because of their latest ventilating systems, but because of their educational value. Dr. Inches, of Detroit, up to the very last was opposed to a theatre closing order. He had before him at this meeting charts showing that in cities and towns throughout the country where theatres had been closed the number of influenza cases increased after the closing rather than decreased. The epidemic had caused a dropping off in the attendance at theatres of from 33 to 50 per cent., no theatres had been crowded, and every theatre was opening its show with a slide instructing people that if they cough or sneeze they must use a handkerchief. Several persons have been put out of theatres because they failed to do this. The theatre owners were taking every precaution, some going so far as to disinfect their floors and taking up their carpets before and after every matinee and evening performance.

Removal of State Ban Suggested.

Governor Sleeper has given no assurances as to when he would permit the theatres to reopen. It has been suggsted to him that he remove the state ban and leave the matter entirely in the hands of the health authorities in each town. But he has given out no definite statement as yet, and there is very little likelihood that the ban on theatres will be removed before November 1. The number of cases in Detroit has been on the increase since the closing, and just today, October 23, all schools are being closed and retail stores in Detroit are being closed daily at 4:30 p. m. Even outdoor public gatherings are being prohibited, and now there is talk of having everybody vaccinated. Complaining theatre owners who believe that there is nothing to be gained by closing house are going to obey all laws to the letter, and have assured local health authorities of their fullest co-operation in every way.

Closing Order Welcomed by Toronto Exhibitors

THE closing of Toronto's theatres for an indefinite period starting with Monday, October 21, by the local health officer was welcomed by the exhibitors, according to Thomas Scott, secretary of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, of Ontario. Speaking for the exhibitors, Mr. Scott said: "It is a fine idea. The moving picture men are always ready and willing to co-operate with the authorities when the general public is benefited."

Toronto was almost the last city in Canada to close its theatres, and local exhibitors became just a little anxious, according to the opinions offered, lest the people would blame the theatres for the spread of the disease locally. The people and the papers were more inclined to rap the street cars, however, as the menace. The exhibitors were quite ready to close down, because attendance had fallen away off, except in a few instances, during the latter part of the week of October 14.

On the day that Toronto theatres closed all Canadian houses should have started in the great drive with the Victory Loan pictures to boost the Fifth Canadian Loan. Jule Allen, of Toronto, a member of the Motion Picture Distribution Committee of the Canadian Government, announced on that day that scarcely a theatre was open from coast to coast in the Dominion, and that the five hundred or more special loan pictures were lying on the shelves of exchanges. He did announce, however, that the loan pictures would be presented in any theatre which would be reopened before the end of the official loan campaign for such period as remained before the termination of the drive. The seventeen different subjects were to have been presented during the four weeks starting October 21.

At an important conference of exchange company heads in Toronto the question of what would be done by the exchanges during the "dark period" was discussed, and it was finally agreed to place all exchange employees on half pay until the theatres reopen. This decision affects managers and all other employes in head offices and branches in all cities of the Dominion, according to information supplied officially to the writer. Branch exchanges are located in six cities—Toronto, Montreal, Winnipeg, St. John, Calgary and Vancouver.

The exchange officials also considered what would be done with existing bookings, but it was felt that no step could be taken as a whole until some future date when developments will be more definite. If small town theatres reopen before Toronto gets back to normal life the outside houses would be getting first runs of features and serials.

Rochester Opening Preblematical.

The prospect in Rochester is that the theatres will reopen during the first week in November. The original closing order expired on October 21, but conditions were such that it was extended until such time as public health conditions warranted. Local authorities say that they will permit the theatres to open at the earliest possible moment, but do not believe that the closing order will be lifted during the week of October 28. Instead of declining, the death rate has been gradually increasing here, although the number of new cases has been daily receding. Should continued improvement of the situation occur for several days in succession it is extremely probable that the closing order will be rescinded almost as suddenly as it was issued. The general opinion, however, is that the earliest possible date on which theatres will reopen is Saturday, November 2, but the whole thing is extremely problematical.

Scourge Still Bad in Raleigh.

In the opinion of Dr. Charles W. Stiles, of the United States Health Service, stationed at Raleigh, N. C., in charge of the influenza epidemic throughout the state, Raleigh will not be thrown open again before the middle of November. Conditions are gradually growing worse, while other sections of the state are recovering somewhat from the scourge, Raleigh being one of the last of the larger cities to be attacked by the malady.

Wilmington Theatres Open.

Wilmington theatres were allowed to open by the Board of Health on Monday, October 21, the influenza epidemic being on the decline and almost a thing of the past. Wilmington closed tight on September 27, and was, therefore, closed for a period of three and a half weeks, during which all theatrical organizations were held intact by Howard and Wells, proprietors of the five theatres here. The action of the Board of Health was made known on Thursday afternoon, October 17, and immediate steps were taken to reinstate service at all of the theatres. On Saturday morning an effort was made by a minority number of members of the Board of Health to have the opening orders revoked, without success. The theatres are being disinfected every two hours by means of spraying, while the show is in progress in the different theatres, in order to allay the fears of the timid ones. Business for the first three open days was reported extremely light by all the houses here.

Charlotte on Verge of Opening.

Indications given out by the Health Board are that orders will be given that Charlotte theatres may reopen on Monday, October 28, although this was not assured a week before that date. The epidemic has been comparatively light in its toll in Charlotte, owing to the fact that prompt action was taken before it had gained such headway as in other cities. Film exchanges are simply marking time, keeping their organization intact at heavy expense in order to be able to meet the rush of bookings which will pour in immediately upon the reopening of the theatres throughout the state.

Columbia to Open Early in November.

Indications at Columbia, S. C., point to a lifting of the closing order on theatres on or soon after November 1, reports from the principal cities of the state being to the effect that the influenza epidemic is slowly subsiding and with favorable weather should be well in hand by that time. Spartanburg officials have already made known that they plan to lift the ban on November 1, although action of the State Board of Health will be necessary before a single theatre anywhere in the state may reopen its doors. The closing order for the entire state was put over simultaneously by the State Health officials, and they will be guided in lifting it by advice from the different city health boards. It is not expected that the order may be annulled in the same manner, as some cities have suffered more acutely and are in much worse shape at this date than others, making individual orders necessary to open the different towns. The cities in which camps are located, including Greenville, Spartanburg, Charleston and Columbia, will probably not open as early as other less congested towns throughout the state.

Louisville May Open November 15.

The influenza epidemic has the hands of the exhibitors and film men of Louisville, Ky., tied firmly just now, and from general indications it will be November 15 before things open up. Saloons and soda fountains are closing at 6.30 in the evening. All chairs have been removed from hotel lobbies to prevent loitering, and there isn't a place in the city where the visitor can sit down and take things easy. Street cars are regulated to the number of passengers which may be carried, and must keep all windows open, a part of them being kept open even when it is raining.

The epidemic has spread to the rural districts, especially the coal and lumber regions, which are hardly turning a wheel at the present time.

May Lift Ban in Virginia in November.

Richmond and other cities in Virginia will not likely reopen their theatre doors before the second week in November, sentiment being very much opposed to risking another epidemic scourge through allowing the churches or other places of public assembly to resume business until all vestige of influenza in the shape of an epidemic has passed.

Certain elements in Richmond made an effort to have the churches reopened on October 20 and the theatres on the following day, but sentiment of the powers was unanimous against such a course, and the local theatre managers have resigned themselves to at least two more weeks of inactivity.

No Abatement of Scourge in Southwest.

With the influenza epidemic still raging throughout the Southwest there seemed little likelihood that moving picture theatres in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas would open during the third week in October.

Fort Worth, Waco and San Antonio, the three large Texas cities which apparently were going to keep their shows open despite the epidemic, closed all theatres October 16. In a few smaller towns the theatres have been allowed to pen owing to favorable local conditions. Amarillo, in the Panhandle, is the largest Texas city which had theatres in operation October 21.

Dallas film men are still keeping their organizations intact and hoping for a change for the better soon. Most of the film exchanges are taking advantage of the dearth of business to clean their quarters, move furniture, remodel offices, etc. Office employes are standing around with nothing to do.

Requests to the Governor of Oklahoma that theatres be allowed to open again brought the reply that no opening would be permitted except through request of the State Board of Health. The Board of Health give no satisfaction to inquiries regarding an immediate opening.

In Arkansas a few scattered towns are reopening their theatres.

Dallas theatres hope to open before October 26. The situation in Dallas has improved slightly during the past few days.

Syracuse Reports Decrease in Cases.

Theatres in Gloversville, Amsterdam, Poughkeepsie, Schenectady, Albany, Rome, Ilion, and other cities east and west of Utica have suffered alike from the epidemic, and have been closed for two weeks and more. On Monday, October 21, Syracuse reported a decrease in the number of cases in that city, and Mayor Stone, of Syracuse, said that he would discuss the advisability of lifting the closing order established two weeks ago.

Rescind Closing Order for Utica.

The theatres of Utica, as well as the houses in other cities in eastern and central New York, have been closed for more than two weeks as a result of the prevalence of the Spanish influenza epidemic. The order closing the Utica theatres was given Tuesday night, October 9, and all houses were closed until the order was rescinded allowing them to open Monday, October 28.

Cleveland May Open Early in November

Indications that the Spanish influenza will keep theatres in Cleveland closed until about November 1, and perhaps longer, started the exhibitors to worrying during the second week of the shutdown.

Health Commissioner Rockwood stated that in his opinion the theatres could not open until a few days or a week after the epidemic showed some signs of abatement. The middle of the second week there was no let-up, although the health commissioner thought the high point or crisis had been reached at that time.

The health department was of the belief that when the epidemic got down to a point where it was when the theatres closed it would issue an order to allow the theatres to open within three or four days from that time.

However the zone system may be adopted as regards opening, which would open the theatres according to wards in the city—according to the situation in each ward.

Washington May Open in November.

A steady decrease in the number of new cases of influenza may result in the reopening of the picture theatres in Washington City the first week in November. November 4 has been set as a tentative date for reopening the schools, and it is believed that the lid will be taken off of other gatherings and normal business then resumed.

Washington has been heavily hit by the epidemic, which, to date, has caused approximately 1,500 deaths. All business has been affected, the large number of people ill greatly handicapping the city. During the closed period, a number of exhibitors have devoted the time to cleaning, painting and redecorating their houses, while the exchanges took advantage of the opportunity to bring their work right up to date and make plans for the big selling campaigns that will open when business is resumed.

Ban Lifted in Petersburg.

Theatre managers of Petersburg, Va., have been kept on the job and kept guessing every minute in the day by the action of the City Health Board. Thursday morning, October 24, the board met and decided to lift the ban on theatres, to be effective Monday, October 28. Storms of protests resulted immediately after the news spread. Another meeting the same afternoon brought a veto of the opening order, with no new date set. Friday afternoon they again met, and issued orders granting the theatres authority to open the following day, Saturday, their action being a surprise even to the theatre managers themselves, who have been playing for an early opening, but did not hope for such early action.

Newport News Theatres Open.

Theatres at Newport News, Va., opened for business Monday, October 28, this action of the City Board of Health following recommendations from the state board, after canvassing the local epidemic situation and finding it greatly on the wane. Local quarantines of shipbuilding plants and camps were removed at the same time, and theatres will undoubtedly do capacity business.

Situation Improving in St. John.

The influenza situation seems to be improving greatly, and strong hopes are expressed that the theatres in St. John, N. B., may be opened next week. The matter is entirely in the hands of the Department of Public Health, and it rests with them to remove the ban when they are satisfied that no danger exists.

St. John has so far escaped quite well from the epidemic, and the theatre managers are willing to support the Board of Health as far as they can, only they are hoping that the theatres will not have to be closed for much longer.

The managers are seizing the opportunity to make some needed changes and alterations in the theatres. The Imperial is being redecorated, and the Lyric is to have new and larger dressing rooms. The Unique offices are being painted and made more convenient. At the Opera House the same general overhauling is taking place. The Star in the north end is to have some changes made on the stage and the entrance freshened with paint. The other city houses are likewise being housecleaned.

Several St. John theatres are booking shows for this coming week.

Halifax May Open Soon.

The theatre men of the city of Halifax have felt that it is time the theatres were allowed to open again. A delegation met with the Board of Health and discussed the matter, and were told that as long as there were a number of cases in the city the theatres must remain closed. A second meeting was held with the same result, but it looks now as if the theatres would be allowed to open this coming week.

Burial of Harold Lockwood.

The funeral services of Harold A. Lockwood, the Metro star, who died October 19, were held at the Campbell funeral church in New York City on Tuesday, October 22. The Rev. Dr. Nathan Seagle, rector of St. Stephen's Protestant Episcopal Church, was the officiating clergyman, and he read the ritual for the dead and made a few eulogistic remarks. He was assisted by a mixed quartet.

Among those who paid their last respects were Mme. Bertha Kalich, Helen Clark, Alice Brady, Grace Darling, Olga Petrova, Mae Allison, Earle Williams, Edith Storey, George M. Cohan, Carlyle Blackwell, Irving Cummings, C. B. Maddock, William Auker, Hilda Lessie, Bernice Falk, Howard Truesdell, J. J. Connors, E. M. Saunders, Jere Austin, Ruby de Remer, Eddy James, Jack Mason, Larry Giffin, H. L. Franklin, John C. Ince, James Lackaye, A. V. Mood, Sam Spedon and a large representation from the Metro offices and studios. R. A. Rowland, J. R. Rubin, W. E. Atkinson, Edwin Carewe, Harry Poppe, Max Karger, Arthur James and H. J. Cohen acted as honorary pallbearers. Interment was in Woodlawn cemetery. It was reported that seven thousand persons viewed the body.

Will Exploit "Our Colored Fighters."

The Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has entered into a contract with the Downing Film Company, with offices in the Astor Theatre Building, for the distribution and exploitation of "Our Colored Fighters," a two-reel picture illustrating the important place the American negro fighters are taking in the World War. The film pictorializes the enlistment and training of the colored soldiers in the cantonments and also shows their work overseas. The picture will not be released immediately for general distribution, but companies are being organized to play dates. The program will be extended to give an entire evening's entertainment. The first company will open in Philadelphia about the middle of November.

JOHN H. COLLINS DIES OF PNEUMONIA

Talented Young Metro Producer and Husband and Director of Viola Dana Ill Only a Week

JOHN H. COLLINS, Metro director, husband of the Metro star, Viola Dana, died of pneumonia at the Hotel Marie Antoinette, New York, October 23, after an illness of less than a week. He was probably the youngest director of note in the country, having been born in 1890. He not only directed Miss Dana in practically all of her Metro productions, but was the author of many of them, supplying the scenario versions of all. Among his original stories dramatized from the screen for his girl-wife's use were "The Flower of No Man's Land," "Riders of the Night,"

The Late John H. Collins.

"The Girl Without a Soul," and "The Mortal Sin."

However, it was first and foremost as a director that John Collins won recognition for himself, and aided in the steadily growing popularity of Viola Dana, upon whose productions he exercised all his efforts. In his three years' association with Metro he directed only one production in which she did not star. This was "A Wife by Proxy," with Mabel Taliaferro.

The last work done by Miss Dana and her husband in collaboration was "Oh, Annice!" not yet released. It was scenarioized by Mr. Collins. At the time the director was taken ill, production had been begun on a new picture, "Diana Ardway." Mr. Collins also had made the screen version of this, and had directed a few scenes in it. Work on this was stopped owing to the four weeks' "shut-down."

John Hancock Collins was born, brought up and educated in New York. He was first associated with motion pictures at the old Edison studio, where he was first employed as a stenographer. Becoming interested in the making of pictures he studied everything possible about studio work, and soon became assistant director, from which position he was promoted to that of full-fledged director. He met and married Miss Dana at the Edison studio, where he became identified with her productions, but reached the fruition of his power with riper years, in the production of Metro pictures.

Mr. Collins had a keen appreciation of his young wife's screen values and did everything possible to bring these out. "Blue Jeans," a picturization of Joseph Arthur's famous old melodrama, is considered to be the best work ever done by star and director. It was issued as a Screen Classics seven-act feature. Other superlative productions directed by John Collins and starring Viola Dana have been "Aladdin's Other Lamp," "Opportunity," "Gates of Eden," "God's Law and Man's," "Lady Barnacle," "Weaver of Dreams," "The Winding Trail," and "The Light of Happiness." The list might be carried on almost indefinitely.

John Collins was beloved by all the members of the Metro staff of players, directors and officials. He was considered a young man of vision and rare ability, and his loss is keenly felt. His wife was with him at the end.

Death of Julian L'Estrange

ONE of the skillful actors who had brought great stage experience to benefit moving pictures was Julian L'Estrange, known in both England and America for his excellent acting, who died as a result of an attack of Spanish influenza at his home in New York, October 22. The news of his death first came to the profession at the funeral of Harold Lockwood, when telephone arrangements were made for the accommodation of Mr. L'Estrange's body at Campbell's undertaking establishment. Funeral services were conducted at Campbell's Funeral Church.

Conspicuous achievements in theatricals made the name of Julian L'Estrange widely familiar to the public, and when he undertook moving picture work he was considered an acquisition to the screen. He will be recalled for excellent work in the Goldwyn production of "Thais," in which Mary Garden was starred, and as a Metro player in support of Emily Stevens—these being his more recent screen accomplishments. He also had been seen to advantage in a number of Famous Players subjects. Mr. L'Estrange was thirty-eight years of age, and his wife, Constance Collier, was playing with him in "The Ideal Husband," a stage production, when he was fatally stricken.

HEALTH OFFICIAL CONDEMNS HYSTERIA

Dr. Bracken, Secretary of Minneapolis Board Says Conditions Do Not Warrant Drastic Action

ALTHOUGH theatres of Minneapolis and Duluth are closed by the influenza order, St. Paul is still an open town as far as moving pictures are concerned, and there has been some agitation for the reopening of showhouses in St. Paul, especially since churches have been permitted to hold services and schools have resumed work in defiance of the closing order issued by Dr. H. N. Guilford, city health commissioner.

With moving pictures and other places of entertainment still proceeding without interruption, St. Paul is drawing many patrons from Minneapolis to its showhouses. Especially on Sundays are large numbers of Minneapolitans going to the Saintly City for their entertainment. This fact has created some feeling among the exhibitors of Minneapolis.

The statement of Dr. H. M. Bracken, secretary of the Minnesota State Board of Health, who is opposed to the elimination of all public assemblages, created a sensation in local theatrical circles and will be read with interest by moving picture men throughout the country.

"Minneapolis," he said, "is in the throes of violent hysteria, produced by the hallucination that an epidemic of old-fashioned grip, more serious than ordinarily, is Spanish influenza."

Denies Situation Is as Bad as Believed.

Dr. Bracken's announcement tended to lessen the fears of Minneapolitans, disturbed by the closing of theatres, schools, churches and all public gathering places by order of the Minneapolis health department.

Dr. Bracken, whose protest against drastic action in St. Paul prompted professional and business men of that city to decide against closing all public places, believes the people of the state, and in Minneapolis particularly, have foolishly allowed themselves to believe conditions to be much more serious than they actually are.

In expressing regret because of the action of Minneapolis officials in closing public places, and especially schools, Dr. Bracken explained that the present epidemic—even at its worst in certain sections of the United States—could not be considered as serious as diphtheria and other diseases.

In substantiation of this statement he said health statistics would show that in army cantonments—where the epidemic of Spanish influenza has had its greatest effect—the death rate is only 4 per cent., while the diphtheria death rate, in the community at large, even with the use of anti-toxin, is 10 per cent.

"In my opinion many of the cases, so-called influenza, are nothing more serious than ordinary grip," said the State health board official. "I regret more than I can explain the action of Minneapolis officials in closing the city, as has been done. It is not in a sense of criticism that I am making this statement, but merely is an expression from a State official who believes that a serious mistake has been made.

"Conditions do not warrant such drastic action, in my opinion, and I believe that Minneapolis is in the throes of a violent hysteria, which surely cannot be abated by official action which frightens the community. Measles, diphtheria or any other disease might have caused as many deaths in army camps or civilian communities if an epidemic started, and surely the fatalities among civilians are not so numerous as those in cantonments. In fact, nearly all of the deaths reported are among men in service.

Reports Not Necessarily Correct.

"Everything in the nature of a cold is called influenza these days, but that is not necessarily the fault of the attending physician. Because of the scarcity of medical men, physicians—busier by far than ordinarily—have been compelled to accept the word of patients, as to symptoms, and with influenza foremost in their minds, and the symptoms well known to all, and not so different from grip, many reports, not correct, are made.

"At this season of year—every year—when street sprinkling is stopped, we are subject to grip. Every year there are hundreds of cases of grip, and, of course, the current year has proved so far more serious than others in the past twenty or more years. True, the Spanish influenza has had its bad effect in many communities, and surely has reached Minnesota, but it is not nearly so serious as the people have been led to believe. The present epidemic is similar to that of 1899 and 1890. What the people must do is waken to the fact that the epidemic is not so serious, but that it can be stamped out without great mortality."

Theatres Should Not Have Been Closed.

Dr. Bracken believes that the closing of schools was entirely unnecessary, and that the closing of theatres and churches should not have been ordered at this time. In defense of his argument that the public schools should have been allowed to remain open, the physician explained that the children, under the watchful eyes of intelligent teachers, and under the consistent care of twenty-seven trained nurses would be far more safe than playing at large, with danger of disease unchecked.

"Modern theatres, with their latest improvements in ventilation, cannot be termed dangerous even at this time," said Dr. Bracken. "True, there is great danger of disease germ breeding in cases where motion picture theatre lobbies are crowded by persons awaiting the end of the show, but I believe theatre owners would much rather rearrange their system than close entirely. If, for instance, an intermission of thirty minutes or so were provided between the shows, this lobby packing menace would be done away with and a great danger stamped out. In theatres where ventilation conditions are perfect, and there is one performance an afternoon or evening, closing should not be necessary."

Churches are needlessly closed, in the opinion of the State health executive, who argues that there are few churches so crowded as to make dangerous a service lasting an hour. If churches, schools and theatres are to be closed, he said, then the logical procedure would be to close all stores and factories and shut down all elevators in public buildings and all street cars. "Of course, this action is not at all necessary—not any more so than closing theatres, schools and churches, but to be consistent in this period of hysteria that should be done," he concluded.

Washington Records Show English Actors' Migration

DIRECTLY after the war in Europe broke out considerable adverse comment was heard in the United States over the evident fact that numerous actors had taken passage from the other side. Evidently the impression prevailed, and not without reason, that many thespians deemed it better to sail away than risk being conscripted into the respective armies of the belligerent countries of Europe. At the outset of the war conscription was not immediately adopted in England, but the handwriting on the wall was plain enough, and as this foreshadowed drastic measures to get men to carry on, members of the theatrical profession, and others as well, hastened to take up the struggle for bread in a land where strife had not become evident.

It will be recalled that many American actors late in 1914 and throughout 1915 complained that their places were being taken by English newcomers. Whether the complaints were merited or not, the fact remains that immigration of actors into the United States expanded somewhat during the years 1914 and 1915. Thus official records compiled at Washington show that whereas 911 actors arrived here in the year 1913, 1,019 came in during 1914, while in 1915 1,126 were admitted. In 1912 and 1911 arrivals aggregated 873 and 1,020 respectively.

Since 1915, however, the inward movement of actors has dwindled considerably, only 632 actors having been admitted into this country in 1916, and in 1917 arrivals amounted to but 576, while in 1918 the figures receded to 214. Thus from the high point in 1915 to the light inflow of 1918 there has been a drop of 81 per cent. In the like period all immigration decreased 66 per cent.

Immigration of actors intending to make the United States a permanent home constituted a fraction of 1 per cent. of the entire movement of immigration.

At the same time emigration as represented by the outward movement of alien born actors also has receded to small figures. For example only 154 actors went out during the year ended June 30, 1918, this number comparing with 159 in 1917, 181 in 1916, 201 in 1915, 257 in 1914, 333 in 1913 and 325 in 1912. Actors of alien birth, like other foreign born immigrants, once here usually stay.

The following table gives an idea of the outward and inward flows of aliens characterized in the official returns as actors:

	Immigration.	Emigration.
1917	576	154
1916	632	181
1915	1,126	201
1914	1,019	257
1913	911	333
1912	873	325
1911	1,020	207
1910	1,233	199

PEDIGO OF OKLAHO EXUDES THOUGHTS

A Few Are Rude and Some Are Nude but All Are Food for Showmen Flued by Patrons Shooed

Highland Theatre.

Guthrie, Okla., October 22.

Editor Moving Picture World:

YOU will no doubt be surprised to hear from me. But since the influenza started I have been so worried that I have scarcely slept more than fourteen hours a night.

Scientists tell us that influenza is a thing that started. We have no reason to doubt these men. They are smart, and should know whether it did or not. They are paid for being smart. What we seem to need now is someone to stop it. That great job seems to be up to me. So I hastily grasp my typewriter between my trembling knees, and dash off the following great thoughts heretofore unthunked by thoughtful thinkists. I can see that this thing of thinking thinks is gradually but surely wearing my rare and unused mind short off up to the handle.

I would that I had something else to do, that I would not have to refer to my mind so many times daily. But I presume your office force is full, and that you expect to continue on your present job, so I am cut out of that chance.

I tackle this job with a full understanding of the great responsibility resting on me, and do what I am doing free gratis for nuthin. Here are a few suggestions I trust all picture showmen will take advantage of.

Must Sneeze Outside City Limits.

When you feel that you are going to sneeze hasten at once outside the city limits to what is now commonly known as the sneezing grounds. Should you be in a crowd, and feel that you are going to sneeze or bust, by all means bust. I say this in the interest of common decency.

Never sneeze intentionally in one's face. Not only is it impolite, but it is old-fashioned, and not up to now.

Another reason is, I have known of people whose faces had been so sneezed in to become so aroused and get their dander raised to such an extent that they would knock all the tar out of you, take your chewing gum away from you, smear your proboscis over your features, and otherwise scramble up your anatomy until you would immediately say, "This is no place for me."

In sneezing in one's face it is well always to notice the size. And further, I believe it would be best to refrain from sneezing in one's face even if it be the face of your dearest friend.

There is an ordinance at this time on the books of most cities prohibiting the blowing of one's bugle on the sidewalk or spitting thereon. One reason for this measure is so many people spit so much like a two-bit piece. Be upright, do not stoop to a thing of this kind, and if by chance you see something on the walk you believe to be a nickel, let it alone.

There has been so much said about this pro and con, and believe me, friend, most of it has been con.

In operating a full groan case of the "flu" one should eat plenty of grub (if you can get it) composed mostly of victuals if possible, and drink plenty of damp, wet water.

If I had more time, more space, and more brains I could tell you several things about "flu." I had wondered what would be the result should we try the following:

If a flea that flew
Got a fly to flee,
Could the flea that flew
Get the "flu" to flee?

I write these things because of my pure unadulterated love of picture showmen in general. For we are getting ours.

Have no hesitancy in addressing me at any time regarding this great subject just as if you were my equal in every way. We were put on earth to be of use to each other, and if, by chance, one of us be gifted with more brains and a better understanding of things in general than the other it is the wish of the great Creator. Let us so live that on that great and last day we will not be afraid to look our Maker straight in the face. I now dampen my slender pink tongue and shall seal this great message from the nude eyes of this hilarious but wonderful old world. I shall place it aboard our jerk moisture railway trusting it may reach you safely.

As we still have no shows here, I must quit and bring in the eggs.

Your esteemed and well done friend,

NED PEDIGO.

Phil Lang Editing Films for Ordnance Department

PHILIP B. LANG, well known in motion picture circles through his long activities as author, editor and production manager, is now film editor for the Industrial Education Section of the Ordnance Department, having taken up his governmental duties last August.

Making his headquarters in New York, Mr. Lang is compiling and editing, from selected material, films which are shown in war plants to stimulate productive effort. Two pictures prepared by him entitled "America's Defenders" and "Freedom Forever," each in one reel, are now in circulation, and he is at present at work on others.

By careful editing, Mr. Lang is telling a compelling story in these films which depict the activities of our armies overseas and the vital necessity of continuous productive effort on the part of the workmen at home who supply the fighting forces.

Mr. Lang earnestly requests motion picture producers to co-operate with him in his highly important work. The films, he states, are not shown in theatres or any place where an admission is charged. While he is particularly interested in securing industrial scenes, Mr. Lang informs the Moving Picture World that he can incorporate to good advantage dramatic and topical scenes dealing with different phases of the war.

"Already a number of producers have placed at the disposal of the Industrial Education Section impressive films and portions of films," said Mr. Lang. "I am sure that once other producers learn of the use which can be made of such scenes their patriotism will prompt them to co-operate."

Mr. Lang's address is District Ordnance Office, Industrial Education Section, 1107 Broadway.

October 27 Attractions at the New York Theatres

RIVOLI.—Maurice Tourneur's production, "Woman," written by Charles Whittaker and suggested by George Moore's "Memoirs of My Dead Life," was shown at the Rivoli the week of October 27. The picture is in a prologue, five episodes and an epilogue, and has Paul Clerget, Flore Revalles, Gloria Goodwin, Fair Binney and Warner Richmond in the cast. Owing to the length of the feature the Creel War Review was the only addition to the screen program.

RIALTO.—Enid Bennett in the Paramount picture, "When Do We Eat?" produced by Thomas C. Ince, headed the program at the Rialto. C. Gardner Sullivan wrote the scenario, and Fred Niblo is responsible for the direction. A new Sunshine comedy and the Rialto Animated Magazine were also shown. The soloists were Mlle. Madeleine D'Espinoy and Gaston Dubois.

STRAND.—"The Woman the Germans Shot," with Julia Arthur as Edith Cavell, was one of the features of the Strand, Charlie Chaplin's "Shoulder Arms" being held over for another week. Alys Michot was the soloist.

EIGHTY-FIRST STREET.—First half, "Shoulder Arms." Latter half, Charles Ray in "The Law of the North."

KNICKERBOCKER—D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" is now nearing its five-hundredth performance in New York.

FORTY-FOURTH STREET.—Theda Bara in "Salome."

OLDT, OF EASTON, PA., DEAD.

Charles F. Oldt, manager of the Third Street Theatre, Easton, Pa., died of influenza Thursday, October 24. He was forty-four years of age. The funeral was held on the following Sunday and the flags of the city were half-masted in his honor.

Mr. Oldt was particularly adapted to the moving picture business. He became a member of the Pennsylvania Exhibitors' Association, owned the building in which the Lehigh Orpheum, at South Bethlehem, was located, and did the booking for that theatre, as well as the Broad Street Theatre, Bethlehem. At the time he was stricken he was arranging to form a chain of moving picture theatres in the vicinity of Easton.

Jutkovitz Brothers Hang Up Record.

Jutkovitz Brothers, proprietors and managers of the Columbia Theatre, Far Rockaway, N. Y., are justly proud of their record in the Fourth Liberty Loan campaign. From September 28 to October 19, inclusive, they reported gross sales amounting to $1,193,200. Their lowest figure was $5,750 for October 3, and they hit high-water mark October 16, with $312,100.

Mrs. A. Warner Dead.

Mrs. A. Warner, wife of A. Warner of Warner Brothers, producers of "My Four Years in Germany" and other patriotic features, died at her home on Monday, October 28, after a brief illness of pneumonia.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

INFLUENZA and its progress continues to be the absorbing topic in motion picture circles and will, in all probability, continue to be until the epidemic feature of the complaint has run its course. The wave of high intensity seems to be sweeping gradually westward. In the east there are signs of abatement, and picture theatres, closed because of prevalent sickness, are opening, while closed houses are the order in the west. The situation is an unfortunate one, and one that must be endured. From reports received from MOVING PICTURE WORLD correspondents motion picture theatre owners are accepting the situation and doing all in their power to comply with the requests of health authorities. Closed houses are being renovated and precautionary measures are being enforced in communities where houses are permitted to remain open. Preventative propaganda is being freely circulated on the screen and through house programs, all of which will go a long way to break the progress of the disease.

While this enforced closing means a large financial loss to every branch of the amusement business, we have yet to hear of the picture theatre owner who has failed to give the fullest co-operation to the authorities. That time has passed when picture men were compelled by force of law to observe even the commonest regulations, which indicates some steps in advance over other days together with the recognition of a strong sense of responsibility to their respective communities in times of distress. This recognition is the thing that makes the theatre man and his house a part of the community in which they do business and earns the respect and confidence of that community. When all these present troubles have passed picture theatre men will find their reward in renewed and increased patronage which their services have earned. As the old copybook phrase declares: "Virtue has its own reward."

IT HAS been rumored that, owing to the receipt of so many conflicting stories as to the profits of the picture business and the inability of congressional committees to discover just what propertion of taxes the industry ought to pay, the Government may decide to appoint a film administrator whose duty it shall be to ascertain just what the motion picture business amounts to and what revenues it should pay. While this suggestion is somewhat revolutionary in its nature, there are those who feel that it would not be unmixed with beneficent effects. But what is the Government to do? It has tried to be equitable in its treatment of the motion picture business. It has acknowledged its essentiality to the extent of permitting it to continue against a strong feeling in certain quarters that its activities should be materially curtailed. But when the question of taxation came up no one in the industry has seemed able to give information upon which a rate satisfactory to all branches of the business could be based. There was too much passing of the buck in the way of mutual accusations. Statements of fact did not seem clothed in the habiliments of truth. There was a strange lack of agreement among those who were appointed to represent, or who assumed to represent the motion picture industry and, finally, a singular lack of knowledge upon the really vital affairs of the industry among those representatives.

Is it at all strange that the plan of taxation applied to the motion picture industry should fail to meet the approval of the men engaged in that industry? In all probability the congressional committee charged with preparing the schedules gave up trying to get helpful information from the representatives of the picture industry and acted upon their knowledge and belief. On top of the dissatisfaction created by the tax schedule came the general suspension of the picture business. This has probably led Government authorities to believe that the men in the industry are unable to properly conserve their interests and that an administrator is a necessity.

DARKNESS BEFORE DAWN

By Robert C. McElravy.

IT has been decreed by fate that the film industry shall quaff from the "cup of trembling" that has been held up to the lips of suffering humanity. Doors to moving picture houses throughout the broad land have been closed as a result of the epidemic of influenza, many of them without warning. A great number of producing companies have seen fit to suspend operations temporarily, and the engine of production is being given a well-earned rest.

At this moment of natural depression it is a good time to take a survey of the film industry, to look back over its perpetually striving past and to glance ahead to the promising near future.

Such a course is not only profitable, but stimulating. Only the present is filled with apprehension; there is little to be ashamed of in the past and a great deal to hope for in coming months and years.

What a mad scramble it has been, since some time along in the late nineties, when certain discerning individuals began to realize that the film as a means of public entertainment was something to reckon with! Many of these men were laughed at for the eagerness with which they began exploiting the moving picture, but many of them remain today with the proceeds to show what they have accomplished, through wisdom and foresight, during these years of steady growth. Other individuals have plunged more recklessly and suffered as a result. But it has been demonstrated beyond a doubt that the film industry has come to stay.

More recent years have awakened the public mind to a new sense of the importance of the film. Its artistic possibilities, its historical value, its industrial utility, its educational scope, its news interest—is there any end to its manifold public uses? Can there be any doubt in the mind of any thinking person that the people as a whole have adopted the film and taken it to their heart?

It is well for those connected with the moving picture, at this trying hour, to reflect upon these things. This is no time for faint-heartedness in the face of a merely incidental setback. Most of all, it is no time for a weakening in any way of the great organization the industry has built up. The morale of the industry should be protected at all costs, for the day is not far distant when the now distressed and anxious public will be clamoring at the doors of the moving picture theatres, with the same old eager smiles of anticipation.

Already the ban is being lifted in certain communities, where the plague has been stamped out. The doors that closed without warning may be opened freely very soon. Exhibitors and producers should for this reason keep a close eye upon the situation. It will not do to make hard and fast rules, for when the public seeks recreation it must find it somewhere. It is better to keep some sort of an entertainment going, wherever possible, at any practical sacrifice, than to disappoint your clientele.

It is regrettable, above everything else, that this closing should have come when the screen was doing such valiant work for the Allied cause. The threatened peace propaganda has come with a vengeance and is all the more insidious because the military situation is so hopeful. But the time for relaxation will not have arrived until Germany has cried "Kamerad!" There will be no doubting the real victory when it comes, and all doubting and speculation until that time can have nothing but a mischievous effect. Against this sort of thing the film is both a weapon and a shield.

It is a time for watchfulness and vigilance on the part of the film industry. The channels of supply should be kept ready for the demand upon the instant. The work of the film is too important to permit of any sinking back or general lethargy because the ratio of profit is not up to normal. It is a time for sacrifice and service, and most of all for counting our blessings as compared with the complete paralysis of many other industries.

MORALS AND THE SCREEN

By Edward Weitzel.

EVERY once in so often some zealous soul breaks into print to remind the screen of its ever-widening possibilities as a moral force and the great uplift it is capable of and owes to the world. Well, this is not to be denied! But something still remains to be said. Like the stage and the printing press, the screen has duties aside from acting as an effective means of conveying moral truth and beauty to mankind. No one wants to be uplifted all the time. Such a process is capable of better results if administered in the proper proportion and the patient allowed to relax into a less lofty frame of mind and indulge in a reasonable amount of light entertainment that is without thought or care for the ethical or the intellectual pose. The law of contrast is an excellent teacher. Even such a subject as the Great War has its limitations and would soon tire if used continually as the theme of a motion picture. To repeat an assertion made in these columns: "The screen is more in need of fifty five-reel stories on varied subjects than another "Hearts of the World."

Truth and the Screen.

There is one moral duty of the screen which, like all other moral duties, is founded on common sense—tell the truth about itself and its rivals. Every once in so often some misinformed or wilfully misleading soul puts in a claim for the screen that can only be substantiated on the ground that the youngest of the arts owes nothing to her elder sisters and can learn nothing from a study of their long experience in revealing life. Several screen authors and actors who once held this theory have now gone into retirement and the public has forgotten they ever existed. An open mind toward every rule of dramatic construction and a firm determination to go on a still hunt for these rules wherever they are to be found will one day give the screen what it still lacks—a drama as well as a novel form. When that time arrives the author who writes for the "movies" will study his plot carefully before he decides whether to turn it into a screen novel or a photoplay.

Limitations That Broaden an Art.

One of the things to be learned from the stage is that a condition which is often spoken of as its limitations is really a source of power. A striking example of this is found in "The Copperhead," Augustus Thomas' fine play. The piece is in four acts, and the first three take place in the same scene. The human interest is so strong that the audience cares no more for the external surroundings of the characters than it does for the coat on the supposed traitor's back. A man's soul is being passed through a fiery furnace; his love and affection are being sacrificed on the altar of duty and devotion to his country. The world becomes very small at such a moment. All the sublimity of mankind may be encompassed within the walls of a painted scene.

Another thing to be learned from the stage is the value of a steady climb upward in interest and force. A recent moving picture which has won high praise—and deserves it for its skill in character drawing, local color and the acting of the star—mounts upward with irresistible dramatic impulse during its first half, and then drops back into a pace that is tame by comparison. Proper technic would have made this picture a real photoplay.

A Stage Critic's Tip.

Lawrence Reamer, in the New York Sun, never goes out of his way to say a few kind words for the screen, but the last sentence in a recent article of his applies to the photoplay quite as pertinently as to the spoken drama. After noting a change in the manner of building the French farce and explaining that certain literary men who have not mastered construction are fond of arguing that if subject and character are satisfactory, technic ought to take care of itself, the stage critic closes with this warning: "Subject and character have a pesky way of wriggling out of all comprehensible relations when they are not controlled by the laws which experience has developed into the playwright's craft."

HE'S TREATING 'EM ROUGH

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NO less than thirty-three hand grenades are thrown into the pages of The Authors' League Bulletin by Robert Macalarney, scenario editor of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, in the shape of "Don'ts for Scenario Writers." There is an effort made on the part of Mr. Mac to bind up our wounds—his article is "for the the tyro"—but it is all too plain that he expected to hit a lot of "beginner-authors" among those who are members of the League, else why publish in the Bulletin? Aside from this little camouflage, however, he is charmingly candid and splendidly sincere.

I wonder if Mr. Mac has read the oldest book in the world?

It is that of Ptah Hotep, giving instructions to a tyro, his son.

Ptah Hotep's bombs were fired about 3500 B. C. in Egypt.

It's an even bet his son paid no attention to them.

Man wants to get his own experiences by himself.

At least, most men do who are conceited enough to accomplish more than is expected of them, such as authors. They are gifted with an egotism which enables them to work better and enjoy themselves more than if they really knew themselves as they are. Those who succeed in lighting up other hearts and minds than their own write in a flame of passionate sincerity and revise with a technical skill of exquisite pains. Without these no author ever wrote a story of artistic merit and popular success.

Sincerity is the foremost element of successful authorship.

Is that not eliminated in the machine-made drama?

Is there any such thing as true authorship in writing to the order of this or that much exploited star? Wait a moment. Let us admit that the finest screen performers are those whose intense and interesting personalities bring to life the author's idealizations. Is not the idea of acting that of "suiting the action to the word?" Is not the actor's art purely that of interpretation, suiting the action to characterization and definite purposes of the play, using his personality to intensify the role without doing the author's conception injury—to the contrary, contributing to the force, beauty and charm a composite effect?

Mr. Robert E. Macalarney knows all this.

He knows that star personality is a billboard attraction.

He knows that star performers are usually fine actors.

They do not appear to advantage in colorless roles of vehicles.

There is no guarantee of perpetual value in these stars outside of Farce when they are permitted to repeat themselves with monotonous regularity. Our people are good-natured, but they are not so childish as to accept one feeble inanity after another, and such inanities are creaky old repeats and wornout imitations, for the sake of seeing a star ride in the vehicle. Of course, Mr. Macalarney knows this, just as he knows that the best stories are the result of creative impulse, an expression of the social life that lies behind that impulse, interesting to society because of society, fascinating to people as a dramatic expression of themselves as they are or as they expect to be, for Americans are ever busy with the coming values of life. He knows all this, but he treats authors harshly, insisting that their work shall conduce to the upbuilding of social health, that plays shall be true to the standards of the times in which they are written, or the authors, the tyros, might as well write "vehicles" in synopsis and leave the fabrication of so-called "continuity" to the studio hacks.

Many of these shots will tell, but Mr. Macalarney need not expect to get what he desires, especially because he is attempting to fill a requirement only temporary. The tremendous changes going on with new outlets for human energy on every hand, will bring about tremendous changes in screen products. These will result from riper judgments and clearer estimate of dramatic values than have yet been shown in the ordinary run of screen plays. Some producers will adhere to the conventional, as they have in the past, and with the same result, to be superceded by new, alert and progressive craftsmen. Not among the progressives will be found those who adhere to the star-and-vehicle idea. That idea has been tried and found opposed to the expert manipulation of an art and to the complete expression of truth through it as a medium.

TOUCHIN' ON REGULATING

AT various times in the motion picture business, as in other fields of human endeavor, attempts have been made to turn aside or obstruct the natural trend of things. Out of that tendency has come anti-trust suits, actions at law to prevent a restraint of trade or the maintenance of boycotts and blacklists and all sorts of tricks calculated to beat the other fellow to something or prevent him from getting somewhere. Combinations have been made to prevent something from being done by the other fellow when he wants to get somewhere that someone doesn't want him to get, after someone got what he wanted by the same method from someone else.

When the captains of an industry arrive at this state of mind there is nothing of which we can think that will do them so much good as a vacation.

Motion Picture Educator

Conducted by REV. W. H. JACKSON and MARGARET I. MACDONALD

Schools and Colleges Are Hereby Cordially Invited to Pen Film Experiences and Suggest Readjustments

OWING to a number of complaints registered with the Moving Picture World by school principals and lecturers regarding the obtaining of educational film suitable to the illustration of subjects which each had in mind, and also with regard to the discourtesy met with through moving picture exchange managers failing to reply to inquiries regarding such film we invite correspondence on the subject from those in charge of visual education in the schools of the country. It might also be well in registering complaints to suggest readjustments, and to state in each case as nearly as possible what class of films are required, and for what purpose the projection machine is being used, recreational or class-room needs. In order that we may bring your requirements in an intelligent manner before exchanges and producing companies who can or who care to be of service in an educational way, it might expedite matters to have an estimate from each as to the number of reels that might be contracted for at a nominal rent per week or per month.

On behalf of the manufacturer and also of the exchange man, we will say that he is not running his business on altruistic theories. His very existence in the industry which he represents precludes such a basis unless he has the good fortune to be a millionaire several times over. It is, therefore, necessary that his business be run on a safe financial basis if he is to continue to serve the public. It is just as necessary for the exchange man to have an approximate idea of the number of films of certain kinds that he is to be called upon to supply within a given period to the schools and other educational institutions of his district as it is for the baker to know how many loaves of bread to have on hand for his customers each day. And unless the manufacturer is also aware of the calls which are to be made upon him, he, too, is liable to be caught napping.

The educationist, through lack of knowledge of the business requirements of the moving picture industry, is apt to expect too much from a service on which he makes small and intermittent demands. To make room for new material which the producer offers him and which the exhibitor expects and for which the must-be-entertained public clamors, the exchange manager at regular periods of not more than six months clears his shelves of old material—prints which are worn out or which are little called for. It is this system of perpetual motion which evidently is not understood in educational circles and which nonpluses the educationist when he suddenly awakens to the fact that he could use a certain reel or set of reels of film which he has heard or read about in the trade magazines some months or years previous, and finds that they are not available, and frequently not in existence.

There is but one remedy for the perpetuation of standard releases and that is a national amalgamation of the school system on a visual education basis. This carried out in a practical rather than a visionary way, would make it possible for the moving picture industry to meet the educational demand on a common plane. It would also eliminate, to a large extent, the enforced use of the "rainy" or scratched film which is so injurious to the eyesight of the child. It would make possible a source of supply and demand hitherto undreamed of.

MARGARET I. MacDONALD.

"France's Dusky Warriors" (Pathe).

One of the most interesting and informing of the French and British official war subjects. This pictures the war work of Tunis, Algeria and Morocco. It is full of striking scenes from the native life of those countries, under the stirring influence of war preparations, equipping and mobolizing troops and sending them to the French front. The review of troops mounted on fine Arabian steeds is particularly colorful. There are also interesting views from the commercial life of Tunis, which is a great food center for the Allies.

"Official War Review No. 17" (Pathe).

This issue contains a number of very interesting things. It opens with the transportation of supplies on the Italian front, shows General Pershing inspecting a fresh batch of prisoners on one of the American fronts, and contains some scenes from the shattered towns of Chateau Thierry and Dormans, where the Germans committed great depredations. An amusing, as well as informing, feature is that showing the manner in which observation balloons are handled.

Carl H. Carson with Educational.

One of the most significant of recent moves in the educational field is the engaging of Carl H. Carson by the Educational Films Corporation of America as manager of a department which will be devoted entirely to the requirements of public schools and other educational institutions. Mr. Carson, previous to taking up his duties with the Educational Films Corporation of America, was at the head of the Visual Educational Association of California. He came East last January to co-operate with Lincoln & Parker of Worcester, Mass., and only recently accepted an offer made to him by the Educational to supervise a department devoted to school needs. A visit to his office revealed a remarkable system by which he is able to lay his finger almost instantly on the key to information regarding any subject which he has tabulated. School courses will be worked out by Mr. Carson in a practical way, and in the near future we hope to be able to give our readers an interesting story of a source of supply and a manner of distribution that should go far in remedying the prevailing film difficulties in schools owning projection machines.

"Allied War Heroes" (Sherry-Burlingham).

The latest of the Burlingham travel series which the William L. Sherry Service is handling is entitled "Allied War Heroes"and shows the arrival in Switzerland of allied heroes from the starvation camps of Germany. Many of these brave men had contracted tuberculosis and are shown in the picture being transported up the sides of the mountains via the railway to a sanitarium situated at a point of unparalleled beauty in the Swiss Alps. Here they are given the best of food and the finest of attention. A view of the exterior of the sanitarium shows the sun parlors overlooking the scene of mountain grandeur, snow-capped peaks and mist filled valleys.

Post-Van Scoy Scenics in Favor.

The Rivoli Theatre has recently been making use of a beautiful series of scenics photographed by Van Scoy and released by Post. Among these were "Dame Nature's Love" and "Midst Peaceful Scenes." Both of these subjects are beautifully photographed and nicely subtitled with the scenes of the pictures used as illustrations of the lines of the subtitles. The Rialto during the week of Oct. 20th exhibited the Pathe subject "The Triumph of Transportation," which covered, not only the evolution of transportation methods, but showed the various details in the manufacture of a motor truck.

Cohen Buys North Star Theatre.

Sydney S. Cohen has purchased from Heyne & Scharf the North Star Theatre, occupying the entire block on Fifth avenue, between 106th and 107th streets, New York, with an orchestra seating capacity of 1,500. The theatre is being renovated, and will be operated along similar lines to Mr. Cohen's other theatres.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Keep on Going.

APPARENTLY few exhibitors have ever heard the story of the two frogs. According to this ancient yarn two frogs found themselves in a can of milk after the farmer had brought it up to the legal standard with pure pump water. One frog complained that they would be drowned, but his more vigorous companion advised hustle. It was a long run to town and when they got there the faint hearted frog lay dead at the bottom of the can, but the hustler was fast asleep on a pat of butter his efforts had churned into a life raft. Too many exhibitors belong in the dead frog class. Business drops off when the men go to the front. They do not make a fight to intensify the business left home, but cut down to two or three nights a week. Others, with no better territory, make a fight and get the people who are left to come more often and make up their receipts in that manner. It is not to be denied that it is hard to coax people to come when living expenses have risen so alarmingly, but the people must have amusement, and not even the twenty per cent. tax is going to keep them from it, if the matter is presented to them in the proper light. When the ten per cent. tax went on, the reports from all over the country were enlightening. The manager who apologized for the increase got his patrons dissatisfied. He admitted that the tax was an imposition and confirmed his amusement buyers in their belief. The man who let out a whoop of patriotism kept right on getting the business, and even convinced many that is was now a patriotic duty to attend the theatres. Go at the entire matter from the same angle. Intensify your advertising, and you'll hold your receipts, but once you start to make the "poor mouth" along with your patrons, you'll all go to the bad, manager and patrons alike.

From the Gold-winner.

A late Goldwyn house organ offers two unique advertising stunts. The most original is an idea of M. B. Neilson, of the Crystal, Wayne, Neb. In that section of the country there is a cigar named after the Irish poet, and Mr. Neilson offered a matinee ticket for every ten bands from this cigar. Of course he hooked up with all stores handling the cigar, and worked it for a release in which the M. P. Tom Moore appeared. C. E. Marquis, of the Martha-Ellen Auditorium, Central City, Neb., offers tickets in a contest to discover words spelled backward in the house organ. This is a new angle to the misspelled word idea and can be used where that has staled.

"On Its Merits."

Here is an advertisement from Scranton, Pa. Fred Schaefer, of the General Film, who sent it in, supplies his own comment when he writes:

> It strikes us that some comment on this ad is justified for the reason that it is from a big vaudeville house—Poli's—that the ad features this one-reel film, which, by-the-way, had a run of a week at this house, and further that the ad does not attempt to make capital from the Red Cross, but plays up the film on its merits. The effect this film had on audiences and reviewers in Scranton is exemplified in the remarkable reviews which was given it in the Scranton newspapers. The vaudeville bill was reviewed in the usual manner, but the Red Cross film was given a half column solid type replete with highest praise.

The space is a double four and a half. It might look better were the six point rule carried down around the cut signature, but the width of the cut prevents this, since there is no room to spare. In these times the one-reel battlefront pictures are sometimes better than the longer releases, and it pays to feature them all if they show merit.

Booming the Crusaders.

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, Ohio, made an elaborate display for Pershing's Crusaders, and yet it says it cost lots less than it looked. The cut shows how the elaborate display looked from the sidewalk. The photographs were made before the front was completed. Above the green at the sidewalk level six helmeted heads were raised to attract from the street side. The castle was built out over the street ten feet beyond the sidewalk line, with a clearance of eleven feet. The second cut gives a better idea of this effect, though it is not so good a photograph of the general effect. The palace was made with translucent windows and at night was lighted from within as well as being indirectly lighted from the outside. The basis of the side displays is a 24-sheet cut-out for each side, masked in with evergreen. There is a practical flag beside the General and a huge one below the sign as well as smaller ones on the towers of the castle. Instead of the expensive compo board the entire display, including the cut-outs and the castle, were made of corrugated pasteboard, stiffened with two inch strips and varnished with a cheap varnish. The castle was painted with cheap "barn" paint. The use of corrugated board is a new idea to us. It costs very little compared with compo and will stand up for a week without trouble. We think Mr. Schade has beaten his own record. He reports a big business not only at the regular performances for three days, but at two special morning performances for the children. Wednesday he had them standing up for two hours. It bears out what we have already said: that it is easy to clean up with a picture if you circus it properly, and this applies with particular force to these Government pictures. You must create the idea of bigness in the minds of your patrons, since they are apt to class them with war weeklies and educationals.

From England.

The Bridge Street Picturedrome, St. Helens, England, sends in a very neat program with the full synopses for each release, with casts and dates, and on the inside cover pages the musical program for the period covered. There are sixteen pages and cover and a four-page insert in addition, 24 pages in all, and it is very well done, with a star portrait on the cover and a little gossip. The program covers a month, and covers it thoroughly. The English advertisers are more conservative than the American showmen, but they do thoroughly well what they attempt, and many of the smaller English houses get out more inviting programs than the large houses here. The Bridge Street Review is among the real ones.

Used Them Contest.

W. S. McLaren, of the Majestic, Jackson, Mich., used the swimming contest idea for Mabel Normand in The Venus Model, and cleaned up with it. The contest was held at an amusement park and both the park and the house did advertising, since both profited. Mr. McLaren got out a very effective six eight-and-ahalfs for "The Bargain." The black silhouette worked well. It seems to be a rather old advertisement, but it will work as well for almost any western subject and might be made up with a mortise for a standard frame for Hart subjects. He is running a great deal to black ink as the next examples show. One is three and the other four tens, but the four looks almost twice as large as the three. This is partly because the lines in the three run up and down and in the four are more across the page. This is a trick well known to theatrical dressmakers, but works the same way in advertising. Without those bits of rule in the three, it would look much wider. It's a thing worth remembering.

Franklin and the Hun.

Here is a reduction of Harold B. Franklin's ad for "The Hun Within." In the original it is four fours, which is a departure from Mr. Franklin's usual style. It is not a mess of black type and blacker cuts, but it fought down everything on the page, even a black mass cut directly above. It is not a big display, as displays go these days, but it makes up in effect what it lacks in size, and that's the main point. Mr. Franklin must be a stickler for accuracy. He advertises an orchestra of thirty pieces, and if you'll count 'em in the tailpiece you'll find just 30 players and the leader.

Community Sings.

If you want the exact text for a community singing announcement, you might try this copy from the Palace Theatre, Orange, N. J., changing the titles to fit your own selections. It would perhaps be better to name the days. If you use the idea, take this cut over to your printer.

Commencing Early in September

"COMMUNITY SINGING"

On certain evenings of each week songs will be thrown on the screen, and under the direction of a local chorus director the audience will be given the opportunity of singing such songs as

"There's a Long, Long Trail"
"Keep the Home Fires Burning"
"Over There"
"Pack Up Your Troubles"
"The Star Spangled Banner" and many other popular and timely tunes.

A Revelation.

Here is a lobby display from the Dawn Theatre, Detroit. Our correspondent writes that the display cost $150 a show, but that the management says that it paid. We think that the price is rather excessive for the material supplied, especially as credit cards were given the florist and the concern loaning the mannikin. Three hundred dollars for two days should net a handsome profit to the florist. Most concerns would do it for a third of that cost for the sake of the advertising they would receive.

Now the Stamps Again.

When the Liberty Bond sale is over start on the stamps. Try to collect on the excitement stirred up by the bond sale, and when a man is too flat broke to buy another fifty dollar bond, you can still urge him to blow his quarters.

Boom the Band.

You pay so much for a picture and you expect to get a profit on it. You do if you advertise properly. Why not look on your music in the same light? Advertise that. Not just "Good music," "or our Symphony Orchestra," but take space to tell about them and what they will play. It will pay its cost.

Book It.

Try, and if you don't succeed, get a copy of Picture Theatre Advertising and try again.

Notice!

Questions relating to the writing of photoplays and photoplay synopses will be replied to by mail where a return envelope, properly stamped, accompanies the inquiry. No attention will be paid to questions relating to the market, nor can manuscripts or parts of manuscripts be criticized.

Pleasing Yourself.

MY teacher tells me that I must write stories like ————," was the wail of a novice. "I don't like that style of stories," she added, "and I won't write them." We knew the teacher rather better than we did the writer, and we knew that he was merely pointing out certain stories as types of the material that sells. He was, perhaps, giving over emphasis to certain stories that he liked personally, but in the main the examples he cited were all good current fiction and precisely the stuff that editors are buying. The ideas he decried were the "strong" stories with unhappy endings that all beginners take to at first. Experienced writers know that this style of story does not sell steadily. Now and then one will be taken because of its unusualness, but there is no steady demand for this class of work and the stories are not really strong. They are gloomy and tragic, but they lack real strength of appeal because they do not gain sympathy. Think out your tragic plots, if you will; write them, if you must, but if you pay a man to teach you to write, be willing to concede to him a knowledge of his craft superior to your own, and follow his instructions; particularly if, as in the present case, the teacher. Write to please yourself if there is only yourself to please, but when you start to write for the market, write what the market will buy, and write only that.

New Edition.

The Home Correspondence Schools, Springfield, Mass., has issued a revised edition of Writing the Short Story, by Dr. J. Berg Esenwein. It is substantially the same as the previous edition, but is even more carefully edited than the former standard text book.

Novelty Stories.

It is good advice not to get too unusual in stories intended for the screen, but it is equally good advice not to get too usual. A story too wildly improbable is not apt to be accepted by an editor, but the same holds even more true of the same old stuff all over again. There must be a decided percentage of novelty in the handling of a plot or it will not be worth while to send it out for sale. The same thing can be done from studio scripts by a staff writer much better than it can be done by the outsider. Unless your story is decidedly out of the ordinary run of plots, it will not pay to waste stamps upon it.

A Rarity.

A late issue of the Author's League Bulletin defines an "Author's League Author" as "one who knows when he is being cheated by the movies, and why." And the definition was written by Dana Burnett, who was conducting a humorous column in the Evening Sun when the regular author was taking a week off. The Author's League is increasing its membership among the soreheaded photoplay writers by its flings at the motion picture business, aud also appeals to a proportion of real authors who have seen their brain children butchered by incompetent direction and cutting, but there are comparatively few authors who have been "cheated by the movies," and the League would be doing better work did it seek to help raise the standard of authorship. Too many members have cheated the movies by selling inferior product.

Reflections.

Perhaps it is only natural, but none the less it is a mistake to try to write your own life into your plots. If you have recently suffered a bereavement, do not write about death, or slander the legal craft because you got the worst of it in a lawsuit. Store up all that happens to you as part of your general stock of knowledge, but do not base your plots upon the happenings of your daily life. That is not authorship, but a sublimated form of keeping a diary, and few such books are very interesting to strangers.

Has the Idea.

"I am not writing war stories," announces a correspondent, "but I am making a scrap book of certain phases of the war. I'm young yet, and I can afford to keep this material until war stories come into demand." There is some sense in this idea. Stories of the war will not be in great demand until the scars are healed, but a scrap book of daily incidents will be valuable when there is a demand for such material and we have mostly the histories to turn to. Current press clippings will then be found more inspiring than the dry historical facts—but the author must be very young who hopes to make use of this material at the proper time.

Too Busy.

It has been suggested that by permitting authors to copyright their scripts the revenues of the Government could be materially increased at this time. Doubtless they could, but the initial revenue would probably be more than offset by the cost of a building in which they could be kept. The Copyright Office is cramped for quarters, at best, and the scripts would seriously add to the burdens of the office. This is not the time to work for copyright legislation. Congress is busy with far more important things.

Selling Schemes.

The best selling scheme is to pick out the very best of your stories to offer and then to offer only the best of those. Even the best of the best is apt to be none too good.

Saving Daylight.

Instead of burning the midnight oil try saving daylight. Just about dawn these mornings is a fine time to think. The air is still cool and fresh from the night and there is little stirring. You can plan a lot of things before the milk comes. Try it some time.

Do Your Own.

Don't let friends give you ideas. Most of the time the story is not apt to be good, and when it is it is safe to say that the idea is not original and you may be accused of plagiarism. One man we know almost lost his reputation for honesty through sending around a bunch of stories an alleged friend gave him. Think up your own plots. They are apt to be better balanced and you'll know more about them.

Send Them In.

"How can I find out whether Paramount is buying—or can you tell me?" asks a correspondent. The way is to send in some stuff. If they buy it, they are.

Too Quick.

Rome was not built in a day; neither was a good synopsis.

Get Ribbons.

It is cheaper to buy a new ribbon than to lose the sale of a synopsis because the editor won't read it.

Select Carefully.

With only eighteen to twenty releases a week, what chance do you stand with a synopsis that is not the best you can do?

Paint It Over.

There may be nothing new under the sun, but you can camouflage a little.

Changing Over.

Now try and write a plot in which the heroine does not go to France and meet the man she loved in the hospital.

Crook It Up.

It's a long lane that has no turning and a longer story that has no sudden twists.

Better Place.

If your comedy synopsis is so humorous that it makes you laugh, fix it up a bit and send it to the comic papers. It is comedy of words, but the action probably will be slow.

The Aim.

Write first of all to please yourself, but try to write so as to please yourself and the editors.

Keep On.

Don't despise your own work because you see better. Keep up your courage and you'll do better work yourself in time.

Gauging the Synopsis.

It is not the number of words in a synopsis that counts. It's the number and value of the situations.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

Of Large Importance.

For some time past it has been necessary for projection machine manufacturers, in common with all other manufacturers using metals, to secure from Federal authorities a permit before raw stock could be secured. In order that matters might be brought to a more stable and satisfactory basis insofar as probable permanency of supply be concerned, the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry got busy, took the matter up with the War Industries Board, afterward appointing a committee, upon which were representatives of both the Power's and Precision companies. This committee held several sessions with representatives of the War Industries Board, the final result of which appears to be that a permanent supply of raw stock is assured, but the following letter has been addressed to all projection machine manufacturers:

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.
Conservation Division.
Washington, D. C., Sept. 17, 1918.

To the Manufacturers of Motion Picture Machines:

It is of primary importance in the present emergency that the country's resources be used to full advantage, and that we husband our supply of materials, equipment and capital to aid in carrying on the war.

The Conservation Division of the War Industries Board has already put into effect in various industries plans for saving essential materials and equipment, and for reducing the amount of capital tied up in manufacturers' and dealers' stocks.

The division has been informed that manufacturers in your industry are producing machines with lenses of a greater variety of sizes than is necessary in war time, that considerable saving in the weight of machines can be effected, with a further saving by substitution in many cases of some less essential materials for the brass and aluminum now used, and that economies can be effected in the distribution of accessories. The elimination of the avoidable use of brass, steel, iron and aluminum, which are all urgently required for war purposes, is particularly desired.

The schedule which has been prepared is being submitted to each manufacturer of motion picture machines. A copy is enclosed.

This program of manufacture is to become effective as of dates noted therein, unless by some modification it can be shown that still further conservation of much needed materials can be brought about. If you have suggestions on this program whereby greater economies can be effected, we shall be glad to receive them. Please acknowledge promptly to this Division the receipt of this schedule, with assurance of your co-operation.

CONSERVATION DIVISION,
WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.

The schedule referred to is as follows:

WAR INDUSTRIES BOARD.
Conservation Division.

Washington, Sept. 17, 1918.

SCHEDULE FOR THE MANUFACTURERS OF MOTION PICTURE MACHINES.

1. The purchase of new lenses to be restricted from this date to 4 inches, 5 inches and 6 inches focal lengths, and 16 inches, 20 inches and 24 inches stereo. There is no restriction in dealing in second-hand lenses of any size.

2 After September 20, 1918, the following accessories to be furnished to purchasers only upon request as extras:

(a) Rheostats.
(b) Rewinders.
(c) Reels.

3. Each manufacturer to reduce the weight of his machines as much as is practicable and to advise this Division immediately of the amount of this reduction.

4. Each manufacturer to substitute some less essential material for brass, aluminum and steel insofar as possible, and to advise this Division of the action taken.

CONSERVATION DIVISION,

Mr. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, manufacturers of the Simplex, advises me that his company is making every effort to comply with the schedule to the letter. Will C. Smith, general manager of Nicholas Power Company, says: "We have pledged ourselves to co-operate with the War Industries Board to the fullest extent, and to do all we possibly can to reduce the weight of our equipment, which will necessitate quite a number of changes, aside from the rheostat, rewinder and reels."

Projectionists and theatre managers will take note of the limiting of projection lenses to 4, 5 and 6 inch focal length. This will operate to some inconvenience, in some cases, but it will be nothing serious. As to the elimination of rewinders, rheostats and reels, it merely means that purchasers of new equipment will purchase them as extras if they are really needed; if not, then there will be that much saved to them. As a matter of fact, rheostats and rewinders are not properly a part of a projector and should not be included in their selling. In many cases theatre men have purchased projectors, only to receive rheostats and rewinders, for which they had no more use than a pup has for a second tail. Oh yes, they paid for this equipment. Don't let 'um tell ya different. And, of course, this all meant waste of money and good material. The War Industries Board did well to put a stop to this procedure. As it now is, the man who wants a rheostat or rewinder, will buy one, but he who does not, will not be forced to do so when he needs a new projector. The elimination of excess and needless weight is also good. A great mass of metal in a stand does not mean that it is one bit better, or even as good as a properly designed light one, and the excess weight costs in both metal, freight and handling. This department is very glad indeed to see the two leading projector manufacturers acquiesing so heartily in the dictum of the Board, though it is what we would expect from men of their calibre.

Will Visit Ohio.

The convention of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, which was to have met in Cleveland October 21, has been postponed, owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza. The postponement will be for such length of time as may be necessary to re-establish normal health conditions, but it is not expected to be more than two or three weeks, or a month at most.

Learning that I was to attend the meeting, the secretary of Local Union 376, Mansfield, Ohio, writes, asking if it would be possible for me to go from Cleveland to that city and address the theatre managers and projectionists of Mansfield.

I have never yet refused a call of that sort, where distance was not prohibitive, and will be glad to go to Mansfield after the Cleveland meeting. Also, while I am at it, if there are other Ohio cities that would like to have me come, perhaps I can arrange to do so, provided they notify me of their desire soon.

New Wire Terminal.

A. P. Reed, Syracuse, New York, sends in samples of new "Eclipse" terminal, designed for use in lamphouse, or where there is too much heat to allow of a soldered connection. The lug is simple in construction, is made of bronze metal and grips the wire very similar to the way it would be gripped or clamped in an ordinary vise. The contact is circular, and the method of inserting the wire leaves little to be desired. Entire surface from which insulation is stripped goes inside the clamp, so that no raw wire is left exposed to mechanical heat. On next page we see view of the clamp and circular contact; also, a side view of the whole clamp. The principle of the clamp looks good. The only criticism, or suggestion I might perhaps better call it, would be that more metal be used—that it be made on somewhat more generous proportions. The screw is smaller than I would myself use; also the clamp bar is weak. Such devices are subject to very hight temperature, particularly where high amperage is used, therefore they must be of generous proportions. The clamp is probably strong enough if handled right, but you will find that many operators, and even some projectionists, will come down on the clamp screw with twice the necessary pressure, with result that when the clamp gets hot the clamp-bar will give, unless it be very strong.

Aside from this one possible weakness, I can recommend the Eclipse as being a thoroughly practical wire terminal. The price is low—40 cents each.

Question Box.

Can He Be Licensed?

A Georgia projectionist says:

> Much pleased with the handbook received a week ago. It is well worth the money invested in it. Will you kindly advise as to whether or not I can be licensed? Will be sixteen years old in December and have had ten months' actual experience.

Whether or not you can be licensed is entirely a matter for your local examining board to determine. But do you really think that it would be exactly the right thing to license one as young as you, after only ten months' experience? Also let me inquire what you have studied during those ten months? You have just secured a handbook. That is good, but you should have had it at least ten months ago! What other books have you? Would you expect to graduate from a locomotive fireman to engineer in ten months? Let me ask you one or two simple questions? What various effects may be produced in your screen result by moving the lamp-house closer to or further away from the mechanism? Suppose you took charge of a projection room, how would you proceed to determine for yourself whether or not the projection room leads were large enough to supply maximum current demand without waste by reason or excessive voltage drop? How would you proceed to test your rheostat for ground, and if you found there was a ground how would you proceed to determine which grid or coil it is in? Would you or would you not ground your machine, and why? Would you consider the auditorium lighting as being an integral part of your projection problem? What do you know about screens and the suitableness of various surfaces under various conditions?

These are just a few of the various things you must understand in order to be a projectionist. You must even have knowledge of them in order to be the operator of a moving picture machine, if you are to operate the machine with any degree of intelligence. There are hundreds of other equally important questions. Get the question booklets and see how many of them you are able to answer intelligently. For instance, you are, we will suppose, a licensed projectionist, which means that some examining board has examined you and declared you capable of taking charge of any projection plant within their jurisdiction. You secure a position, and in your charge are placed two high-class projectors and a motor generator set, altogether worth well up toward $1,500 The motor generator is worth, say $600. It will be seriously injured if not properly lubricated. What oil would you recommend? Its commutator brushes start sparking. Where would you look for the trouble? There suddenly appears a ring of fire clear around the commutator. What would you do and where would you seek the trouble? You have an economizer and it feels very hot to the touch. How would you determine whether or not it is too hot to be safe? Your employer proposes to purchase a new projector. He asks you which is best. Could you advise him intelligently? Having received the new projector, tell us how you would proceed to determine the following points, viz.: What condenser lenses ought you to have; what distance should they be apart; what should be the distance from condenser to aperture; what should be the diameter of projection lens and the distance of revolving shutter from same; how must you proceed to determine whether or not the shutter received with the machine was cutting more light than necessary under local conditions, giving more flicker tendency than necessary, and if so, how would you remedy the fault?

Please understand that I am not trying to discourage you, son, but merely pointing out to you that ability to get a light on the screen, splice a film, thread a machine and draw your pay does not make you a competent projectionists, or even a competent machine operator. After reading the foregoing, hold communion with yourself and answer your own query as to whether or no you can, or, at least, should be licensed.

Still Alive.

W. H. Shepherd, formerly of Davenport, writes from Spokane, Washington, in part, as follows:

> Thought I would let you know I am still alive, though since last I wrote my address has changed somewhat. Have noticed from time to time, in the department, that yourself and others change the name or title "operator" to "projectionist." This is, to my way of thinking, an excellent idea, and one deserving of more attention by the men themselves, nine out of ten of whom still call themselves "operators" instead of applying the newer, better title. This, however, was not my reason for calling your attention to the matter. In view of the fact that you are trying to change the title, and naturally wish to make a go of it, I would suggest that your advertisement on last page of department be changed to read: "For Managers and Projectionists." What do you say to that?

Why just this, Brother Shepherd: The title of the book cannot possibly be changed without throwing away a large number of them, and so long as the title of the book is what it is that is what we must use in the advertisements. If it were otherwise you would see that ad changed so quickly that it would make your head swim. The new book will be for projectionists, or for managers, projectionists and operators, because I have the inclination to differentiate as between the mere operator and the projectionist. We have many men who really are nothing but operators, and darned poor ones at that. They would never be projectionists, because the projectionist must put brains into his work, and whereas I would hardly go the length of saying that the day they were made brains had run low, still if they have the usual supply they don't seem to use them, which amounts to about the same thing. They are machine operators—nothing more. I presume, however, it may really be impracticable to differentiate by applying two titles. What say our readers?

As to the men being slow to use the new title, why what do you expect? They have been known as "operators," and custom is a tremendously hard thing to break. You know we had to change the clocks so that six o'clock was actually five o'clock, whereupon everyone cheerfully got up at five instead of six, or at least crawled out of the hay one hour earlier. There wasn't even a murmur of discontent. They scarcely know they were doing it. But if we had asked them to get up at five, with the clock advising them that it was five, great Caesar's ghost, what a wail of agony there would have been. We are creatures of h-a-b-i-t, and there you are. Had the name projectionist been used in the first place, there would have been just as much or even more of a wrench had someone proposed to change it to "operator." I am proposing the change which has been approved by the Nicholas Power and the Precision Machine Company and others, because "operator" is, as I have said, largely meaningless and wholly inappropriate. Projectionist suggests a respectable profession. It gives the man something to live up to and be proud of. The organist is an operator. He operates an organ. Go down and call him one if you want to see an insulted organist. Glad to hear from you. Come again.

Changing Friction Drive.

Husk Done, Payson, Utah, proposes to change his Powers friction drive, as follows:

> Though I have been a department reader for lo these many moons, this is my first call for advice. A year ago last winter we installed two new Powers 6-A projectors. Everything is satisfactory, but I have decided to put on a direct drive and want your advice regarding same. Which do you regard as the better practice: To leave the motor on the machine and turn it in line with the pulley, or to remove and install it on a solid base. Would I have to change size of pulleys in order to do this?

What you presumably propose is to drive by belting direct to the flywheel. This, Old Man, I regard as highly objectionable. The bearing carrying the flywheel end of the flywheel shaft has heavy, high-speed duty to perform in any event, and to add to it the pull of a belt is nothing short of bad practice. This is the more true since the opposite end of the shaft carries the intermittent actuating cam and that is something so highly sensitive that one ten-thousandth of an inch variation may show up in the screen result. If your friction speed control is not working right and you will describe the trouble I will be glad to suggest a remedy. There is another objection to direct drive, without speed control, viz: When current is turned on the motor yanks the projector up to maximum speed at once, which is bad for both motor and machine. If you insist on discarding the Powers drive, then it will be well to substitute some other form of speed control and belt to a pulley attached to belt pulley on left end of lower sprocket shaft.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Evolution of Picture Music Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part I.

BACK in the days of the store front "Movies," there was noise with the picture instead of music for the photoplay. The film was run in silence except for the beating of the big drum outside, for the purpose of drawing the crowds to this new form of side show. Intermittently might be heard the voice of the "barker" droning his droll catchphrases, informing the inquisitive populace that for "One dime, ten cents, or a tenth part of a dollar," they could see "the greatest wonder of the age, the cinematograph showing MOV-ING PIC-CHURES." The greater the merits of this one-reeler, the greater the noise which accompanied it.

That was in 1903—not so far back as we count years—but from the standpoint of the film industry, dimly in the distant and distasteful past. Following closely upon the discovery that the "movie" fad could become a great entertainment institution, a few progressives installed a piano to entertain the audience, which arrived early and were forced to wait until there were sufficient paid admissions to warrant starting the show. Those were the days when they "packed 'em in," rushed the five hundred feet through, and began packing them in again for another speedy depletion of their dimes. During the "packing" process, the pianist regaled the seated ones with some music, mostly apropos of nothing, being an extemporization hastily improvised from his admittedly fertile brain—that is, he admitted the fertility.

The moment the lights went out, and he could no longer be seen, he refused to be heard and took himself off to one of the back exits to enjoy a cigarette in quiet. The shuffling of retreating feet was the signal to again begin work and, having mentally composed a marvelous little ditty while under the influence of nicotine, he straightway rushed in and perpetrated it upon the piano and the incoming crowd.

Yes, indeed, those were the halcyon times! Sometimes as many as twenty shows were run off in a day if the crowds were eager; if not, the number fell away to ten. Rainy days were the betes noir of the showman and the ballyhoo man, the latter being forced to don his mackintosh and rubber boots, calling his wares from beneath the shade of an umbrella. Likewise, the pianist dreaded wet weather for the house was slow to fill up and his working hours became longer in the aggregate.

By accident, a conscientious musician must have slipped into the ranks, for it is recorded that one so far forgot himself as to play soft music for a particularly touching death-bed scene. The records go further and inform us that it received much applause—not the death-bed scene—but the innovation. That young man started something. He had fitted music to a portion of the plot and, though it was only one scene and, in all probability, the big moment of the picture, his idea was the tiny seed from which has sprung up a profession enlisting over forty thousand musicians.

Naturally the next step was the rearrangement of the duties of the pianist. Let the people wait in silence! His work had become too valuable in accompaning the picture to permit the playing of interludes. He was called upon to play for all the scenes and use his own judgment. He did both. His playing was bad, but his judgment was worse; so they brought the big drum from the outside and hired a man to liven up the "music."

Well, if "music" means life, that "Movie" house became the liveliest place in town. It resolved itself into a question in the minds of the performers as to whom could make the most noise, and it simply had to be decided one way or the other. The pianist averred that the drum was not a musical instrument and he could prove it by crashing chords and glistening glissandos. On the other hand, the loyal mind of the drummer could not conceive of superiority in an instrument called to sound by twiddling fingers. Never should it be said that Big Bass Drum, his little brother, Snare Drum, and his first cousin, Cymbal, allowed a mere piano to out-voice the great family of Percussion. That started something else.

Whereas the first era of picture accompaniment gave us noise on the outside, the second produced greater din on the inside. In the excitement of the contest, the participants forgot all about the picture and lovelorn he-roes bemoaned their sad lot to the accompaniment of musical cannonading, while Death, Despair, Distress, and Deep Grief stalked through the story to the same thundrous racket.

This phase of picture playing grew worse even in spite of the fact that almost all the showmen followed the lead and installed pianos. Nowhere was there to be found peace, and the patrons complained bitterly. It was too much—too much noise and too little show for too much money. This condition had to be changed—and it was, slightly.

A violinist was introduced into this harmonious group, to produce a modicum of sweetness. The drummer was admonished to restrain his arm exercises and the pianist was expected to co-operate with the newcomer. This trio paid more attention to the picture and followed it after a fashion, but therein lay the fault. They followed it instead of fitting it. Nevertheless, much progress was made toward the right objective and through their mistakes they were learning.

Of course it was not to be expected that they should play continuously. Oh no! They only played during those scenes which appealed to them as holding possibilities for music with which they were conversant.

Coincident with the advent of the "fiddler," there appeared by the drummer's side a few more members of the Percussion family.

There was Baby Triangle, with her tiny voice, Sister Bell, to provide church atmosphere and another first cousin, Chinese Gong. They brought with them other more distant relatives to produce special mechanical effects, such as cocoanut shells for hoof-beats, a rachet block, sand block, and a box of glass. In fact, it looked as though the Percussion family was holding reunion that was meant to be permanent. The dismal sounds emanating from that quarter led one to suspect that father and mother were absent.

Notwithstanding the mediocrity of the artists in their picture accompaniment, the people liked the music and said so. This pleased the managers and they began looking around for musical novelties to prolong the short shows. The store front was going and the little theatre, having a three to six hundred seating capacity, was arriving.

About this time, Mitchell Mark opened the Comique Theatre in Boston, in which he built an orchestral pit of such depth that the musicians were entirely hidden from the view of the audience. His idea met with unanimous approval and another step had been taken for the advancement of picture music.

Mr. Marks established himself as an ultra progressive when, in 1907, he opened the Alhambra Theatre on Euclid avenue in Cleveland, in which there was installed the first church organ to be used in the "movies." He also engaged an orchestra of eight pieces to create a pleasing ensemble and for the accompaniment of vocalists, one of whom appeared on each program. The scale of prices ranged from ten to fifty cents.

It must be remembered that pictures were still released in single reel lengths only, and it is rather interesting to note the arrangement of the program which consisted of the following, in the order named: An Orchestral Overture; Scenes from Shadowland; Organ Solo; Scenes from Shadowland; Vocal Selection; Scenes from Shadowland; and Exit March.

This program was evolved by Mr. Marks and grew under the excellent management of Mr. Harold Edel. It was the forerunner of the picture palace and its galaxy of musical talent.

Hezekiah Hirams Hears Strand Music.

IT WAS Sunday night, October 25, when we arrived at the spacious portals of the Strand lobby. We were more than surprised, and a bit disconcerted, to find in the long lines of humanity eager for tickets an old friend. Hezekiah Hirams was his cognomen, and he hails from the "tall timbers," where a little plot of ground, which he boastingly calls a farm, gives him and his family daily sustenance.

After the long-lost-brother stuff had been duly performed and our tickets had been taken, we found seats. From the moment we entered the auditorium until the close of the performance, "Hez"—we called him that for short, when we wanted to borrow money—kept up a running commentary upon the various musical offerings. Hezekiah, being the "champeen" harmonica player of Berkshire county, "By Heck," his opinion upon musical matters was highly rated among his fellows.

"Wal, I'll be swizzled if that there orchestry ain't the biggest I seen since I was in Boston. That Czardas, I reckon be a dance that comes from somewhere in the war zone. It certainly sounds mighty good."

He was right. The overture conducted by Carl Edouarde, was good in the full significance of the word. The crowded theatre showed its appraciation unmistakably.

After the Topical Review, which was played vigorously but not always in time with the marching soldiers, Hirams broke out again.

"Wal, I swan, if that ain't one of the usher gals up there asingin' that 'Down in Mobile' song."

"Not 'Down in Mobile, Hez,' but 'La Donna E Mobile' from the opera 'Rigoletto,' we replied.

"Be that as it may, it sounds mighty like a man dressed up like a woman to me," he said.

"This lady, old friend, is a female tenor and sings the great arias from grand opera as easily as Caruso. Watch her breathing, note her clear enunciation, her diction, and clean-cut attacks. Isn't she wonderful?" we queried.

He did not reply, for at that moment Miss Jane Holden finished her song and the audience simply screamed their applause. It was truly an ovation and merited indeed. Miss Holden's voice is remarkable and her singing portrays the highest technical form without the usual machine-like precision that take away soulfulness.

Another real artiste, Alys Michot, rendered the "Bell Song" from "Lakme" and proved herself most adept in coloratura roles. The opening cadenza is one of the biggest things in opera because of its long duration without accompaniment. Many of the noted singers fall below the key before they reach the song proper, but Miss Michot held the pitch perfectly.

The entire performance was meritorious. Mr. Edouarde paid close attention to synchrony, and, although sometimes he was forced to run over the cues to reach his musical cadence by "pulling" the orchestra, the break was made imperceptible.

As we ambled out, Hezekiah seemed in a brown study. He was cogitating. Now, when a Hirams begins cogitating there's sure to be a surprising denouement. And there was. As if some inner force propelled the words from his body he exclaimed:

"All they need in that orchestry is a good strong harmonica player, and, by Dad, I'm goin' to apply to Mr. Strand before I'm another day older."

Rivoli Music for Pictorial Perfect.

The Rivoli orchestra opened the performance with the presentation of "Mignon" overture, conducted by Erno Rapee. The Horn solo was particularly pleasing and the general orchestral ensemble was fine.

"Midst Peaceful Scenes" showed valleys and mountains, rivers and rivulets, forests and glades. It was truly pastorale and peaceful, yet the first selection used was most grandioso in its style. The second choice was better.

"Gypsy Airs," by Sarasate, played as a violin solo by Alberto Bachmann, proved pleasing. During the lento movement, the curtain fell back, showing the candle lighted cell of a monk, with a little harmonium occupying the center of the room. This setting was very artistic and in keeping with the music.

The Animated Pictorial was wonderful from the musical standpoint. It was 100 per cent. artistic, suitable and synchronous. We know that is strong praise, but even that does not express the merit of the setting.

Gladys Rice, soprano, sang "The Last Rose of Summer." Seated on a bench with a big moon rising behind her in the night sky, she made a pretty silhouette which conveyed more to the audience than the singing. Of course the proverbial rose was in evidence, but added nothing to the general good effect. To create the atmosphere for the song, the orchestra played part of "In the Gloaming."

The fitting of the feature, "A Woman of Impluse," was splendid. Opening with characteristic Italian folk songs, it proceeded smoothly into the overture from "Carmen." Then, as parts of the opera were shown, the music belonging to them was used. The "Habanera" we felt, could have been replaced by the "Seguidilla," and more made out of the scene. The theme for the heroine was Nevin's "Venetian Love Song," and nothing else could have been chosen that would portray her better.

Pershing Says Music Is Essential.

When General Pershing arrived in France, he immediately discovered a great difference, on comparison, between the French and American military bands. He found the French military bands were never less than fifty instrumentalists, and a drum and bugle corps of from 25 to 30. He took immediate steps to have the military bands of the U. S. increased from 28 to 50. Since then the Government has opened schools of instruction for army musicians, which already has caused great improvement. The improvement would be still more marked if the military had a distinct unit of their own, instead of being attached to the headquarter, non-commissioned staff. That may come in time, through either orders of the commander-in-chief, or Congressional legislation. Let us pray that it may come speedily.

The press dispatches credit General Pershing with making another improvement which means much to the bands of the military service of the country.

Since bands were first made a part of the military service, about three centuries ago, the bandsmen have always been detailed as stretcher bearers during battle. The present system of war is entirely different from what it was formerly. Then, battles were fought in the open, and rarely lasted longer than one day. Now, war is a matter of trench warfare, and is a continuous affair. The men of the trenches are frequently relieved for rest and recuperation. When they return to their billets, they need not only rest, but recreation, and recreation without music is unthinkable. But the members of the bands are at the front acting as stretcher bearers. The Doughboys, immortalized by this war as the knightliest soldiers that ever bore arms, growled, like good soldiers often do, on account of the absence of their bands, and those growls finally reached General Pershing's ears. He at once recognized, like a good old soldier, that there was some merit in the doughboys' growl, as to their being deprived of music while recuperating for the next scrap with the Boche. So he issued an order that bandsmen should be withdrawn from stretcher service, and still there are some people whose souls are so dead that they insist that music is a special invention of his Satanic Majesty to corrupt the souls of mankind.

"The Old Oaken Bucket," by Woodworth.

On a poor, run-down farm in Scituate, Mass., in January, 1785, there came into the world Samuel Woodworth, a child of poverty, who never lived to experience anything else except for a few rare and fleeting moments and at long divided intervals.

His life began prosaically enough, and he dragged through the years too lacking in ambition to work and with no taste for study. At fourteen, he had acquired only the most superficial knowledge of the "Three Rs," but he had, seemingly, a natural talent for writing, and had already composed several short poems. These verses were submitted to the village school master and the local minister. Both gentlemen were greatly impressed and pronounced the literary effusions remarkable. The minister took the lad into his family and conscientiously tried to teach him Latin and English. But the boy scribbled away his time and refused to study. The preacher seemed not easily discouraged, for he, in conjunction with the aforesaid school teacher, tried to interest some of the wealthy people to the extent of providing a fund whereby the young Samuel could be sent to college. But the attempt was abortive and his future education was given up.

Then Woodworth took matters into his own hands and decided upon printing as a profession, going to Boston to learn the intricacies of the trade. However, at the end of his apprenticeship, he tired of the routine work, and became a wanderer—a tramp printer—stopping for a few days' work as funds failed him, in towns through which he passed.

Eventually, he drifted to New York, where he established a newspaper, procuring an outfit on credit. He christened his venture "The Belles Lettres Repository." As might have been naturally predicted, the undertaking proved a failure. Once more the wander-lure seized him, and history repeated itself. But New York evidently had some charm for him, as finally he gravitated back again and selfishly divided the miseries of his poverty-stricken existence with a wife and four children.

During the war of 1812-15, Mr. Woodworth conducted a weekly newspaper called "The War." He also equally well mismanaged a monthly magazine, and the result was inevitable. Again he repaired to a printing office and accepted work as the lesser of two evils. He seems to have made a somewhat good impression in this place, for he was asked to write, in the style of a romance, a history of the war with England. It was entitled "The Champions of Freedom." No one reads it now, but at the time it was so popular that the printing was begun when only two sheets were written.

This little history became the rage, and it brought Woodworth before the public Two reliable publishing houses offered to collect, illustrate and publish his poems, accompanied by a sketch of his life. If the man had only been gifted with sufficient ambition, he could have amassed a fortune before his popularity waned. But he let his opportunity slip by as usual.

"The Old Oaken Bucket" was written in the summer of 1819, when, with his long-suffering family, the poet was living in Duane street, New York City. One day he came in, tired and thirsty. He poured out a glass of water and drained it. As he set the glass down, he exclaimed: "That is very refreshing, but how much more so would it be to take a good, long draught from the old oaken bucket I left hanging in the well at my father's home." His wife said: "Wouldn't that be a pretty subject for a poem?" At this suggestion he seized a pen and, as the picture of his childhood home rose vividly to his fancy, he wrote the words which have lived for a century and the only one of all his writings that is at all known at this time.

The name of Frederick Smith appears as the composer of the music, but he was merely the arranger. An adaptation of Kiallmark's music for Moore's "Araby's Daughter" furnished the melody.

CHORUS

In my waking hours I'm planning
All the things that we shall do;

Through scenes we loved and knew.
And I tell myself at evening—
When the long, long day is through—
That I'm one day nearer to the time
When I come home to you.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. I am a clarinet player in an orchestra of three pieces, and there have been complaints that all the audience can hear is the clarinet. In spite of the fact that I play as softly as possible, the instrument still stands out above the others. How can I remedy it?

A. The clarinet has no place in a three-piece orchestra, and if the reed effect is required, we would suggest that you play baritone saxaphone reading from the cello part. Even under those conditions it would be necessary to hold in all the time.

Q. Would you give me a list of Grieg numbers which would be suitable for pictures?

A. All Grieg's music is especially adapted for pictures and wonderfully effective for scenes which are atmospheric. The following list are those which are most frequently used:

Norwegian Dance	Asra
To Spring	Repose of the Forest
Temple Dance	With a Violet
Bridal Procession	Arabian Dance
Three Lyric Pieces	At Home
A Dream	Suite No. 1 and No. 2

Allegretto
(From Violin Sonata No. 2)

Q. Who was the composer of the American opera "Bianca," and has it been performed in America?

A. Henry Hadley is the composer of the one-act opera which had its first presentation at the Park Theatre in New York towards the end of last season. It is published by Harold Flammer, Inc.

Q. I see in the advertisements in your department mention of the Professional School of Picture Playing. Would you explain what it consists and whether it has your recommendation or not?

A. We are pleased to recommend the Professional School of Picture Playing as the one and only school of the kind in the country. Its faculty is composed of experienced musicians in picture playing, and they have taken over the Strand Theatre in Los Angeles, where every day features are screened and students instructed in the art of playing them.

Q. Our theatre has been closed because of influenza for four or five weeks and, as I am the organist, there is nothing for me to do during that time. Nothing has been said about paying salaries. Can I collect?

A. If your theatre has been closed by the local Board of Health, the law provides that you should receive salary for the full period unless two weeks' notice is given that your services will no longer be required. If you are a member of the Musicians' Union two weeks' notice must be given anyway.

Q. Is the Caruso advertised to appear in pictures the same Caruso who sings in Opera?

A. It is indeed.

Q. Who are the noted conductors or musical directors in New York who specialize in symphony work?

A. Joseph Stransky, Conductor of the Philharmonic Society; Walter Damrosch, Director of the New York Symphony; Modest Altschuler, Conductor of the Russian Symphony; Arnold Volpe, Conductor of Young Men's Symphony Orchestra; Christian Kriens, of the Kriens' Symphony Club.

Q. Who wrote "Freedom for All Forever," and where can I get it?

A. Lieut. B. C. Hilliam was the composer, and M. Witmark & Sons, New York, are the publishers.

Q. Can you tell me whether the following composers are living and of what nationality they were: Boito, Debussy, Charpentier and Parry?

A. Arrigo Boito, an Italian composer known for his opera, "Mefistofele," died in the last year. Debussy also passed away recently, much admired by his fellow countrymen in France. Charpentier, we believe, is still alive and also in France. Parry is a little known Englishman who died last year after bringing forth some works that astounded the musical public.

"The Battle Hymn of Democracy" Music.

Music is said to embody the expression of the most secret emotions and to be the audible outreaching of the human soul toward the Infinite.

The Great War is the grandest tumult of all time. It has been like the majestic sweep of the God of nature in a great storm.

Perhaps it is the majesty of the action that has inspired such universal heroism among the soldiers.

With all this as an inspiration, "The Battle Hymn of Democracy" has been written. The song is stately and majestic, yet full of variety and color and has an unmistakable appeal.

This waltz should meet the needs of every leader in pictures. It has a perfect rhythm and a wonderful melody. Add it to your library.

have prepared a new piano and organ accompaniment and are having a new band orchestration written. This music, they feel, will properly interpret the spirit of the song and become a fitting setting for the splendid thought it expresses.

Liberty Loan Drive Boosted by Song.

"O never a Fritz shall sail
On a ship that sails with me,
Never a box or bale
That smells of Germany."

Thus the chorus of the song runs. It is not at all surprising that the new song, "The Likes of They," did such excellent service in the Fourth Liberty Loan Drive when it embodies the above sentiments.

This song, the lyrics of which are by A. P. Herbert and the music by C. A. Lidgey, is not a gem of literature and was not intended to be such. But it breathes the spirit of the men who are fighting to free the world from the machinations of the Huns, and is written in an idiom that appeals to our hearts.

The publishers, Chappell & Co., Ltd., are to be congratulated upon this song so full of heart appeal. It should become very popular, particularly with our boys in khaki.

COAST STUDIOS CURTAIL PRODUCTION

Few Plants Will Stop Altogether, While Some Will Continue Operations Without Interruption

WHILE all of the west coast studios will have to slow up on production because of the general shutdown of theatres by the Spanish influenza, very few of the plants will stop production altogether.

The plan of curtailment put in operation at the Lasky studios will be followed by most of the other producers. When the theatre shut-down came all players not cast or working in a production at Lasky's were given a four weeks' vacation without pay. By the time the first vacations are over the people now working will be through with their plays and ready to take a month's layoff, while the returning players will be put in new productions. By this means, unless the situation grows very serious and leads to an extended tie-up all over the country, few studios in Los Angeles will be shut down absolutely.

The Metro, Universal and Fox forces, with the exception of the Lehrman Sunshine Comedy companies, who will not stop at all, and most of the organizations with a number of producing units, will follow the four weeks' vacation plan.

The Chaplin, Clara Kimball Young, Griffith studios and the different stars producing at the Brunton plant, which includes Sessue Hayakawa, Bessie Barriscale, Kitty Gordon and Little Gloria Joy, will continue work without interruption.

One or two producers, while realizing the necessity of a curtailment of films because of releasing schedules being shoved anywhere from one to four weeks into the future by the theatre shut-down, have decided to keep right on with production while the weather is good and make the necessary adjustments in their output by laying off during the rainy season.

A Month Off at Fox.

Only one company is at work at present at the Fox studios in Hollywood during the influenza epidemic that is ravaging the west coast. This is the company headed by Madlaine Traverse, who recently came from the east to make pictures at the western plant. Her director, Frank Beall, expects to have the production completed inside of two weeks, when the company will be laid off as required in the order sent out by the national producers. The Gladys Brockwell company finished "Quicksands" before the closing order came, and no other play will be commenced for another month. The Tom Mix company was in the middle of a picture, but Tom had to undergo an operation for an old bullet wound, so the picture will be finished after the ban is lifted and Tom is well.

Jane and Katherine Lee, who arrived on October 16, will not begin work for four weeks.

Brunton Busy Despite Flu.

Three stars will begin production at the Brunton studios immediately, despite the "Spanish Flu" and the wholesale closing of all places where crowds may gather. The stars are Dustin Farnum, Madame Yorska and Lillian Walker. Mme. Yorska is making "The Infernal Net," the story of which was written for her by Sarah Bernhardt; and Lillian Walker has begun the filming of "Fran," from the novel of the same name by Breckenridge Ellis.

Lottie Pickford Seriously Ill.

Lottie Pickford has been seriously ill at the Sister's Hospital in Los Angeles for the past week from a complication of diseases that include chronic bronchitis, pneumonia of the right lung and abscesses of the ear.

Miss Pickford caught a severe cold on her way to Los Angeles from New York, and upon her arrivel, on October 12, had to be taken immediately to the hospital, where her condition grew so alarming that her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Pickford, who was in New York, and her sister, Mary, who was out on a Liberty Loan tour in the west, were telegraphed for. By the time they arrived Lottie had recovered sufficiently to be considered out of danger. Lottie Pickford had been taking active part in various campaigns for the Fourth Liberty Loan in the east when she was stricken.

Son of National Official Dies.

The son of Martin J. Doner, technical director at the National studios in Hollywood, died last week of pneumonia at Camp Fremont. Young Doner at the outbreak of the war went to Manila and was afterward sent to China. From there he went to Japan and eventually to Siberia. He had just returned to the United States, and was waiting for a quarantine to be lifted at the camp to spend his month's furlough with his relatives in Los Angeles when he became a victim of influenza, which quickly developed into pneumonia. The young man was twenty-eight years old, and had developed considerable talent for painting and sculpture.

Katterjohn Films.

An announcement has been made by Monte M. Katterjohn that an organization is being formed to produce a series of film features to be known as the Katterjohn Films. Mr. Katterjohn says that it is planned to make only four productions during the coming year, each picture to be made from an original story of which he is the author, and that it is his intention to follow each play from its inception in his mind until the final cutting and tinting of the completed picture. One of these features will deal with Alaskan life and will have Northern settings and atmosphere, and another may be a propaganda picture dealing with the present international crisis. Space will probably be secured at the Brunton studios for the production of the pictures.

Hampton Back in Los Angeles.

Benjamin B. Hampton has returned from New York, and is busying himself at the Brunton studios, where he is interested in several productions now under way at that plant. One of these is the Matzene film, in which Mme. Yorska is starred, and another is a coming Zane Grey picture which is being prepared for production by George H. Perry. Zane Grey is writing the scenario himself, and the intention is to make it a no-star production, with the two principal characters played by W. Lawson Butt and Irene Luther. Mr. Perry is jubilant because there will not have to be "so many egotistical close-ups."

Two Endings for Eltinge Picture.

Fred J. Balshofer, producer of the Julian Eltinge production, "Over the Rhine,"has made two endings for the picture, each appropriate and logical if certain changes occur in the war before the picture is released. One of these endings has to do with the present peace negotiations in the event of a peaceful ending of the war. But the other, and the one that is preferred by both producer and star, shows the victorious entry of the American troops into Berlin. For the making of these scenes permission was obtained from the Government to make use of the soldiers and equipment at Camp Kearney. The actual crossing of the Rhine, with the soldiers making their bridges across the stream, is shown in the film. A street in the German capital was built on a plot of ground adjoining the army camp.

De Mille Denies Rumors.

Cecil B. De Mille, about whom rumors have been circulating to the effect that he was about to sever his connection with the Lasky organization, has emphatically denied the stories, and says that, although he will continue to produce pictures for the Artcraft program, he will hold himself in readiness to respond to the Government's orders for propaganda films and other work, and that he will go to Washington in about a month, and there is a probability that he will be sent to France on a mission for the Government.

Airships Now the Vogue.

Airships are now the craze at the Lasky plant. Cecil De Mille has been the owner of an airplane for some time, and just a week or so ago Robert Vignola bought one. The first passenger he took up with him was Vivian Martin, and the flight was photographed for scenes in a coming Paramount feature. Now Miss Martin won't be satisfied until she also owns an airship. Wallace Reid has developed the fever, and is seen mooching about the studio with his eyes glued to the pages of various catalogues describing the different makes of airplanes.

Tea for "Snowy" Baker.

Julian Eltinge gave an informal tea at his home at Silver Lake for "Snowy" Baker, athletic promoter from Australia, who is planning soon to enter the films as an actor. Among the guests at the tea who listened to Baker's tales of the antipodes were Alma Francis, Eltinge's leading woman; Olive Thomas, Mrs. William Selig, of Chicago, Rositi Marstini, Mary Thurman, Juanita Hansen and Harry Mestayer.

Directors Switched.

A switching of directors will take place at the Lasky plant immediately upon the completion of Vivian Martin's current picture, when her present director, Robert Vignola, will be put in charge of the Ethel Clayton productions, and Miss Martin will be under the direction of Chet Withey at the Morosco studio.

Reeves to Manage Chaplin.

Alfred Reeves, who managed the famous vaudeville act, "A Night in an English Music Hall," and introduced Charles Chaplin to the American public in 1910, has been made manager of the Chaplin studios on La Brea avenue, in Hollywood. Mr. Reeves returned to England in 1913 when Chaplin went into pictures, and has but recently come back to the United States. Reeves supercedes John Jasper, who has been studio manager for the Chaplin organization for some time. Mr. Jasper has not announced his plans for the future.

Nell Shipman Leaves Vitagraph.

Nell Shipman, who made her first appearance as a Vitagraph star three years ago, and who has recently been appearing in features at the western Vitagraph studios, severed her connection with the organization on November 1. Miss Shipman says she has the highest regard for the solid business methods and the facilities of the Vitagraph management, and speaks gratefully of the courteous treatment accorded her, but she has decided hereafter to contract with leading producers by the picture. Miss Shipman's first picture under the Vitagraph management was the notable feature, "God's Country and the Woman," and her most recent films have been "Baree, Son of Kazan" and "A Gentleman's Agreement."

Increased Force at Lehrman's.

An addition to the producing forces at the Lehrman Sunshine studio includes, besides two directors who will work under the supervision of Henry Lehrman himself, Glen Cavanaugh, Vera Stedman, Jack Cooper and George Ovey; and Leach Cross, a prominent local boxer, who has been put in charge of the property room.

Robinson Wins Commission.

Carlyle Robinson, until a few months ago publicity manager for Charles Chaplin, has qualified for a lieutenant's commission in the Officers' Training School at Camp Pike, Arkansas. Just prior to entering the army last May, Robinson made a tour of the Southern States with Chaplin in behalf of the Third Liberty Loan.

Los Angeles Exchanges Idle.

Every theatre in the Los Angeles Exchange territory has been closed by the epidemic of Spanish influenza that is sweeping the country. The City of Los Angeles was the first of the larger towns to shut down its theatres through an order of the Health Department forbidding public meetings and gatherings of all kinds, and the smaller cities quickly followed the example.

The epidemic seems to be under control of the health authorities, and it is hoped that the ban will be lifted within two or three weeks.

Film Row is marking time. A few of the exchanges have given their employes enforced vacations, but the great majority of the offices have retained all their help and will make no move to curtail overhead expenses unless the situation grows worse, with a prospect of an extended shut-down.

Australian Film Distributer in Town.

John Tait, one of the leading film distributers in Australia, stopped over in Los Angeles on his way to New York, and has been in conference with a number of west coast producers in regard to obtaining pictures for distribution in the antipodes. Mr. Tait is one of the chief rivals of J. C. Williamson, another prominent Australian film man, who recently visited the United States on motion picture business.

Closed Theatres Cleaning House.

All the big moving picture theatres and all the little ones are undergoing a thorough housecleaning during the "Flu" closing order. Some of the houses are only being carefully cleaned and brushed and polished up; others are being entirely overhauled; new carpets are being laid in others, and all are being thoroughly disinfected. It will be a husky "Flu" germ that will find itself alive in any of the Los Angeles theatres after the opening order is given by the Health Department.

Tally's Broadway is being treated to a coat of fresh paint and otherwise being polished up inside and out, and new draperies are being hung at the Kinema.

Notes About Town.

W. H. Clune, proprietor of the Auditorium and the Broadway, has been visiting his son, James, at the San Pedro Submarine Base during the closed season.

Mr. and Mrs. T. L. Tally ran down to San Diego for a few days, as their son, Seymour, who has had a six weeks' siege of pneumonia, is able to be about again.

C. E. Halsell, manager of the Victory, toured the south in his new limousine during the dark days.

The Oasis Theatre at Ajo, Arizona, a mining camp town, was the last theatre in the state to close, according to the manager, L. Franck.

John Johansen, of the Casino Theatre at Yuma, Ariz., took advantage of the "Flu" closing order to make a trip to Los Angeles.

The Mutual Exchange has put in a new projection machine in the show room.

Studio Shorts

MARY McIVOR, Billy Parsons' leading woman, was given a birthday party at the Athletic Club on her eighteenth anniversary, and among the guests, many of whom were relatives, were Mr. and Mrs. George Beban and William Desmond.

W. S. Mason, known to film fans as "Smiling" Billy Mason, plays opposite Dorothy Dalton in her new picture, "Hard Boiled."

Thomas Holding is leading man for Madlaine Traverse in "The Danger Zone," her first picture to be made at the Western Fox Studio.

The news has just come from Chicago that Bennie Zeidman, publicity manager for Douglas Fairbanks, is ill of the Spanish "flu."

Hal Cooley is scheduled to soon wed a Southern belle, Miss Elizabeth Bates, daughter of an Atlanta business man.

Lila Lee has gone to New York during the closed season to visit her guardian, Mrs. Gus Edwards.

William Russell says that the reports that he died of Spanish "flu" were greatly exaggerated.

When Dave Morrissey, of the Fox publicity department, announced his intention of driving his own car in the future, Mrs. Morrissey said: "Oh, fine! And now let's go downtown and take out some additional accident insurance."

National Force Takes $50,000 in Bonds.

More than $50,000 was subscribed to the Fourth Liberty Loan by officials and employes of the National Film Corporation, producers of the Billy Parsons comedies and the Billie Rhodes features.

Richard Dix, of the Morosco dramatic stock company, has been having photographic tests made by Lois Weber, with the probability of his being cast in a coming picture to be made by Miss Weber.

Verne Hardin Porter, late of the Brunton scenario staff, is now with Thomas H. Ince, taking the place of J. G. Hawks, who has resigned.

Jesse D. Hampton has purchased the film rights of Richard Harding Davis' "Soldiers of Fortune" for J. Warren Kerrigan.

Henry Lehrman has heard that ex-King Manuel, of Portugal, sat through the Sunshine comedy, "Roaring Lions and Wedding Bells" three times. "If Manuel had acquired the movie habit earlier in life and patronized the films more than French musical comedies," says Henry, "he might still be punching the clock in the palace and drawing down his regular salary as king."

William S. Hart was accompanied on his Liberty Loan tour through the East by E. H. Allen, his manager; Gerald C. Duffy, his personal representative, and D. W. Warren, his photographer.

Helen Keller acted as sponsor of the 8,800-ton steamer West Arvada, when that ship was launched at the San Pedro dock on October 17.

Every morning while he was at Catalina Islands making scenes for "Camping," Fatty Arbuckle tried to shoot a flying fish, but he never succeeded in winging one.

Harry Harvey, director of the Helen Gibson Western two-reel specials at Universal City, is taking a month's vacation, and has gone to Douglas, Wyoming, to help re-elect his father-in-law sheriff of Converse County.

These Two Still Do Protest.

A luxurious mansion in Laughlin Park is said to have been given the critical O. O. by both Charlie Chaplin and Mildred Harris—yet both aver that there is absolutely no truth in the report that they are engaged.

Bryant Washburn was ill for several days after his return from New York, whither he and his director, Donald Crisp, had gone to film metropolitan scenes for "Venus in the East."

Billie Rhodes is visiting relatives in San Francisco after three months of steady work at the National studios. When the month of "flu" closing has passed and the National reopens she will return to work on her third DeLuxe picture.

Kitty Gordon is having a tennis court made at her new home in Windsor Square.

Such Is Fame in Los Angeles.

Niles Welch has been in Los Angeles

only a little over a month—and look what a local paper has done to him: "Miles Welch, the well known movie queen, is scheduled to appear in person at the Garrick tonight and deliver a short talk."

Thurston Hall has gone to San Francisco to play leading parts in a speaking stock company for a few weeks.

Charles Clary has laid aside his villainish tendencies, and plays a different sort of character in Gladys Brockwell's new play.

At the Los Angeles Athletic Club recently a championship handball game was played between Harry Pollard and Al Ray, Harry coming out winner, thereby entitling himself to the rank of film handball champion.

Tom Geraghty, formerly of Paralta, misses the cemetery that was just across the street from that plant. At Metro, where he is now, it is more than a dozen blocks to a cemetery, and too far to walk to write comedies or snappy titles.

Lichtman Goes on Tour.

Al Lichtman, general manager of distribution of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, left New York October 20 on a tour of inspection of the Famous Players-Lasky district offices and exchanges. Mr. Lichtman's first stop was Pittsburgh, where he spent Monday and Tuesday. From there his itinerary up to October 30 included two-day stops at Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati and Chicago.

Mr. Lichtman will be away about six weeks, his trip taking him as far as the Pacific Coast offices. Following his return to New York he plans to make a similar tour of the offices in the Eastern and Southern districts.

Moss Houses Sell Many Bonds.

The revised figures of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Liberty Loan campaign show that B. S. Moss' five theatres in Greater New York sold $786,800 worth of bonds.

On the last week of the drive, Moss gave orders to his house managers and loan workers to forget the show schedule entirely and drive for loan subscriptions. On special occasions as many as two or three vaudeville acts on a bill had to be eliminated in order to get the audience home before midnight.

World Pictures Installs A Reclamation Bureau

HAVING in mind an old adage of "Poor Richard" that a penny saved is a penny earned, the operating force at the World studio at Fort Lee has been increased by the addition of one man who will constitute the reclamation bureau.

The World prides itself upon its efficiency in all its divisions, but it is realized that even in the best regulated organizations there is bound to be some wastage. It is for the purpose of salvaging much of the material that, in the rush and hurry of production pictures, is frequently discarded at the studio, that this bureau has been established.

The first day the reclamation man went to work he spent his time picking up nails. By the middle of the day he had accumulated a large quantity, which he straightened out and placed in a barrel, ready for use by the carpenters. These nails, except for his work, would never have been put to use again.

The next day the man picked up a great quantity of rags and paper which were baled and sold for a considerable sum of money. Each day he reclaims a large quantity of stuff which has real value and which, except for his efforts, would be entirely thrown away.

That the World's idea in establishing this reclamation bureau was based on sound judgment is proved by the fact that during the first two days the man was on the job he made his salary for the entire week.

Review Board Prepares Slides.

In the effort to meet the great need for nurses in stamping out the influenza epidemic in New York City the emergency committee of the Health Commissioner asked the National Board of Review to prepare and distribute to the Motion Picture Theatres in this city a slide asking for the aid of nurses and house helpers in the emergency. Slides were prepared. The exhibitors displayed their usual willingness to use their screens for the benefit of the public.

Scene from Maurice Tourneur's New Production "Woman."

"Crusaders" Posters Offend Soderberg.

Frederick Soderberg, commissioner of streets of Oakland, Cal., has been so insistent in his efforts to block the exploitation of official Government films that the city council has found it necessary to hold him in check. He recently confiscated street banners advertising "Pershing's Crusaders," declaring that they were a public menace and being maintained in violation of a city ordinance. He excused his action on the ground that besides being a source of danger they were being used to advertise theatres and expressed the opinion that a private concern that hides under such a subterfuge to advertise its own business does not deserve consideration. His remarks were strongly objected to and he was instructed to return the banners to Sol L. Lesser, chairman of the Division of Films, State Council of Defense.

Vitagraph Makes Canadian Loan Picture.

Besides making six Liberty Loan pictures for the use of the United States Government in the recent drive, Vitagraph has made a picture for the Canadian Government to be used in its 1918 Victory Loan campaign. The picture was made under the personal supervision of Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph Company, and was directed by Wilfrid North. Agnes Ayres, Templar Saxe, Charles Kent, Harry Kendall and others are in the cast.

The central character of the story is a returned, wounded soldier, whose unselfishness and courage turns a party of revelers to a realization of what real hardship means and leads to their giving the government money which otherwise they would have spent in gay times.

Lieutenant Davidson Visits New York.

Lieutenant N. W. Davidson, of the Royal Flying Corps, formerly Vancouver manager for Specialty Film Import, Ltd., holders of the Pathe franchise for Canada, was a visitor in New York last week with L. E. Ouimet, president of Specialty Film Import.

Lieutenant Davidson has been a cadet student in the Flying Corps for ten months, having resigned from Specialty to enlist. After an intensive course of training at Borden, Leaside and Beamsville camps, he obtained his commission on October 10. This is his last leave of absence, as he expects to soon embark for overseas.

He was manager of the Vancouver office for ten months. Prior to that he was manager of the Calgary office. His home is in Ottawa.

Free Movies for Men in the Hospitals.

One of the new activities of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, in charge of Mrs. Jane S. Johnson, is the furnishing of Government films for presentation at the army and navy hospitals. Several of these pictures have already been shown at the Naval Hospital at Charleston, and arrangements are being made to extend this service, which is entirely free. Among the pictures being shown to the convalescent soldiers and sailors in the hospitals are "America's Answer," "Pershing's Crusaders," "The Official War Review," and several special pictures that are being reserved for this service.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

FILMLAND is full of gloom and germs. Everyone you meet has a different cure for the Flu, or a sure-for-certain, double-back-action, ball-bearing preventative for the Flu, and in spite of this, everyone you meet has either just got over an attack of the Flu, or is just getting down with it.

Broadway is full of actors taking enforced vacations, eucalyptus oil, and discussing the latest thing in gargles.

Three or four thespians will foregather on a shady corner and just when it looks as if a friendly little party has been established, one of them will squint his eyes, wrinkle up his nose and remark, "A-ka-choo!" in a loud tone, and the others will forsake him and rush to the nearest Owl drug store and demand "Some of that stuff you sniff up your nose."

And no movies to go to!

I didn't half way begin to realize what it would mean to have no movies—until we had none. I tried to think back behind a long gone date when I walked three miles and paid fifty cents to see a New York Central train come busting out on a bed sheet tacked on the wall of the town hall, and tried to remember what it was we did for amusement—and I couldn't think of a thing but pitching horseshoes! And as automobile tires have taken the place of horseshoes, and nobody wants to pitch auto tires, I decided to go out among the studios and see what I could see.

The way to get out to the Mack Sennett studios, if you haven't a car, is to take a Pacific Electric, ask for a transfer on the Lake Shore line, get off at the viaduct, wait fifteen minutes, then walk six blocks to Allesandro street—and there you are.

I had scarcely got into Sennett's when a young chap, named Riddle came up to me and said.

Murray Sings With Another Mack.

"Do you remember the old-time comedy team of Murray and Mack?"

Did I remember Murray and Mack!

Visions of those two exponents of foolishment—mental pictures of Charlie Murray and Ollie Mack cutting up on stages all over the country. The old Grand Opera House in St. Louis; the English Opera House in Indianapolis; theatres in Chicago, Pittsburgh, Kankakee, everywhere. Did I remember Murray and Mack!

"Come," said Riddle, in a mysterious voice. He led me to the door of a room. "Murray and Mack are in there," he said, "singing. Listen."

I could hear them plainly. I could have heard them if I had still been at the viaduct, waiting for the car that never came.

Music was issuing from the cracks around the door; melody poured through the keyhole; the walls bulged with song.

Riddle opened the door, and there were Murray and Mack—Charlie Murray and Mack Sennett! Charlie was singing "Little One, Goodbye!" in a voice of great emotion and feeling, and Mack was coming in with a melodious hum that would have put a hive of syncopated bumble bees to shame.

We stole away softly so as not to disturbe them at their art.

"Got something else to show you," said Riddle, and he introduced me to a composite Gertrude Hoffman, Annette Kellerman and Ruth St. Denis wearing a gorgeous head-dress, two bushels of pearls, and standing on the regulation tiger-skin rug, without which no movie vampire is complete.

Who Knows This Brown Vamp?

"Celebrated vamp," said Riddle, "engaged at an enormous salary to play a part in our new comedy, 'Yankee Doodle.'"

I checked over all the vampires I knew. This one did not fit any of them. It was neither Theda, Gladys, Louise nor Kitty—who the dickens was it?

"Page Miss Brown," I told my memory. "What screen has she ornamented? Locate her that I may say something nice and befitting to the occasion, such as 'Ah, yes, I saw you in Heloise, the Hectic Heart Breaker. Wonderful work—fire, spirit, verve, vigor, vim—' all the stuff we are supposed to say at these times."

But nothing doing. No vamp by the name of Brown would come to the surface.

Then a welcome interruption came along in the person of that slimmest of all slim comedians, Mal St. Clair. Mal was made up to represent the royal Hunk de Fromage of Germany, and of all the artistic impersonations of odious individuals, Mal took the cake!

Mal As the Hunk Takes the Palm.

I felt like going out on the street and uprooting an entire palm tree and presenting it to Mal.

The vamp? It was Bothwell Browne, the—I almost said female impersonator—the exponent of feminine impersonations. And I don't mind admitting that he fooled me with his make-up into believing he was a sure-enough, simon-pure Jane—for a few moments.

Mr. Browne is playing a comedy vamp in Mack Sennett's war film, "Yankee Doodle." Mal St. Clair is the Clown Prince; Bert Roach is Von Hindenberg and Ford Sterling is the Kaiser. Marie Prevost has a part where she has to disguise herself as a German soldier.

It certainly didn't look like the Flu was making any difference at Sennett's. They were going right ahead with their laugh-makers the same as if things were normal and every theatre in the country running full blast.

Walter Wright was making a schoolhouse comedy called "The Village Chestnut," with a cast made up of Louise Fazenda and her capital O curl right in the middle of her forehead; Myrtle Lind, Chester Conklin and Paddy McGuire wearing a little two-for-a-cent mustache.

Eddie Cline was busy with "Hide & Seek, Detectives," a rib-tickler, with Ben Turpin, Charles Lynn, Tom Kennedy and Marie Prevost as support.

McGaffey Relates a Sad Tale.

After Sennett's, I drifted out Vine street in Hollywood to Lasky's. No Flu there, but evidences of the devastating and deadly character of the malady in a sad tale related by Kenneth McGaffey.

The minstrel show that the members of the Fifty-first California Guards, formerly the Lasky Home Guards, were planning, has been postponed indefinitely.

That was going to be some show, too. Adam Hull Shirk was booked for a Chink conjuror's act, and McGaffey and Jack Mulhall had ordered Donald Crisp, the property man, to secure four milk-white stallions for their piece. Crisp had procured one of the stallions. I saw it standing out on the lot, and just because it was a wooden horse, Mc and Jack had refused to use it. I'm just putting this in to show that absolute realism was to be the keynote of the show.

Wallie Reid was going to appear with his bungalow band, and an all-star cast composed of Tully Marshall, Raymond Hatton, Bud Duncan and Guy Oliver were getting ready to revive that classic of the Kickapoo Indian Medicine Circuit, "Big-Foot Wallace."

Theodore Roberts, Charlie Murray, Lou Anger, Noah Berry and Jack Holt were billed for the Darktown Gentlemen's Grill Room, an act absolutely boiling over with funny gags and comical sayings.

After the sad news that this rare treat was to be pushed somewhere into the dim and distant future, I went out on the stages.

Giebler Makes Plea for Old Husbands.

There I saw Lila Lee, who said she was just finishing up "Puppy Love," her latest film, and then a fine scene from Cecil B. De Mille's new play, which is not named, but is to be an answer to "Old Wives for New." Why in the name of tophet doesn't some director do something for Old Husbands. Elliott Dexter and Marcia Manon were in the scene, and it looked most promising.

Peeped into another set where Robert Vignola was engineering Ethel Clayton through a striking scene, and then went over to where Donald Crisp was making interiors for "Venus in the East."

Bryant Washburn, all dyked out in scissor-tail coat and silk tile, in the role of Buddy McNair; Clarence Geldart as the genuine English butler from Indiana, and Bud Duncan as the bell hop, all looked as though they had stepped right out of the pages of Wallace Irwin's story.

Neither Anna Nilsson nor Margery Wilson, who uphold the feminine interest in the story, were there, for which I was properly sorry.

I told Donald Crisp that he didn't look as crisp as usual—by way of making a little joke with him, and he said:

"No, the Spanish Flu doesn't leave a fellow looking or feeling very 'crisp' when it gets through with him. You ask Washburn, if you don't believe me. We both had it while we were back East."

E. M. PORTER BACK ON JOB.

After a three weeks' siege with influenza and a light attack of pneumonia, E. M. Porter, general manager of the Precision Machine Company, is back at his desk at the main office. He looks a bit fagged out, but says he is feeling fine, and has a good appetite.

Hospital Completing Plans for Teaching the Wounded

THE Nicholas Power Company has been co-operating with Sidney B. Lust, president of Super-Films, Inc., in the work he has undertaken of instructing returned wounded soldiers in motion picture operating. In a letter just received by him, Will E. Smith, general manager of the company, states "it gives us great pleasure to donate to the Walter Reed General Hospital and to the United States General Hospital No. 2 at Fort McHenry, Md., Power 6-B motor-driven Cameragraphs."

At the Walter Reed Hospital a new workshop building is to be turned over to Mr. Lust in which to carry on his work. Two big benches have been built and twenty sets of rewinders set up, and the men are to be taught rewinding and inspection. The booth will be of a collapsible type, so that, when instruction is given in machine work, it can be removed and a large class taught at a time.

It is also planned to interest men who have not reached that stage of convalescence where they can attend the school.

Wheeled tables are being built to carry rewinders and machine heads, to be taken to the men's bedsides. They will be furnished with a book of instruction, and by the time they are able to be up and about it is hoped they will have a good grounding in the work. Major E. T. Baldwin is in charge of the vocational work at this hospital.

At Fort McHenry a seventy-five-foot auditorium is to be utilized for the educational work.

Cameron Teaches Projection to War Maimed Soldiers

TO paraphrase Burns, "Man's humanity to man makes countless thousands happy." In the many directions in which the Red Cross is reaching out, none more strongly emphasizes the above statement than the work being done by its Institute for Crippled and Disabled Men. Not only are the draft conditions depleting all ranks of the employed, which must be replenished, but the eye must also be cast to the future, when our wounded soldier boys return from the front incapacitated for their usual lines of endeavor. To the crippled who are able to get about and have use of their hands this worthy work is a godsend. It has now been in operation since last May, and under the able direction of James R. Cameron as projection instructor the unfortunates of our city are given the opportunity of perfecting themselves in the knowledge of motion picture projection.

Classes are held daily, and the instruction is most thorough. At present the class numbers quite about twenty, and it is rapidly growing. A large film concern has agreed to furnish employment for all who qualify. The interests of picture projection machine manufacturers has been enlisted, prominent among whom is the Nicholas Power Company, manufacturer of the "Cameragraph."

It is to be hoped this most worthy object will meet with pronounced success.

QUARANTINE IN CHICAGO HOLDS TIGHT

Influenza-Pneumonia Epidemic Reaches Crest —No One Can Foretell Reopening of Theatres

DURING the ten days ending October 22 there were 4,501 deaths in Chicago from the influenza-pneumonia epidemic. The official record in City Health Commissioner Robertson's office shows that the crest was reached Thursday, October 17, when 1,918 new cases of influenza and 477 of pneumonia, or 2,395 cases in all, were recorded. Friday, October 18, showed a total of 2,372 cases and Saturday, October 19, a total of 2,136, the latter figure showing a decrease of 236 cases from the total of the preceding day. The combined cases for Sunday and Monday, October 20 and 21, reached 2,700, a daily average of 1,350, affording a most assuring sign that the epidemic is on the wane.

On Wednesday, October 23, I called at the headquarters of Doctor St. Clair Drake, State Director of Public Health, in the Hotel Sherman, where I met that gentleman and Dr. J. O. Cobb, of the United States Public Health Service. Dr. Drake informed me that he was keeping in close touch with every important community in the state of Illinois and was receiving daily telegrams on the conditions in each.

He was careful in stating that the quarantine will be lifted by districts, as the improvement in health conditions makes it possible; also that there will be no such thing as the lifting of the quarantine in a state-wide manner. He laid particular emphasis on the statement that no one but the state health authorities can modify or raise the quarantine in any community or district, the local health bodies in every case being governed by the state health authorities Chicago, for example, forms a district in itself, and when Health Commissioner Robertson deems it safe to lift the quarantine then the State Health Board will act.

Dr. Drake held the opinion that probably by the end of the week closing October 26, or at latest, in the beginning of the week following, the quarantine will be lifted from Evanston north to the Wisconsin line, excepting North Chicago and Zion City.

During these quarantine days many exhibitors in Chicago are giving the interiors of their houses a thorough overhauling and cleansing. Quite a number are renovating and redecorating. Jones, Linick & Schaefer are giving the Orpheum, on State street, a brand new interior appearance. The Woodlawn, Sixty-third street and Cottage Grove avenue, Chicago's theatre beautiful, is receiving the most rigorous attention under the scrutinizing eye of Director Andrew Karsas. The Aristo is being redecorated by its owner, Fred W. Hartman, and so on with a host of other houses.

At the time of writing (Thursday, October 24) no one, not even Health Commissioner Robertson, can give a guess as to when the ban shall be lifted from Chicago theatres. It is simply a question of patient waiting and hoping for the best.

Andrew Karsas Talks About the Woodlawn

DURING an interesting and instructive conversation, one afternoon last week, with Andrew Karsas, managing director of the Woodlawn Theatre Company, I was impressed more strongly than ever that success never comes by chance to a man who has to make his own way in the world. Whatever may be the venture, the man who struggles upward must have the necessary foresight, resourcefulness, and confidence in himself which lead to fortune. Such a man does not follow beaten tracks. He maps out ways of his own and sees to it that they lead directly to the goal he has in view, so that precious time may be saved. While he profits by the mistakes of others, in the sense that he avoids making such mistakes himself, yet is he always anxious to learn from those whose works proclaim their wisdom.

Andrew Karsas.

The cornerstone of the success of Andrew Karsas in the exhibiting department of the moving picture business has been his unwavering belief in the great future of the moving picture. Ten years ago, when the moving picture was considered only a plaything and a novelty by the great majority, Mr. Karsas was obsessed by the belief that it would become a mighty factor in the lives of the numberless generations of people yet to come. And he still believes that, more strongly, if possible, than before.

When Mr. Karsas was considering the purchase of the Drexel Theatre, at 858 East Sixty-third street, about eight years ago, some of his exhibitor friends tried to dissuade him, on the ground that the price was too high for the business possible in that location. Mr. Karsas, however, not only paid the price, but expended quite a sum on a costly organ for the house. Then he gradually made himself known to his patrons and soon became a power in the community.

Drexel Known for Clean Shows.

He worked in harmony with the Seventh Ward Auxiliary, an organization comprising thousands of the leading women of the community, consulting them on the selection of programs and winning their confidence and esteem by his clean and upright dealing. The Drexel soon became known as the house showing clean, entertaining and well-varied programs, so that mothers were confident that their children could attend, unaccompanied, every show at that house. But it seated only 600 people, and Mr. Karsas sold out at a profit. Then he laid his plans for the Woodlawn, at 853-855 East Sixty-third street, in the same community as the Drexel.

A description of the Woodlawn appeared in the issue of July 20, this year, so that nothing further in that respect may be given here. It caters to a population of 75,000, in a territory covering four square miles. This is a fine business community and the Woodlawn Business Men's Association is one of the most prominent trade organizations in the city.

The members of the association just now are complaining seriously because of the necessity for closing picture theatres. Their business has been greatly affected because the people do not go out of doors as formerly, and business is stagnant. When the picture houses were open shopping was carried on extensively before and after theatre shows. Now everything is practically dead.

Manager Karsas tells me that in selecting his programs for the Woodlawn he makes "quality and variety" his motto and not "quantity." "Quality must always be there," says Mr. Karsas. "Only pictures with clean themes are shown on the Woodlawn screen. No sex pictures are allowed."

High grade dramas, comedies, educationals and topicals are in demand. Mr. Karsas has educated his following to these classes of pictures, and fathers and mothers have perfect confidence that no subject will be shown at the Woodlawn which they themselves would not like their children to see.

Manager Karsas has also strong support from The Parents', Teachers' Association of the Woodlawn district, and the members are in close touch with him at all times. He is always ready to listen to their suggestions and to profit by them. The Seventh Ward Auxiliary, already referred to in connection with the Drexel Theatre, are also ardent supporters of Manager Karsas in his management of the Woodlawn.

Mr. Karsas sees at least ten pictures a week from which he selects two, three or four—four being his limit for a program. The program is changed twice a week—on Mondays and Thursdays, as a rule, but occasionally on Sunday.

Music for the Pictures.

About three or four days before the showing of a program, Mr. Karsas and Director Leon Bloom view the pictures by themselves and select the music and arrange the cues. Orchestra rehearsal is called the morning afterward, and if certain scenes are not properly suited by the musical selections made the day before, the music is changed. This rehearsal takes from one and a half to two hours.

Arranging the Light Effects.

Director Bloom, Manager Karsas and the stage manager consult on the determination of the light effects for the daily overture and the pictures. The opening overture lasts from ten to twelve or fifteen minutes, and special care is exercised so that the strong dramatic elements in the musical composition shall be intensified by the lights used. These lights are in the dome over the auditorium, around the four panel mural paintings on certain of the walls, and around the stage. The stage manager manipulates all these lights from his station near the operating room. Red lights are found to be the best for heightening the strong dramatic points of the music, blue for the softer periods, and so on.

In concluding it is timely to state that the Karsas policy in general is to send patrons away always satisfied. This lacking, then all is wrong.

Carl Laemmle Announces Finish of Eight-Reeler

CARL LAEMMLE, president of Universal, stopped over in Chicago a few hours last week on his return to New York from Universal City. He announced the completion of a new feature, directed by Allen Holubar, in which Dorothy Phillips appears in the leading role. The title has not yet been decided, but Mr. Laemmle believes it will be "Carry On."

The story shows the experiences of the American who enlists in a British regiment and also those of his wife in America during his absence.

Mr. Laemmle stated that the story has ample material for fifteen reels, but that Director Holubar is now hard at work editing and cutting the scenes taken, the object being to reduce it to eight reels, which will be its probable length when released.

No new pictures have been started at Universal City since the influenza epidemic broke out, but all those well under way at the time have been completed.

Select's New Chicago Home.

Accompanying the booklet announcing the second Star series of Select Pictures, with Clara Kimball Young, Norma and Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies in the galaxy, there was received at this office an official printed notification that Select's Chicago office will be in Paramount's former quarters, on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers' Building, on and after Monday, October 28. All business patrons and friends of Select Pictures are invited to call sometime during the week of October 28 and meet President Lewis J. Selznick, who will come on from New York for the occasion.

Manager Fred C. Aiken, assisted by Ben Bedell and other members of his office force, has been busy for over a week making the necessary preparations for moving into the new quarters. These have been thoroughly renovated since the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation vacated them, and they are, without doubt, the most attractive and serviceable in the city.

Rothacker Laboratory Work Praised.

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the organization bearing his name, is proud of the following testimonial from Samuel L. Rothapfel, recently received in a letter from the well-known exhibitor: "I happen to see the laboratory work on the film 'The Temple of Dusk,' and I cannot help telling you that it is probably the most beautiful I have seen in years. Surely such work will commend itself to anyone desirous of obtaining the very finest and most artistic effects that it is possible to obtain in these days."

By the way, the president and the working force of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company are particularly (and deservedly) proud of the organization's showing in the Fourth Liberty Loan. The total was $13,350, of which $4,600 were plus subscriptions.

Showing of First A. D. C. Release.

The Affiliated Booking Corporation of the Central Western States, which has charge of the distribution of the product of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation in the territory named, will give a trade showing of the first release of the last named organization at the Morrison Hotel, Tuesday, November 5. A luncheon will be served by the parent concern in banquet room No. 5 at 12:30 p. m. on the day mentioned, after which the picture will be shown. Another showing of the feature will be given the same date in the private projection room of Universal, in the Consumers' Building. The leading officials of the A. D. C. and the members of the A. B. C. will be present at the exhibitions.

Final Returns for Fourth Loan.

The final returns show that amusements in general in the City of Chicago contributed $1,325,000 to the Fourth Liberty Loan, this being $125,000 over the allotment. Of this grand total the film division in the city contributed $168,000, and of that amount George Kleine and his office forces contributed $50,000. George K. Spoor gave his personal check for $10,000, and the American Company and its office force $4,500.

Mann Assigned to Signal Corps.

Luman C. Mann was assigned to the Signal Corps of Columbia University, New York, last week, and left for his new quarters Monday, October 28. Mr. Mann was formerly sergeant major in the Aviation Corps at Fort Sill, Okla., but was temporarily incapacitated by an accident in the field. He is well known in film circles in Chicago.

John Joseph Harvey

JOHN JOSEPH HARVEY is the man that is entitled to the credit for having "finished" the Kaiser. J. J. did the job without the aid of a fleet of aeroplanes, an army of a couple of million and did it in exactly four weeks. The battle front was the Biograph studio and the picture was made at the rate of two reels a week. This in itself is something of a record.

"The Kaiser's Finish" is being placed on the market by A. Warner, who is conducting a sales campaign on a State rights basis. The territories of Ohio, Maine, New York, Indiana, Massachusetts, Virginia, Rhode Island, Alabama, New Jersey, Florida, Michigan, Connecticut Pennsylvania, and North and South Carolina have already been sold.

Mr. Harvey is at present about to close with a number of capitalists of Pittsburgh, who are financing a new picture producing corporation which is to start work in the vicinity of that city as soon as the influenza epidemic has been lifted.

HENDERSON VISITS OLD HOME.

Dell Henderson, having finished directing Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in "Hit or Miss," has gone to his old home, St. Thomas, Ontario, to spend a few weeks visiting his folks before resuming work at the studio at Fort Lee. Mr. Henderson's next picture will be "The Praise Agent," which was written by Earle Mitchell, who is at present playing a prominent role in "A Stitch in Time," running at the Fulton.

KEEPING IN TOUCH WITH THE PEOPLE

That's What Uncle Sam Does Through His Division of Films—Motion Pictures Answer the Question as to Where Go the Billions Being Raised by Taxation

WHETHER Uncle Sam discovered the movies, or the movies discovered Uncle Sam, depends upon one's point of view. One thing is certain, the Government has entered the motion picture field with every resource at its command, and its participation in the film industry on an ever-increasing scale is now an accomplished fact.

Despite this active participation, the United States official films are not to be considered as rivals of the purely commercial films. The legitimate purpose of the commercial film is to produce profitable revenue, while, at the same time giving an equivalent in entertainment to the public. The real purpose of the Government picture is to keep the Government in close touch with the people by a visualization of facts. They are only commercial to the extent that even the Government cannot produce motion pictures without expense, and to exhibit them free would be impossible unless the cost were met by increased taxation.

The Government pictures have a distinct mission. They answer the inevitable question as to how the billions being raised in taxes and loans are being expended in the prosecution of the war; they show the necessity, whenever the opportunity occurs, to "buy bonds until it hurts"; they prompt generosity in contributing to the needs of the several war-aid organizations that have done so much in the way of keeping up the morale of the soldiers in the cantonments and on the "other side," and they neutralize the persistent and secretive propaganda of spies and pro-Germans.

The President Calls on the Screen.

War pictures are now familiar to the American public. In their inception they were considered simply from the showman's standpoint. The story they told was often thrilling, but there was little of patriotic impulse in them. President Wilson was the first to call the motion picture to the aid of the Government. George Creel, chairman of the Committee on Public Information, recognized great possibilities in the film. He saw that the motion picture could be made an admirable auxiliary of the Committee on Public Information. He anticipated the effect upon the American public of motion picture showing the wonderful work of preparation in the United States and on French soil, in the face of unavoidable delays and disheartening criticism; he sensed the thrill that would stir the "folks at home" when they saw American railroads and American docks and American machine shops and countless other American industries transplanted to France in order to speed up America's participation in the war, and he realized the psychological effect of motion pictures showing American soldiers in the trenches or "going over the top."

The Division of Films, of which Charles S. Hart is director, was organized considerably less than a year ago, and on a very modest scale. It began, however, with one splendid asset. From the first it had the co-operation of General John J. Pershing in securing first-hand, official pictures of American army activities in France. Signal Corps photographers—men who were willing to risk their lives in the line of duty—were assigned to take pictures of army life on the various battle fronts, as well as in the busy areas behind the lines. The co-ordinated product of these initial activities was "Pershing's Crusaders," which is still being successfully shown. "America's Answer" was the second official war picture. Both have justified themselves. Their psychological effect upon the public has been pronounced. The third feature war picture, "Under Four Flags," is now in the making.

Uncle Sam Makes Short Subjects, Too.

Other interesting and timely pictures issued by the Division of Films include "Our Bridge of Ships," showing the remarkable progress being made in the shipyards of the United States in replacing the losses caused by the ruthless submarine campaign of the Huns; "Our Colored Fighters," visualizing the negro in the cantonments, preparing to take his place in the American overseas forces, and several other pictures of an educational character. A new schedule of production calls for twelve two-reel pictures, each pictorializing an important activity of the war. They are to be issued semi-monthly. The Division of Films is also furnishing, through its scenario department, the stories for a large number of films, which will be issued from time to time, not by the Government, but under Government supervision. These are all based upon patriotic subjects, and are intended to create interest in the conduct of the war. The official War Review, now familiar to the public, is issued by the Division of Films, in co-operation with the British, French and Italian Governments.

This slight review of what the Division of Films has accomplished within a year, is in itself an indication of how this auxiliary of the Committee on Public Information has grown. The demand for the official pictures, and the need of an organization to handle them successfully from a business standpoint, pointed the way to the development of the division, and, incidentally, the broadening of Uncle Sam's interests as a motion picture producer. The small offices that saw the origin of the Division of Films were soon vacated for larger and more adaptable quarters. In time these were outgrown, and three entire floors of one of New York's large office buildings are now utilized.

The number of departments and employes have constantly multiplied. In order to produce pictures and at the same time to exploit them—for even Government pictures must be advertised in order to attract a market—a splendid organization has been built up by Director Hart. The organization commands the services of many men who have been successful, not only in the motion picture, theatrical and publicity fields, but also in other lines of business activity. As a rule, they have resigned from more lucrative employment to serve the Government.

Who the Department Heads Are.

Charles S. Hart is the motor-power for the activities of the Division of Films. As director he is in close touch with its several bureaus and departments, and everything is carried forward under his personal supervision. Both production and distribution centre in him. Dennis J. Sullivan, manager of domestic distribution, and his assistant manager, George R. Meeker, are the responsible selling agents for the organization. The practical co-ordination of the department of feature films, the bureau of community service and the department of domestic distribution has placed upon Mr. Sullivan's department the entire task of marketing the product of the Division of Films in the United States. The manager of feature films, under Mr. Sullivan, is C. B. Trowbridge. W. J. MacInnes is director of advertising and publicity. The press bureau, of which Willard D. Coxey is manager, is embraced in his department. This department also issues "The Official Film News." The production department includes facilities for producing films and also for the extensive printing of still pictures and their distribution.

The film laboratory of the Division of Films is in charge of Robert E. Rinehart as manager of production; the photographic laboratory is directed by Captain G. W. Hance, of the Signal Corps Division, who is also in charge of the Government school of photography at Columbia College; and William A. Grant is manager of the bureau of war photographs, which has been removed from Washington to New York, and now has 40,000 pictures, with a constantly increasing supply from France, from which newspapers and magazines may select for purposes of illustration. The bureau of war photographs also supplies pictures for framing and private collections, and comprehends a picture slide service, which promises interesting development.

Rufus Steele Is Head Scenarioist.

The scenario department of the Division of Films, of which Rufus Steele is editor, furnishes film stories for the official pictures as well as for war films produced by motion picture producers, in co-operation with the Government. Two activities that carry on a very interesting co-ordinated work are the educational branch, managed by Clara De Lissa Berg, which seeks to interest educati nal and religious centers in the Government films, and a philanthropic branch, directed by Mrs. Jane S. Johnson, which makes it possible for soldier and sailor patients in the Government hospitals to see the official films without charge, and also enables organizations with limited resources to get the Government pictures at a nominal cost

Thomas S. Barrett is controller at the New York headquarters. Gardner Wood is the representative of the Division of Films in Washington. In Chicago an office has been established under the management of R. E. Ricksen.

Manager Sullivan also announces the following special representatives: H. J. Marshall, Atlanta; J. L. Roth, Boston; M. F. Lasker, Buffalo; M. J. Sullivan, Chicago; J. G. Conner, Indianapolis; J. P. Taylor, Salt Lake City; Ned Thatcher, New Orleans; Russell Shanihan and Sydney Spedon, New York City; Ellis A. Woolf, Pittsburgh; J. F. McLoughlin, St. Louis; Frank Coffenberry, Seattle; Lee Crandall, Washington, D. C., and J. A. Needham, Cleveland. The Division of Films keeps in touch with newspapers, organizations and industries throughout the United States by means of a mailing bureau, of which Henry F. Atwater is superintendent.

The Paris representative of the Division of Films is H. C. Hoagland. The American manager of the foreign picture section is Marcus A. Beeman, and there are a number of co-ordinated branches of the foreign films service, all of which are intimately associated with the Division of Films, which is carrying on an educational picture campaign abroad, as well as in the United States.

Incidentally, the Division of Films has a Bureau of Expositions, of which Chester I. Campbell and William Ganson Rose are directors. W. J. Benedict is the booking manager. The bureau has successfully given War Expositions in San Francisco, Los Angeles, Chicago and other cities, where all records for attendance at an outdoor exhibition were broken.

From all of which it will be seen that the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information has become a most important factor in giving to the world the true story of the war, told in a universal language, through the motion picture.

Knights Show Pictures to American Soldiers

IN its new soldiers' and sailors' club, 27 Boulevard Malesherbes, Paris, the Knights of Columbus has arranged to entertain the men in uniform with motion picture exhibitions this fall and winter. The equipment has been installed under the supervision of John A. Fitzgerald, an electrical engineer of Ogdensburg, N. Y., who is serving as Knights of Columbus secretary. The selection of pictures and management of the exhibitions are in charge of Charles "Sandy" Chapman, of Cambridge, Mass., for many years with Ward & Vokes.

The first entertainment was staged on a late September Sunday evening to a crowded house. A William Farnum and two comics constituted the program. Hereafter the soldiers and sailors will be permitted to see the best of American film dramas with American captions at the Knights of Columbus club Sunday, Tuesday and Thursday night of each week. The entertainments are proving popular among both officers and men of the American Expeditionary Force. No charge is made for the picture shows, it being the policy of the Knights of Columbus to make no charge for any service rendered American soldiers and sailors in any part of France and England.

FIRE CAUSES DEATH OF OLD EXHIBITOR

Charles Marshall of Duluth and Family Drowned Fleeing from Forest Flames—Theatres Destroyed

EIGHT picture theatres and thousands of feet of film are known to have been destroyed in the greatest forest fire in Northern Minnesota's history, which raged all through the week and which was still burning at the present writing.

One thousand lives have been lost, 15,000 persons made homeless, and at least fifteen towns wiped off the map. Other towns were badly damaged and reports are yet too meagre to estimate the extent of the blow to the moving picture business.

Charles A. Marshall, owner and manager of the Lyceum Theatre of Duluth for the past twenty-five years and pioneer showman of the Northwest, and his wife and two young boys, lost their lives in the great fire.

Mr. Marshall owned a beautiful cabin at Pike Lake, a popular summer resort in the pine woods, fifteen miles distant from Duluth. He and his family were enjoying an outing at Pike Lake when the terrible forest fire broke out on the evening of Saturday, October 12. They escaped from the flames by embarking in a small boat and going out on the lake. However the terrific gale raised enormous waves and capsized the little craft. The Marshall family was drowned.

Other families lost their lives in a similar way when they took to the lake in small boats, which were overturned.

Among the picture theatres reported destroyed are: Diamond Theatre, T. O. Fleishbein, proprietor, and the Grand, L. E. Blessner, proprietor, both at Cloquet; Majestic Theatre, C. Womack, proprietor, Moose Lake; Star Theatre, James Barlow, proprietor, Bevey; Savoy Theatre, Peter Charrier, proprietor, Proctor, and Family Theate, N. W. Turner, proprietor, Pine City. One theatre at Carlton and another at Tamarack.

When final reports are received it is believed that other theatres will be found in the list of destroyed. Following closely upon the ban closing moving picture houses in many of the cities of the northwest on account of the influenza epidemic, the forest fire has had a depressing effect in film circles.

Y. M. C. A. Film Coming Soon.

The release date of the Y. M. C. A. subject, "The Red Triangle," has necessarily been postponed because of the decision to hold up all pictures for four weeks. Application has been made to the War Department, however, to get a special release date for this film in order that it may be exhibited as soon as the closing ban has been lifted. The original date for release by Mutual was Sept. 20. Announcement of the new date will be made as soon as the war department's answer is received.

Gordon With Screencraft

HARRIS GORDON, who portrayed the leading juvenile role in Screencraft's initial offering, "The Prodigal Wife," has been re-engaged by that organization for its second production. The story is as yet unnamed, but will be produced under the direction of Frank Reicher at the New Rochelle studio.

Mr. Gordon plays opposite Mollie King in this feature, in which the part assigned to him is that of a young detective. His work is well known to both exhibitors and fans who will remember him from the days of the Reliance and Thanhouser companies, since which time he has appeared in the support of several of the Paramount stars and under the Fox banner.

Among the recent releases in which he has been featured are "Why America Will Win," a Fox Standard Picture based on the life of General Pershing, in which Mr. Gordon played John J. Pershing in the earlier periods of his life, and the leading juvenile role in "Beyond the Law," a state rights feature recently released by the Southern Feature Film Company.

"America's Answer" for November 11.

"America's Answer," the official war picture issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, and distributed by the World Film Corporation, will have its first motion picture theatre showing in New York during the week of November 11, when it will be seen for three days at the Lincoln Square, Greeley, Victoria, Boulevard, National, American and Orpheum theatres.

Detroit Men Touring.

M. A. Ruben, business manager for the Detroit Motion Picture Operators' Union, and C. A. Weddige, manager of the Michigan Motion Picture Supply Company, of Detroit, came overland by automobile to New York a week or more ago and spent several days looking around among the trade. Mr. Weddege's company handles the Simplex machine in his territory.

SPOOR PERFECTS PROCESSING MACHINE

Essanay Head Has Installed Two at Chicago Plant—Each Has Million Feet a Week Capacity

AT a time when the film industry is feeling an external pressure due to the war, and when internal conditions are particularly unsettled, necessitating the greatest economy in all its various branches, George K. Spoor, president of the Essanay Film Manufacturing Company, has perfected a processing machine which, it is stated, will save manufacturers millions of dollars annually.

Two of these machines, which are revolutionary in their method of processing film, are now installed and working at the Essanay studios, Chicago. They have been given a practical test under the most severe and exacting conditions, and have processed millions of feet for Essanay and other concerns with highly satisfactory results.

10,000,000 Feet a Week.

Ten machines, each 40 feet in length and weighing 15 tons, have been constructed, and are now being installed. They will be in operation shortly, and the ten machines, with a generous allowance for delays of any nature whatever, are capable of processing a minimum of 10,000,000 feet a week.

Some years ago Mr. Spoor was convinced that the system of processing film in vogue was antiquated, and had failed to keep pace with the advancement of the motion picture industry in other lines. He realized that there was a tremendous waste involved both in time and material in processing by the drum and by the tank, rack or frame systems, while the film thus processed was never of a consistent or equable standard of work.

With a view to eliminating this waste and at the same time standardizing the work so as to obtain a uniform and high grade of development throughout, he engaged F. B. Thompson, an engineer of high qualifications, and an expert in chemistry, to construct a processing machine.

Will Eliminate Waste.

After a year of experimenting, Mr. Thompson completed this machine. Two years ago it was installed in the Essanay studios, where its operation was studied and thoroughly tested and corrections made until it was brought to the present high standard of efficiency and perfection.

The machine has been operated under every conceivable condition, and has proved even more highly satisfactory than anticipated. In the past two years these machines have processed all the product of the Essanay Company and considerable for other concerns, and accomplished their work with unfailing surety, rapidity and success.

Mr. Spoor claims for the new machine that it will quadruple the life of film by making it soft and flexible; that it reduces operative cost seventy per cent.; saves loss by scratching or damaging in handling; effects great economy in chemicals, and simplifies the work of handling and shipping.

The Chicago plant has equipment almost completely installed that will allow the actual processing of ten million feet of positive film weekly, and a messenger service department will soon be in operation between Chicago and New York, which will make possible the delivery of postive prints throughout the United States in record time.

Will Use Liberty Specials for Fifth Loan Campaign

THE motion picture films made for the Fourt Liberty Loan will be used for the fifth loan, according to plans now being made by the Treasury Department. Probably no new pictures will be made.

It is declared that the influenza epidemic set in so soon after the opening of the campaign that only one or two of the films were in circulation more than a few days, and that, by changing any references to the fourth loan to apply to the next, they can be used without any danger of their being exhibited twice in the same houses.

It was at first planned, when officials figured on using the same films next time, to bring East those that had been circulating in the West, and replacing them with pictures that it had been planned to show in this section of the country, but it is now believed that such action will be unnecessary.

Because of the epidemic, which resulted in the closing of theatres in many sections of the country during the greater part of the loan period, the great expenditures made by the motion picture industry and the valuable pictures turned out failed to achieve their full purpose. In Boston the houses were closed during practically the entire period, while in Washington and a number of other large cities in the East and Middle West no shows were permitted during more than half of the campaign.

At that, however, even with the large number of closed houses, the big sick and death lists, and the insidious German propaganda which chose that time to launch a new peace offensive, the motion picture industry is credited with a big part in making the campaign the success it turned out to be.

Officials in Washington are duly appreciative of what the motion picture industry accomplished along this line.

No time will be lost in completing the plans for the next loan, for, even should peace be declared, it will be necessary to have a fifth and probably a sixth loan to raise the money to be expended in bringing our men back to this country and replacing them in industry.

Jewel Carmen Enters Suit Against Fox Companies

JEWEL CARMEN, who recently entered into a five years' contract with the Frank A. Keeney Picture Corporation, has filed an action in the United States District Court against the Fox Film Corporation and the William Fox Vaudeville Company to recover $25,000 damages and secure an injunction restraining the defendants from circulating statements in the motion picture industry to the effect that the Fox companies have sole legal claim to the services of the motion picture star.

When Miss Carmen signed a contract with the Fox companies she was still a minor, and upon being advised that this contract was not binding she accepted a more favorable contract with the Frank A. Keeney Pictures Corporation, but when she entered the employ of the latter company the actress alleges the Fox companies lodged a protest with the Keeney Company, claiming exclusive right to her services, with the result that she has no engagement at present.

Moreover, Miss Carmen alleges that the Fox companies have threatened to have her blacklisted by the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry unless she carries out the terms of her contract with those companies, and threatened to start injunction suits against any motion picture companies which attempted to exhibit photoplays in which Miss Carmen appeared.

Miss Carmen demands that the court adjudge her contract with the Fox companies null and void on the theory that a contract executed by a minor is not binding, and asks that the Fox companies be permanently enjoined from circulating statements to the effect that the Fox companies have sole claim to her services.

HODKINSON TO RELEASE THROUGH PATHE

Former Organization Will Continue to Serve Customers Through Personal Representatives

THE W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that commencing Monday, November 25, and from that date on, it has arranged to make use of the exchange facilities of Pathe Exchange in distributing to the exhibitors the various productions now on its list. The brands which are to be transferred are the Jesse D. Hampton Productions, featuring J. Warren Kerrigan; Lillian Walker Pictures, Bessie Barriscale Productions, Louise Glaum Pictures, Douglass Natural Color Films, etc.

In speaking of the change, Mr. Hodkinson said the move was made as a result of much careful thought and deliberation, and was calculated to give to the users of Hodkinson Service of selected photoplays the best and most efficient exchange service possible.

Mr. Hodkinson further stated it was his belief that, owing to the unusual conditions existing in the country today, this change, which is due to take place in about thirty days, can be accomplished without the usual confusion and difficulties attending such procedure.

Hodkinson representatives in each territory will have their offices with the individual Pathe exchanges, and will give their personal attention to each Hodkinson customer as heretofore. It is the desire of the Hodkinson organization—and all departments are working hard to gain this purpose—to have all arrangements completely settled so that the change will be effected before the great majority of the theatres are opened, and that not only present Hodkinson customers, but the many new customers who have signed up in the past few weeks who have been unable to secure films owing to the influenza ban may be served with expedition and dispatch.

C. E. Shurtleff, general sales manager of the Hodkinson Corporation, will leave this week for an extended trip through the Northern and Middle West territories, visiting each Hodkinson representative and giving complete instructions for the change. W. A. Bach, assistant general sales manager, will make a flying trip through the Southern territory, returning by way of Kansas City, St. Louis and Pittsburgh, fulfilling the same mission in this section. P. N. Brinch, Western division manager, will handle the territory from Omaha west as heretofore. There are now twenty-four Hodkinson representatives in the field.

In connection with the future releasing plans of the Hodkinson Corporation, Mr. Hodkinson said his plans contemplate a continuance of the one-a-week releasing basis provided consistent quality of releases could be secured.

Brunet Expresses Pleasure.

"The Pathe sales organization is today the best in the country," said Vice-President Brunet, of Pathe, in talking of the new arrangements. "I have developed it, selected it, and had it trained until I can truthfully make that statement with a justifiable pride. When I saw our branch managers all gathered together at our 'save and serve' convention recently I was proud of them. I felt that it was very doubtful if ever in the history of the industry there had been gathered together a body of exchange managers who would average so high in ability, appearance, character and knowledge of the business. Knowing the value of our organization, I knew that we could be of great aid to Mr. Hodkinson, for whom I have great admiration and a high esteem. Our agreement cannot fail to be good business for us both and for the industry as a whole."

Curwood and Nell Shipman Form Producing Company

A COMBINATION of considerable moment and one which will undoubtedly become an important factor in the production field, because of the standing and ability in their particular field of each of the parties, has just been formed between Nell Shipman and James Oliver Curwood.

James Oliver Curwood, who is recognized as one of the most prolific and versatile writers of fiction, and as the author of a great many screen successes, has agreed to give Miss Shipman the exclusive rights to his original manuscripts and published works for screen interpretation.

Mr. Curwood will also create new vehicles, written and composed with especial attention to Miss Shipman's peculiar and striking abilities—stories that will have for their locale the great Northwest, with its romance, color and swift moving action, and as a motif the lives, loves, hates, ambitions and sacrifices of the primitive but always red-blooded, human and appealing men and women of this romantic and entrancing land.

Referring to the combination, Mr. Curwood writes: "I have watched Nell Shipman's work closely in my stories. She is the only actress in America I would sever my present profitable association to enter into affiliation with, for she is the only star who can do outdoor work and do it big."

Two of Mr. Curwood's stories, "God's Country and the Woman" and "Baree, Son of Kazan," each a signal success, have been made with Miss Shipman as the star.

Under the new arrangement, Curwood's screened stories, which have averaged ten releases a year, will be reduced to four or five. The smaller number of stories will make it possible for both star and author to give greater time and effort to the artistic end of the productions, and thus arrive at a greater subsequent appeal.

The first of the Curwood stories for screening under the new partnership has not been selected, and a further conference between the writer and the player will be held to determine whether the initial effort will be one of Mr. Curwood's widely read stories or a story written especially for the films.

The new affiliation will be known as the Shipman-Curwood Producing Company.

New Organization in Southern Territory.

The Criterion Film Service, Inc., is a new distributing organization in the independent field, with headquarters in Atlanta. Its principal officials are experienced film men, well acquainted in the territory because of their previous activities in the South. "Grain of Dust," "Huns Within Our Gates," "The Deemster" and some sensational serials are now in process of exploitation by these officials: M. A. Lightman, president; R. M. Simril, vice-president and general manager; A. S. Dickinson, secretary and treasurer.

Fox Announces Changes in Exchange Management

TO fill vacancies caused by the calling of its men to the colors and in consequence of transfers in the home office and elsewhere, the Fox Film Corporation has made several changes recently in the personnel of its district and branch managers.

Clayton P. Sheehan, who has been a general representative of Fox for the last few months at the Buffalo exchange, has been made district manager of the territory served by the Cleveland, Detroit, Pittsburgh and Buffalo exchanges.

Another district manager announced this week is Paul C. Mooney, who has been made manager of the Pacific Coast branches, with control over the territories served from the Seattle, San Francisco and Los Angeles offices.

C. B. Price, formerly of the Fox Washington office, has been made manager of the Pittsburgh exchange, succeeding F. C. Burhans. B. P. Rogers has been appointed to succeed Mr. Price in Washington.

George W. Mann has been made manager of the Fox branch office in San Francisco, and G. E. McKean has been appointed Fox St. Louis manager. F. G. Marchman has been named manager in Atlanta, Ga., and F. H. Vine is the new manager of the Boston exchange. Charles H. Powell has been appointed manager in Cleveland, succeeding Sidney Abel, who has been made head of the contract department in the Fox home office. Charles Muehlman has been named manager of the Fox branch office in Denver, and D. Leo Dennison is the new manager of the Minneapolis office. M. S. Bailey is now manager of the Fox office in Detroit, succeeding Field Carmichael, named American representative of Fox in Europe.

SELECT PUTS UP BIG SIGN.

Select Pictures Corporation is the possessor of one of the largest and most striking signs in New York. The sign is located on the south side of the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh avenue, and announces that Select Pictures Corporation has its executive offices in the Godfrey Building, and names Select's five stars, Norma Talmadge, Clara Kimball Young, Constance Talmadge, Alice Brady and Marion Davies.

The sign is 68 by 100 feet, and extends down the south wall of the building for a distance of nine stories from the top. The largest letters on the sign are eight feet high and the smallest three feet. Ten of the most striking and beautiful colors have been used in the painting.

Walter Morton Reaches France.

Walter Morton, the popular motion picture actor and director, who went abroad to serve as a field secretary for the Knights of Columbus, has safely arrived in France. "The ship on which I sailed has arrived safely overseas" was the official postcard notification that just came to hand.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Vitagraph's Serial Pictures Gaining in Popularity

THE Vitagraph Company reports a continually increasing demand for the serial photoplay.

Beginning with "The Fighting Trail," in which William Duncan and Carol Holloway were featured, Vitagraph has set up many records in serial distribution. This fifteen-episode drama was released in September, 1917, and still is one of the most active units in Vitagraph service. It was followed by "Vengeance—and the Woman," in which the same stars were featured, and the newer production set a new record for the number of theatres booking a serial. This mark was, in turn, shattered by "The Woman in the Web," featuring Hedda Nova and J. Frank Glendone, and then William Duncan in "A Fight for Millions," supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, shattered all previous records.

On October 21, Vitagraph's latest serial, "The Iron Test," was released, with Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway costarred, and the books of Vitagraph show that the advance bookings on this production were greater than those for any of its predecessors.

This record shows that the serial business is progressing, and Vitagraph is authority for the statement that many houses of the better class heretofore known in the trade as "non-serial" houses are now running its serials.

Vitagraph's serial business has come to be one of the important branches of the company's program. The stories for all of the serials are written by Albert E. Smith, president of the company, and Cyrus Townsend Brady, in collaboration, and they are notable for swift action and ingenious plots. They do not depend for thrills on trick walls, trap doors, etc., but are sharp melodramas, with plenty of fine riding and much outdoor photography, with mountains and desert as the stage whereon the action takes place.

The company not long ago adopted a fixed policy of producing four serials a year, and thus providing exhibitors with a serial episode for each week of the year. Under this plan, William Duncan, who is both star and director of the serials in which he appears, will be seen in two serials a year supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan, while Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway, appearing in two serials a year, will alternate on the program with Duncan.

The next Vitagraph serial, which is scheduled for release on January 27, 1919, will present William Duncan in "The Man of Might," supported by an all-star cast, including Edith Johnson and Joe Ryan. This will be followed on May 5 by a serial featuring Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway; then William Duncan will be seen in one to be released August 11, and the final 1919 serial, to be released November 17, will present Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway again.

"Wolves of Kultur" (Pathe).

"The Ride to Death" is the title of the fourth episode of "Wolves of Kultur," the patriotic serial featuring Leah Baird with Sheldon Lewis, and released the week of November 3. It shows a thrilling automobile wreck—a fall of a car over a ledge of the Hudson River Palisades. Hartman, the chief spy, from which the stolen torpedo plans were recovered, takes flight. He fears that the Secret Service agents will soon be on his track, and is hurrying in his automobile to a new base of operations, when the machine goes over a cliff and he is killed.

Film Market to Distribute Gathem's Novelty Subjects

The Film Market, Inc., has acquired for distribution throughout the world the Gathem Film Corporation's output of miniature novelty productions. These consist of two subjects, a patriotic and a classic, released as a one-reel feature every four weeks.

The subjects now ready are, in the order of release, "The Star Spangled Banner"; "Columbia," and "The Battle Cry of Freedom," each approximately five hundred feet, produced before the policy of two subjects on the same reel was adopted, and "Home Sweet Home" and "The Girl I Left Behind Me," made since the two-subject reel plan went into effect.

Robert W. Priest, president of the Film Market, Inc., has placed the series for the first year with Sidney B. Lust, of Super Film Attractions, Washington, for Delaware, Maryland and District of Columbia, and with Greenfield & Condell, of the Liberty Feature Film Co., of Shreveport, La., for Texas and Oklahoma.

Widespread interest in these novelty productions is said to have been manifested by exhibitors and independent distributors throughout the United States, and now a special drive is to be made to cover foreign territory.

"Ashes of Love" Points a Moral.

"Ashes of Love," the latest picture written and produced by Ivan Abramson for the Graphic Film Corporation, interpreted by an excellent cast, including James K. Hackett, Effie Shannon, Mabel Juliene Scott, Ruby de Remer, Paula Shay, William B. Davidson, Hugh Thompson, Dora Mills Adams, Thea Talbot and William Bechtel, is said to tell not only an interesting story, but to be filled with action, scenes, tense situations and splendid climaxes, but also to convey a moral in that it will open the eyes of many to the harmful effects of deceit and loveless marriages.

Love is the theme—love of a strong man for a wife who allows her infatuation for another man to lead her astray. She dies, leaving her husband in ignorance of her unfaithfulness, and he dwells so constantly on the magnitude of his loss that his mind becomes affected, and he continually sees visions of her. Weighed down by an unbearable loneliness he contemplates suicide, and to save his life and reason the wife's mother tells him of a confession her daughter had made—that she had been untrue to their love. As he comes back from the shadows the bigness of his love allows him to find forgiveness in his heart for the woman he thought had shared it, and contentment comes to him in devoting his time to a philanthropy in which she had been greatly interested.

Two Kinds of Men in Warner Film.

The marked superiority in clean, wholesome manliness and bearing of American Army officers serving under General Pershing over the commissioned apostles of Kultur in the German ranks, is shown with startling clarity in a number of comparative scenes that are a part of the actual military phases of the story of "The Kaiser's Finish," the new eight-part photoplay prophecy specially for the state rights market by H. L. Warner.

The sneering, cynical, overbearing attitude of the Hun leaders is pictured in the scenes photographed on the German front two years ago, showing their disdain and intolerance of anything or anyone of lesser military degree than themselves. Their personalities are said to reflect this in the film to a point that shows them possessed of every mental and physical perversion requisite to the commission of the atrocities that have taken hundreds of thousands of innocent lives and destroyed millions of dollars in property in Belgium and Northern France.

Meg, Joe, Beth and Amy as They Appear in William A. Brady's "Little Women."

Brady Completes Making of Alcott's "Little Women"

WILLIAM A. BRADY announces the completion of his picturization of "Little Women" and the bringing to life on the screen of four of the most famous characters in American literature—the four little women—Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy. For forty years Louisa M. Alcott's famous story has been read and loved the world over. "Little Women" has been translated into more languages than the works of Dickens, and its appeal continues as strong to-day as it was when first published.

"Little Women" was filmed in and about the actual house in Concord, occupied by the Alcott family, and which has been preserved and stands to-day exactly as it was when "Little Women" was written, thanks to the Alcott Memorial Committee. Every one of the famous characters which will appear on the screen in "Little Women" was passed upon by the surviving members of the Alcott family before a foot of film was taken. The players selected for the various roles met with unqualified approval also of several of the residents of Concord who knew Louisa M. Alcott and the little women of whom she wrote.

The four "Little Women," Meg, Jo, Beth and Amy, are portrayed respectively by Isabel Lamon, Dorothy Bernard, Lillian Hall and Florence Flinn. Henry Hull is John Brooke and Conrad Nagel is Laurie.

Harley Knoles directed "Little Women." The picture is in six reels and is announced for release on a territorial basis.

Something About Jane Miller.

When Jane Miller makes her debut as a star with House Peters in "The Forfeit," film fans will have a new personality to add to their list of favorites, for Miss Miller is destined to have a large following. Tall and graceful, with a wealth of lustrous dark hair and dark eyes, she radiates the charm and graciousness of the true Southerner that she is. "The Forfeit" is a picturization of Ridgewell Cullom's book directed and produced by Frank Powell for Sunset Pictures. It will be distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation November 11.

"Private Peat" Has American Local.

When "Private Peat," the Paramount-Artcraft special production in which Harold R. Peat, the famous Canadian soldier, appeared in the title role, was released October 13, the public had an opportunity to judge how well Peat has mastered the art of motion picture acting along with his other accomplishments as soldier, author and lecturer.

Peat, whose reputation, through his personal appearances on the lecture platform and the phenomenal sale of his book, extends from one side of the continent to the other, was among the first of the Canadians to reach France.

While the early scenes of the photoplay in which Private Peat now portrays the leading role are located in New England instead of Canada, the setting throughout being American rather than Canadian, all the main incidents are taken directly from the book.

Sunderland a War Veteran.

Playing the part of Geoffrey Ware, in support of William Faversham in the Paramount-Artcraft Special, "The Silver King," which is now in course of production, is a young actor who has a unique claim to distinction. The name which he has chosen to be known under in motion pictures is John Sunderland, and he is a veteran of the Great War, having served nearly three years in the aviation service of the Belgian army. After receiving no less than thirteen wounds he was honorably discharged. He could not go back to his former occupation, for he had no business left to go to. Both he and his father had turned over to Germany all they had in worldly goods to help save Belgium from destruction. Their business was freight transportation between East African ports. Their ships had been sunk and their business entirely wiped out. In this country he was attracted by the appeal offered by a career in motion pictures.

L-Ko Takes on More Players.

The L-Ko Comedy Company announces new acquisitions in Charles Dorety, recently of Sunshine Comedies; Jack Cooper, formerly with Sennett and Keystone, and Bobbie Dunn, an old-time Sunshine and Keystone player.

Install Powers in Big Y Hut.

The largest Y. M. C. A. hut in the world is that at Hoboken, N. J., at Fourth and River streets. This hut exceeds the enormous Eagle of London, England. In it are installed two Power's Cameragraph machines.

First National to Handle "Cannibal" Film in New York

THE First National Exhibitors' Exchange has secured for distribution in the State of New York, Martin Johnson's sensational "Cannibals of the South Seas." This deal has just been consummated with the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world's rights to this collection of motion pictures.

Robertson-Cole only recently announced that it had acquired for release Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" as the first big subject to be handled in America through its newly organized domestic department. The New York State transaction followed close upon this statement.

The First National Exhibitors' Exchange, of New York, considers the "Cannibal" feature one of the sure-fire, 100 per cent. box office attractions of the coming season. Secured by the daring Martin Johnson and his wife while cruising through the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands, "Cannibals of the South Seas" is one of the unique achievements of the screen world. The Johnsons took all sorts of chances to photograph the natives, risking their lives time and again among the savages, particularly the Big Numbers tribe. Altogether, they exposed 50,000 feet of film, and, while all of it is interesting and picturesquely absorbing, they have selected nine thousand feet of the scenes with the most "punch" and entertainment value. The Robertson-Cole Company will release the feature in two parts of approximately four thousand five hundred feet each.

Chaplin Film Holds Over at the New York Strand

CHARLIE CHAPLIN'S "Shoulder Arms" has swept New York with a typical Parisian storm of popularity. In a special title, immediately preceding the main title of the production, Harold Edel, manager of the Strand, Broadway's big pre-release theatre, announces that: "By press and public demand 'Shoulder Arms' will be continued for another week. This is the first time in the history of the Strand Theatre that any subject has been shown for more than one week."

With the exception of "The Spoilers," which was the first picture to play at the Strand, this action shatters the previously inviolable precedent maintained by the management for more than three years not to have on its program any picture that is shown at the same time in any other of the metropolitan houses. "Shoulder Arms" was released for general booking on October 27, the day it began its second week at the Strand. Playing in immediate opposition to the Strand, it was shown during the week at B. F. Keith's Palace Theatre, less than a block from the big motion picture house, and at Loew's New York Theatre, three blocks south on Broadway. Two other houses, the Stanley and Broadway, both within seven blocks of the Strand, also played it the first half of the week.

New York newspaper critics were united in describing "Shoulder Arms" as Chaplin's greatest comedy. It was undoubtedly due in part to the highly complimentary reviews published in the papers on Monday which started off the pre-release run at the Strand to double capacity business.

The ruling by the New York health authorities prohibiting standees in theatres cost the Strand, on Monday night, receipts estimated at $1,400. At the end of the second evening performance, at 9:30 o'clock, the house was refilled and the ushers were compelled by representatives of the board of health to close the doors to a lobby still jammed to the street curb and for a block in either direction, with people demanding admittance for standing room.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Nichols Buys British Rights to "Kaiser's Finish"

THE English rights to "The Kaiser's Finish," the eight-part special state rights production made by S. L. Warner, have been sold to Venito Nichols, of London, one of the most prominent foreign film operators, for a price said to be almost the equivalent of that which he paid for the same territorial rights to "My Four Years in Germany."

The territory for which Mr. Nichols has obtained distributing rights to "The Kaiser's Finish" includes England, Wales, Ireland and Scotland.

In purchasing foreign rights to "My Four Years in Germany," Mr. Nichols accepted a financial arrangement which exceeded the sales price on any other special production he had ever obtained, according to A. Warner, who conducted the negotiations in behalf of both the Gerard picture and "The Kaiser's Finish."

"That this price is closely approached by the one just paid to us for 'The Kaiser's Finish' is a remarkable tribute to the value of this state rights feature," declared Mr. Warner. "Mr. Nichols said that the public demand in Great Britain for war stories with a pronounced military atmosphere is greater today than it ever has been. The market has grown in size until the British theatre-owners are finding difficulty in getting enough pictures of that type to satisfy their audiences. Conventional dramas are still popular, but they cannot compete on the same block with a war picture."

Tourneur's "Woman" on This Week at the Rivoli

FOR the second time within a few weks Maurice Tourneur has had one of his productions made the feature attraction at the Rivoli Theatre. This week it is "Woman." For a number of reasons "Woman" is attracting more than average interest. It is said to mark a step in the development of the creator of "Sporting Life," "The Blue Bird," "Prunella," and other productions. "Woman" disregards the usual scenario form to a degree in its climaxes, presenting Mr. Tourneur's newest views upon the development of a screen story.

Yet "Woman" should not be considered as typical of Mr. Tourneur's work. The producer is now at work upon a detective melodrama, "My Lady's Garter," and, in rapid succession during the past year, he has produced dramas touching upon fantasy, symbolical whimsy, sex analysis, the code of morals and other phases of reality and imagination. With each production Mr. Tourneur has endeavored to delve into a new field of thought. He believes in the story and not in the star.

Mr. Tourneur, too, does not believe strongly in a player's previous knowledge of screen technique. "Woman" is at least unusual in that it presents a cast of faces new to the screen, the principal players being Flore Revalles, Paul Clerget, Gloria Goodwin, Diana Allen, Ethel Hallor, Lyn Donaldson, Rose Rolanda and others essntially new to films.

"My Lady's Garter," which Mr. Tourneur is now making, is adapted from the late Jacques Futrelle's novel and has in its cast Sylvia Breamer, Wyndham Standing, H. E. Herbert, Paul Clerget, Charles Craig, Warner Richmond and Warren Cook.

Upon the completion of "My Lady's Garter," Mr. Tourneur will close his Fort Lee studios and take his company to California for the winter months.

The distribution of "Woman," as well as "My Lady's Garter" and forthcoming productions, is in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

Warner Film Shows Prince as Cartoonists Paint Him

CLOSE-UP, intimate views of the Kaiser and Crown Prince, showing the latter to be effeminate and silly in his efforts to impress German staff officers with his dignity and position, while his father suffers the humility of his son's foolish actions, are shown as one of the incidents in "The Kaiser's Finish," the new eight-part special state rights production made by S. L. Warner.

These scenes, taken before America declared war on the Hun leaders, provide exhibitors with an opportunity for advertising the showing of pictorial proof that the Crown Prince is actually the Clown Quince, living fully up to the title bestowed on him by cartoonists, humorists and individuals who have met him.

The pictures, according to A. Warner, who is in charge of sales for "The Kaiser's Finish," are absolutely authentic, and were taken by a cameraman who was at the headquarters of the German General Staff as its guest during the early days of the war. They show the Crown Prince standing with his father, balancing daintily on first one foot, then the other, hands on his hips, wiggling and wriggling whenever he is spoken to, and then holding one finger lightly on his chin, his eyes mocking the expression of a professional coquette, when his father and the staff walk away from him.

It is believed by Mr. Warner and his associates that they are the only scenes of their kind in existence.

W. H. Announces Many Sales on Fatty Arbuckle Reissues

WITH the exception of two territories the rights to the series of twenty-four single-reel Fatty Arbuckle reissues have been sold by W. H. Productions Co., and the exchanges report that these subjects are meeting with success wherever shown.

The territories disposed of are New England to Boston Photoplay Co.; New York, north of Westchester County, to Gardiner Syndicate, Buffalo; New York, south of Westchester County, to Magnet Film Exchange, New York; Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia; Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia to Standard Film Exchange, Pittsburgh; Ohio and Kentucky to Standard Film Service, Cleveland; Michigan to Strand Features, Detroit; Illinois, Indiana and Southern Wisconsin to Bee Hive Film Exchange, Chicago; Virginia, Maryland, District of Columbia and Delaware to W. High Productions, Baltimore; Kansas and Missouri to Emerald Film Company, St. Louis; Oklahoma and Texas to R. D. Lewis Film Company, Oklahoma City; California, Nevada and Arizona to Peerless Film Company, San Francisco.

Edith Cavell Picture Now Showing at Strand

THE Strand Theatre, New York, one of the leading Broadway motion picture theatres, is this week presenting "The Woman the German's Shot," the Plunkett & Carroll production dealing with the story of the martyred British Red Cross nurse, and the producers announce that pending the conclusion of this showing no statement will be made regarding distribution arrangements.

As soon as the announcement of the completion of this production by director John G. Adolfi was made communications from exhibitors throughout the country began coming into the offices of the producers, demonstrating the intense interest this picture has evoked.

The fact that Julia Arthur, the distinguished legitimate star, makes her first appearance in this picture is an added sales point, according to the mass of exhibitors. Miss Arthur has been known for years as one of the greatest actresses on the stage, and her fame is just as widespread in outlying districts as in the larger cities, due to the fact that she has made many tours throughout the country.

The theme of the story also, which is based on what is probably the most dramatic incident of the war, the shooting of the British Red Cross nurse, Edith Cavell, has interested the trade, and it is doubtful if there is any story of the present war so familiar to all Americans as this one, and, as the name of Edith Cavell has been a household word for three years since the execution, the demand to see the heroine on the screen is said to be unprecedented.

EXHIBITORS TO RAISE ADMISSION RATES

Increasing Expenses and Taxes Compel Philadelphia Managers to Ask Slight Advance in Prices

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford Street, Philadelphia, Pa.

A CONCERTED action by a large majority of the leading motion picture theatre owners of Philadelphia will be made to secure a little higher rate of admission, owing to the heavy increase of expenses since the beginning of the war. This seems justified, as the prospects of still further obligations on the part of managers and manufacturers, due to the war taxes about to be imposed on films and on admission charges as well as other taxes which are to be saddled on the picture houses, would impose undue hardships from which very few men in the industry would be able to recover. It is expected that the patrons of the silent drama can scarcely complain at this time of a slight advance in prices when they realize the high expense under which the theatres are put, while taking into consideration that the quality of the entertainments now provided is far superior to that offered a few years ago. The motion picture industry has progressed considerably during the last five years, yet the expense to the public has been scarcely any greater than in those days.

Tichner Succumbs to Pneumonia.

"Bert" Tichner, for many years associated and identified as an important factor in the success of the Stanley Company, died last week from pneumonia. Mr. Tichner will be long remembered for his genial personality and his wonderful knowledge of the business, being generally known as the "encyclopedia" of the above company. He was also a close personal friend of the late Stanley Mastbaum and also one of Frank W. Buhler's close advisers.

Film Men Exceed Loan Quota.

Accumulated Liberty Loan subscriptions were turned in on Saturday, October 19, in such volume as to virtually swamp the clearing house organization of the Third Federal Reserve Bank of the Philadelphia district. Governor E. Pusey Passmore announced that sufficient subscriptions had been totaled to exceed the quota of $259,198,000 by more than half a million dollars. Despite the fact that all the motion picture theatres were closed, Frank W. Buhler, chairman of the Motion Picture Liberty Loan Committee, reported an excess of over $100,000 over the quota allotted for the motion picture men. Exchanges and theatres in this district are credited with having secured over $300,000 worth of subscriptions. Those on the Motion Picture Committee were Jules E. Mastbaum, John McGuirk, L. D. Beggs, Max Milder, Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, Columbus E. Stamper, Abe. Sablosky, D. Wegerford and "Bert" Tichner.

Wilmington News Letter

By D. M. Bain, Wilmington, N. C.

WASHINGTON CITY backers obtained five charters in Richmond, Va., recently, to engage in motion picture business in five cities in the State of Virginia, the principal office of all the different corporations being given as Alexandriafi, Va., and the towns in which theatres are to be operated being Orange, Cockade City, Covington, Emporia, Staunton, Va. In each of the five corporations R. L. Fryer is named as president and Winfield A. Wilson as secretary, both being from Washington, D. C.

The Cockade City corporation is capitalized at $35,000 and will construct its own new theatre, work to start immediately, the same being the case with Staunton, where the corporation is capitalized at $20,000. In the other cities the paid-in capital is named as $5,000 each, and it is presumed that in these cities the intent is to take over theatres already in operation.

All of the five towns are comparatively small, and it is understood that should the experiment of conducting theatre circuits in small towns prove profitable, the circuit will be enlarged to embrace ten or twelve other smaller Virginia towns. There are very few, if any, circuits in small towns throughout the country, the theatrical magnates usually going after the bigger cities when the extension bee gets in their bonnet, and Messrs. Fryer and Wilson are pioneers in their experiment, at least in the South.

A charter was granted in Raleigh, N. C., recently by the Secretary of State to the Business Men's Real Estate and Investment Company, of Winston-Salem, a negro concern, the charter naming as the unusual combination of powers that they would be empowered to manufacture coffins and conduct moving picture theatres. The corporation has an authorized capital of $100,000, paid-in capital being subscribed by J. S. Fotz and others.

PICK LEADER FOR CIRCLE'S ORCHESTRA

Ernesto Natiello Selected as Musical Conductor for Big Indianapolis Theatre—Succeeds Max Weil

By Indiana Trade News Service, 69 Layman Avenue, Indianapolis, Ind.

ERNESTO NATIELLO, widely known orchestra conductor, has been selected as leader of the Circle Theatre orchestra at Indianapolis, Ind., to succeed Max Weil, who left recently for Los Angeles, Cal., to accept the leadership of the orchestra in the new Grauman Theatre there.

Signor Natiello was born in Italy, but soon came to America, where he studied in the schools and musical conservatories in this country, and when he became of age he returned to his native land to complete his studios at the Milan conservatory. After his graduation he became bandmaster of a Royal Italian military band. With his orchestra he toured the United States, and later he organized a military band which toured the principal cities.

Music has been one of the striking and noteworthy features at the Circle since the theatre was opened, and the orchestra has come to be recognized as one of the best musical organizations in Indiana. A feature of the musical program at the Circle has been the musical interpretation of the picture, and it is in this new art, it is said, that Signor Natiello is a master. For several years he has devoted his time exclusively to the interpretation of pictures, and for several seasons has been on the staff of one of the largest producing companies, setting and arranging musical scores for the big feature productions.

USE LOBBIES AS VEGETABLE MARKETS

Dallas Exhibitors Transform Their Theatre Entrances Into Store Places Until Ban is Lifted

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

DALLAS, exhibitors in some instances are renting the lobbies of their theatres as store space during the course of the influenza epidemic.

P. G. Cameron, of the Crystal, was the pioneer along this line. His theatre was one of the prettiest lobbies in Dallas but, when closed, he decided to utilize it as a vegetable market.

Mr. Cameron owns a big truck farm east of Dallas, and, after installing benches in his foyer, he stocked them with fall vegetables and fruits of all kinds. He did a thriving business from the start, cleaning up $96 the first day.

Following this example the management of the Strand Theatre, another downtown house, turned their lobby into a vegetable market and did a brisk trade. Other theatres will probably follow suit unless the quarantine is raised soon.

Films Kin of Dallas Soldiers "Over There."

Through the enterprise of the Fitzhugh Film Company, of Dallas, the soldiers from Dallas now at the front with the Thirty-sixth Division are going to see their mothers, fathers, sweethearts and relatives on the screen in some Y. M. C. A. hut or Liberty Theatre back of the firing line.

The Fitzhugh Company early in October made arrangements to provide the Dallas soldiers with the unique treat of seeing their home folks in moving pictures as a Christmas feature. Arrangements have been made with authorities in Washington to have the films sent to the Thirty-sixth Division in time to have the big show on or near Christmas Day.

Relatives of the soldiers are being invited to meet on the lawns of the Dallas Country Club. The first pictures taken were those of the mothers of boys in the 133d Field Artillery.

Groups of mothers and sisters on the lawns of the club, wives and mothers of officers, wives and mothers of enlisted men, and close-ups of many of them, are being taken. A few views of familiar Dallas street scenes will be thrown in for good measure.

EXHIBITORS GET FUEL QUESTIONNAIRE

Secretary of Association of Ontario Theatre Men Asks for Details as to Next Winter's Coal Supply

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

EPIDEMIC or no epidemic, the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Protective Association, of Ontario, went right after the coal question in order to be safe with the Dominion Government about next February or so. A circular letter was sent out by Secretary Thomas Scott, of Toronto, to the four hundred exhibitors of Ontario pointing out that the use of anthracite coal during the coming winter must be eliminated if possible; that no theatre should be heated more than 64 degrees; that all heating equipment should be examined and tested for maximum efficiency, and asking for the filling out of a questionnaire called the "Fuel Conservation Form." On this sheet the exhibitor is asked to give details as to his fuel supply, actual and apparent, what he can burn this winter, how much he can save, etc.

Secretary Scott also took time to announce that the association boasted of an active membership of one hundred and seventy-one exhibitors on October 19, eighty-seven of whom have theatres in centres outside of Toronto. During a recent trip through Western Ontario, Mr. Scott secured nine new members, six of whom are located in Hamilton, one in Paris, one in Galt and another in Brantford, as follows:

Hamilton, Ontario., D. E. Stewart, Red Mill; A. E. MacFarlane, Regent; G. Swanwick, Princess; F. S. Morrison, Royal and Imperial; R. J. Stewart, Unique, and R. B. W. Robinson, Playhouse. Paris, F. W. C. Cove, Gem Theatre (only one there). Galt, Gordon White, Scott's Theatre. Brantford, E. Moule for the Rex Theatre. Mr. Moule was already a member for his other house, the Brant Theatre.

Eleven out of the fifteen theatres in Hamilton are now members of the association, the four delinquents being the Grand, Loew's, Savoy and Lyric theatres, which are controlled by big interests.

Some little time ago objection was raised by N. L. Nathanson, of the Regal Films, Limited, to serving of Mr. Scott as secretary of the Ontario Billiard Association, Inc., as well as being secretary of the exhibitors' organization. Since that time J. V. Proctor, of Toronto, has been appointed secretary of the Billiard body.

Clarence Robson Sick with Influenza.

Clarence Robson, manager of the Strand Theatre, one of Toronto's large downtown film houses, was apparently on the road to recovery on October 21 from his second spell of serious sickness within a year. The epidemic took one of Toronto's best known exhibitors on Sunday, October 20, when M. J. Thaler, proprietor of the College Playhouse, 344 College street, Toronto, died at his residence, 347 Brunswick avenue, after a brief illness. Besides being in the moving picture business he held the Canadian agency of the Barrett Adding Machine, and had an attractive office and store in the Allen Theatre Building for the handling of this machine. He is survived by his parents, widow and two children. The funeral was held from the family residence on the following day, October 21.

There was a good attendance in spite of the epidemic scare.

First Made-in-Canada Film Shown.

The first real made-in-Canada five-reel photoplay had its initial presentation at the Strand Theatre, Montreal, for the three days of October 3 to 5. The picture, which is called "Power," was made by the Canadian National Features, of Trenton, Ontario, which company went into the hands of a receiver some time ago—after the taking of two features. The run at the Strand was arranged by George E. Brownridge, who was the general manager of the late company. The star of the picture is Holbrook Blinn.

Safeguarding the Health of Patrons.

Manager Greene, of the Allen Theatre, Toronto, was the first local exhibitor to advertise in the papers that a theatre is disinfected every day as a safeguard to the health of patrons. Manager Harris, of the Garden Theatre, makes use of a placard at the entrance of his theatre to confide the same message to patrons. Other Toronto exhibitors have been using screens and printed programs to declare that their theatres are well ventilated.

Pantages Theatre Increases Prices.

Manager Walter Fogg, of the Pantages Theatre, Winnipeg, has decided upon a slight increase in admission prices, the new scale going into effect on October 7. Evening prices have been standardized, admissions for the second show now being the same as the first, and the range is from 15 cents to 50 cents. Top price for matinees has been raised from 20 cents to 23 cents, which, with the war tax of two cents, makes the cost to the patron an even quarter.

Pomeroy Devises Attractive Lobby Displays.

Manager Harry Pomeroy, of the Holman Theatre, Montreal, arranged a big front for the showing of "Crashing Through to Berlin," which was presented for a week before the Montreal houses were closed. The display consisted of the front half of two army tanks, cutouts of soldiers and an array of army equipment. Each of the tanks accommodated special ticket-selling booths, so that patrons literally bought their tickets from the tanks. This in itself was quite a novelty. The display cost $125, according to Pomeroy's figures, but the outlay was reduced for the Holman through the selling of the set to another local house. Another display at the Holman which attracted considerable notice was that for "The Geezer of Berlin," which consisted of a throne on which sat an effigy of the Kaiser. A third big set recently was for "That Devil, Bateese," which represented a Hudson Bay trading post.

Elliott Improves the Regent.

Manager W. M. Elliott, of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, the new man in charge of the downtown palace in Ontario's capitol, has made a number of interesting changes. The velvet curtain which protected the rear orchestra seats from the main entrance has been replaced by a handsome glass wind-shield, which better serves the purpose of warding off door draughts.

Music has always been featured at the Regent, and, with the idea of emphasizing the strength and ability of the orchestra, the stage was employed for the accomodation of it. Manager Elliott placed the orchestra in its accustomed place in front of the proscenium. The members of the orchestra were also given uniforms to replace evening dress.

If the Calgary theatres are reopened on Monday, November 4, Manager H. F. Hill, of the Bijou Theatre of that city, proposes to put into effect a new policy for his house. Contracts have been signed for releases to start on that date. The new arrangement provides for the changing of programs three times each week, and the theatre will be operated from 11 a. m. to 11 p. m. every week day. Orchestral performances will number three each day, one being a matinee show. During the lay-off the projection room of the Bijou is being remodeled, and the latest projection equipment has been obtained.

Incidentally, Manager Hill makes it a point to see every picture before it is shown in his theatre, and he reserves the right to reject any picture which he believes will not be acceptable to his patrons.

FRANKEL PURCHASES THE ALHAMBRA

Dieckman, Gruber and Weigel Sell Popular Cincinati Theatre—Deal Said to Involve $150,000

By Kennth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

ONE of the most interesting deals which has taken place in Cincinnati moving picture circles in some time occurred a few days ago. It was the transfer of ownership of the Alhambra, for some years a highly successful West Fifth street house, under the management of Charles Weigel. The lease on the property has twelve years to run, and this leasehold, with the furnishings and equipment, was involved in the deal, which, it is understood, involved a total consideration of about $150,000. The house was purchased by I. Frankel and allied interests of Cincinnati from Otto Dieckmann, R. W. Gruber and Charles Weigel, making another important addition to the already substantial moving picture interests of Mr. Frankel. Just who will have personal management of the theatre has not been announced, nor is it known as yet what the plans of Mr. Weigel and others formerly interested in the house are. It is fairly certain, however, that Mr. Weigel, in view of his success as a manager, will be found actively engaged in that line, whether with the Alhambra or with some other house.

Influenza Hits Saenger Company Hard.

THE Saenger Amusement Company has suffered greatly by reason of the ravages of Spanish influenza, and some of the individual cases in the organization have been especially pitiable, not because of any lack of spirit on the part of everybody in the organization to afford victims of the disease every comfort and attention, but because of the utter lack of facilities for the proper administration to their needs. D. L. Cornelius, former managing director of the Strand Theatre, died of the disease just at the time solicitous friends were being assured that he was practically out of danger. He had recently joined the navy, but was still regarded as a unit in the Saenger organization. His home was at Pecan Gap, Texas, and his grief-stricken mother came for his body and took it to the old home for burial.

Managing Director E. V. Richards, Jr., of the Saenger Amusement Company, has experienced an especially grievous session with the disease. After a very close escape from death on his own account every member of his family, including his father and mother, were stricken at one time. Nine persons in the one house were helpless, and it proved to be impossible to secure a nurse or even an attendant for several hours. A relapse for Mr. Richards was the inevitable result, and for days his life hung in the balance. He is a good father, however, and he pulled through. Happily no death has so far occurred in his family. Foster Alrold, present managing director of the Strand, has been seriously ill with the disease, and Miss Kate Collins, former secretary to Managing Director Richards, is in the Naval Hospital at Algiers with a pronounced case of the malady. Leon Grandjean, publicity director of the Strand, has also been sick.

INFLUENZA DEFERS COLISEUM'S OPENING

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

THE Coliseum Theatre, the latest of San Francisco's moving picture palaces, is ready for opening, but this occasion has been postponed on account of the epidemic of Spanish influenza. This new house is located at Ninth avenue and Clement street, in an attractive part of the Park-Presidio district, and is a splendid addition to the residence district theatres for which this city is famous. It represents, with the land it occupies, an investment of about a quarter of a million dollars, and embodies the latest ideas in theatre construction. It was planned before the entry of this country into the war and work was not undertaken until Government assurance had been given of the essential character of the moving picture industry. The furnishings and decorations of the entire house are of the highest order, and the theatre, with its seating capacity of 2,200, surpasses many of the downtown houses. S. H. Levin, the owner, is one of the pioneers in the moving picture business in this city, and the Coliseum Theatre represents the work of years on his part. He will be assisted in the management of the house by his brother, Al Levin. Paramount and Artcraft pictures will be featured.

Change to Be Made in Rialto Management.

George Mann, district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, has tendered his resignation, and it is announced that he has taken an interest in the Rialto Theatre with Howard J. Sheehan. In connection with the change the Rialto Theatre Company has been incorporated with a capital stock of $100,000 by Louis R. Lurie, E. Salomon and J. Samuels.

Peach Pits for Admission.

W. Williams, of the Auditorium Theatre, Grass Valley, Cal., recently tendered a Red Cross benefit, the admission fee being a dozen peach pits. The feature production was "Sadie Goes to Heaven," with Mary McAllister, furnished free of charge through the courtesy of the George Kleine System. Quite a collection of peach pits was made and this was turned over to the Red Cross, to be used by the Government in the manufacture of gas masks.

Lighting Regulations Relaxed.

Northern California municipalities will now have five bright nights a week, instead of but two, as has been the case for the past two months. Feature moving pictures have been added to the vaudeville and changes are made twice a week.

PREPARING FOR REOPENING OF HOUSES

Universal's Minneapolis Exchange Rearranges Advertising Department and Takes Inventory of Business

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

DURING the idle period occasioned by the closing of most of the theatres of the Northwest on account of the influenza epidemic, Manager L. H. Coen, of the Minneapolis Universal Exchange, has had his poster and advertising department rearranged and complete inventories taken of the business. New supplies and old subjects in sufficient amounts for all future needs have been ordered by the exchange, and when business is resumed again the exchange will be in a better position to serve exhibitors with everything they may need than previously. During the dull spell several special showings have been given of forthcoming releases for the benefit of visiting exhibitors.

Other exchange managers are taking similar steps to get their offices in the best of working order in anticipation of a rush of business when the influenza ban is lifted. They are urging country exhibitors to come to the city while theatres are closed or business dull to do their winter booking, see new forthcoming releases and thereby save themselves time and inconvenience when business is booming again. It is anticipated that when theatres are reopened business will be better than it has been for months. The regular theatre patrons, denied their usual entertainment, will eagerly flock to the show houses of the city.

Forest Fire Filmed.

Universal has obtained the first moving picture scenes of the great forest fires in northern Minnesota. Charles Bell, Universal's Northwest cameraman, was on the scene at Cloquet on the day the flames that have laid bare vast stretches of northern Minnesota reached and destroyed that city. Mr. Bell secured several hundred feet of exceptional negatives, and the best scenes are to be inserted in Universal Current Events.

"America's Answer" Postponed.

In response to many inquiries regarding "America's Answer," the official Government war film which was to have been shown at the Auditorium, the Civic and Commerce Association made an announcement through the newspapers that this picture had been abandoned along with all others in Minneapolis in compliance with the orders of the city health department. Many inquiries reached the association from persons who thought the picture would be shown because it was a Government film.

Donnellan Gets Chicago Post.

Dan Donnellan, manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange for the past year, has been elevated to the management of the Chicago office of Mutual as a reward for his conscientious and energetic service in this territory. He succeeds E. H. Duffy, who died recently of typhoid fever.

Ira F. Mantzke, assistant manager of the Minneapolis Mutual exchange a year ago, has been appointed to take the vacancy left by Mr. Donnellan's promotion. He comes to Minneapolis from Kansas City, where for the past year he has been manager of the Mutual office. He is rated as an old timer in Minneapolis moving picture circles, having started with General in this city in 1912 as supply man. He became associated with Mutual three years ago.

Billboards in Forty Cities.

Charles Stembaugh, manager of the Minneapolis Pathe exchange, has announced the following list of forty cities in Minnesota, North and South Dakota and Wisconsin which will have billboards in the latest Pathe serial, "The Wolves of Kultur": Minneapolis, Duluth, St. Paul, Albert Lea, Alexandria, Austin, Bemidji, Brainerd, Chisholm, Red Wing, Rochester, Staples, Sioux Falls, Superior, Eveleth, Faribault, Fergus Falls, Hibbing, Hopkins, Little Falls, Mankato, Moorhead, Owatonna, St. Peter, South St. Paul, Stillwater, La Crosse, Thief River Falls, Virginia, Wells, Winona, Bismarck, Fargo, Grand Forks, Mandan, Minot, Valley City, Aberdeen, Mitchell and Eau Claire.

Joe Brandt in Minneapolis.

Joe Brandt, business manager and assistant treasurer of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company of New York City, was in Minneapolis last week on the last lap of his country-wide tour of exchanges. Mr. Brandt stated while here that the influenza situation was far worse in the south and east than in the northwest. He was optimistic over the business outlook after the epidemic has died down.

V. B. Valleau, exhibitor of Albert Lea and Marshall, was in Minneapolis last week booking up for the "after the influenza" period. He contracted with Manager Leo Dennison, of the Fox exchange, for the Tom Mix productions.

C. W. Eckhardt, district manager for William Fox, was a business visitor in Minneapolis last week.

Washington News Letter

Rogers Is Fox's Washington Manager.

B. F. ROGERS, who came to the Washington exchange of the Fox Film Company from its offices in Toronto, Canada, where he has been on duty for several years, is now in full charge of this territory, C. B. Price, who has been putting the work into proper shape, having been recalled to the New York office.

Mr. Rogers reports that H. Heidelberger has been appointed booker for the exchange, and F. D. Lyon has been made Baltimore representative. Both of these men were former employes of the Triangle, as was Mr. Price before joining Fox Film Company.

Carl F. Senning, general sales manager, quickly recovered from an attack of influenza recently when he became informed of the arrival of a little girl in his family. Now Carl is walking on air and wearing the smile that is usually to be found on paterfamilias upon the arrival of a good-looking youngster.

Famous Exchange Has Woman Booker.

Miss Mary Jeffries, who for several years was connected with the Fox Film Corporation here, has been placed in charge of the booking department of the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange here, succeeding Gerald Payne, who recently resigned. She will be assisted by A. C. Eckhardt.

Miss Jeffries is one of the few really successful bookers in the country. She started in about five years ago as assistant to Captain "Jim" P. Anderson, when he was manager of the Warner Brothers Exchange. When he went with the Fox Film Corporation as manager, Miss Jeffries accompanied him as assistant, and was also in charge of the booking.

Morgan Cited by French Government.

Oscar Morgan, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Exchange, has received an interesting telegram from his brother, Paul L. Morgan, to the effect that he has been cited by the French Government.

Mr. Morgan enlisted in the Seventh New York National Guard, and was in the South for six months previous to going to France. He was transferred to the Intelligence branch, serving both in this country and in France, where he has had some very interesting experiences. Desiring to get into the active end of the game with the big guns he secured another transfer. Later, he was sent to the Army Students' Training Camp, from which he emerged a second lieutenant, graduating second on a list of 369 men. After a number of weeks on the firing line he has received his citation, and an assignment to the school as an instructor.

Flaherty a First Lieutenant.

Washington exchange men were this last week pleased to greet Harry E. Flaherty, formerly a salesman for the World Film Corporation. They were equally pleased to note that he is wearing the silver bar of a first lieutenant, which, by the way, is an honor he won for himself by his work in Texas.

Lieutenant Flaherty came to the Washington office of World Film Corporation from New York in September, 1916. In March, 1917, when the company took over the Southern offices of Tandy & Lynch and established their own branches, he went to Texas to work under Tom Parker, manager of the Dallas branch.

On August 8, 1917, he went over to San Antonio on business for the company. He finished his business, and then, instead of returning to Dallas, he enlisted in the 141st Infantry.

Army life apparently agrees with him, for he soon became a sergeant, and later was recommended by his commanding officer for a commission, which he secured last June.

He was recently ordered to report to the office of the Acting Quartermaster General in Washington, and came East, receiving at the end of his journey a promotion from second to first lieutenant.

Portland Brevities

By I. Lesser Cohen, Evening Telegram, Portland, Oregon.

Business Good in Oregon City.

CHARLES SCHRAM, of Oregon City, a pioneer exhibitor, who was in town recently, says that since the strike in the paper mills located in his city has been settled, business has improved. There is no fear of influenza there and all business is running as usual. The air being filled with sulphur fumes from the mills may help to keep the place clean.

Theatre Shutdown Affecting Other Lines.

J. H. MacDonald, of the Rex Theatre, Eugene, visited Portland while his house is closed. He states that the merchants of the town are now seeing how much the theatre means to them. Heretofore, Saturday saw a great influx of folk from the surrounding country and the merchants profited by it. With the theatres closed they do not come in.

The same thing is also noticeable in the larger cities. The grills, the candy stores and restaurants are suffering from the shutdown, and it is just as well that they learn how much they are indebted to the amusement enterprises. In suburban district, the soda fountains and ice cream parlors are empty. It may bring about a better co-operation. In the meantime, the theatre employes and managers are having a needed vacation.

PAUL C. MOONEY, central division manager for Fox, was in Detroit on October 22 and 23 paying his last visit here, as he was planning to leave Friday, October 25, for Los Angeles. Paul has been transferred by Fox to the Pacific Coast, where he will be special representative of Los Angeles, San Francisco and Seattle territories. He is succeeded at Detroit by Mr. Sheehan, brother of Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager of the Fox Film Corporation. Paul has leased his home furnished in Cleveland, and has taken his whole family to the Coast with him.

Famous to Abolish C. O. D. Shipments.

The Detroit branch of the Famous Players-Lasky Company is preparing to issue a circular to exhibitors in this territory to the effect that all C. O. D. shipments will be discontinued, and that no film will be shipped unless the exhibitor's check is in the office prior to the date the film is booked. This is not because the exhibitor's credit is questioned, but merely because C. O. D. shipments are tying up thousands and thousands of dollars belonging to the Famous Players Company with the express company, and it is taking weeks and weeks to get this money.

Attends Parents' Golden Wedding Celebration.

Robert Cotton, World manager in Detroit, left October 21 for Minneapolis to attend the golden wedding anniversary of his mother and father. His father, by the way, is a minister. When Bob was a young man his parents wanted him to join the ministry, but, instead of "selling religion," Bob decided to sell typewriters for Ricord Gradwell, of the Oliver Typewriter Company, and when Mr. Gradwell went into the film business Bob followed suit.

"THE DARE DEVIL"

Mutual Star Production Presents Gail Kane in Story of German Intrigue.

Reviewed by Margaret I. MacDonald.

A RATHER improbable story serves as a basis for the five-part Gail Kane production, "The Dare Devil," which the Mutual Film Corporation released October 13. But improbable as it is it might have made better entertainment if the director and the writer of subtitles had handled the subject with more care. Gail Kane has done better work when better opportunities have offerd themselves. The cast, including Corinne Uzell, Mildred Marsh, Henry Sedley, Roy Applegate, Duncan McRae, Walter Dowling, Walter Hayers and Norman Trevor acquitted itself well.

The picture opens with scenes on the battlefield of France, where Captain Carruthers meets with injuries which cause his death. His daughter Roberta comes to America to the home of her uncle, who is expecting a nephew and not a niece. Realizing that the country is in need of the services of good men, she dons male attire and applies for the position of translator and interpreter with the Governor of the state. Complications occur in which she is obliged to play a double role, that of the niece who really has arrived and of the nephew who was expected. The Governor falls in love with Miss Carruthers, and when, as Bob, the nephew of Robert Carruthers, she rounds up a couple of German spies and has fulfilled what she believes to have been her mission in the service of the country, she consents to become the wife of the Governor.

What was intended to be the strong point of the story has not been brought out forcibly enough, that is, the desire of the girl to play a man's part in the cause of democracy.

"WOMAN'S WEAPONS"

Ethel Clayton Uses Them Effectively in Paramount Picture of Domestic Problems.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

TWO cute youngsters and many quickly recognized scenes from married life are among the best features of "Woman's Weapons," a Paramount picture starring Ethel Clayton. It was written by Beulah Marie Dix, and contains an important truth regarding husbands which most wives learn early in their married life: A soul mate stands a slim chance against a man's wife, if the vampire lady is a poor cook and friend wife knows how to appeal to her husband's appetite.

The story is not at all tragic in spite of the fact that Nicholas Elliot, an author and a married man, neglects his wife for another woman and lies like a cad when he thinks he is going to be found out. Not being of the weepy sort, Mrs. Nicholas wastes no time in tears or in making scenes. She just puts her wits to work and fights the soul mate for her husband's love, and defeats her.

The Elliots are wealthy, until Nicholas starts gambling in stocks and goes broke. The family then move to a modest cottage on the seashore, and learn to wait on themselves. Mrs. Nic had a nice little fortune of her own, but a foolish uncle invests it badly for her, and she is unable to help her husband. Knowing that Nicholas has arranged to have his charmer help him with a new story, the wife invites her rival to spend the summer with them at the cottage. The unsuspecting home-wrecker accepts, and Mrs. Nic gets rid of the one servant, pretends to be laid up with a scalded foot, and leaves the domestic affairs to the unskilled hands of the soulful one.

Nicholas soon finds out that his stomach does not yearn for the lady's cooking even if his heart hungers for her love, and his organ of affection comes out second best. The wicked woman is sent about her business, Nicholas acknowledges he's been a fool, and wifey plays another trump card when she lets it be known that the bad investment of her own money had turned out the other way, and they can all go back to the old home.

There are no big scenes in the picture, and there is a deal of quite commonplace incident. But there are also amusing bits by the two small Elliots, and the atmosphere of the story will appeal to the gentler sex. Robert G. Vignola has directed it with excellent artistic results, and the acting of the cast is strongly in the picture's favor. Ethel Clayton as Anne Elliot presents a type of graceful, true-hearted womanhood, and Elliott Dexter is an ideal selection for the husband. The two children are eleverly played by Dorothy Rosher and Pat Moore, and Vera Doria is Esmee Hale, the soul mate.

"THE SHE-DEVIL"

William Fox Presents Theda Bara in the Story of an Improper Spanish Person.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

MR. FOX, Miss Bara, Director J. Gordon Edwards, the exhibitor who caters to a Theda Bara following, and the "fans" who simply dote upon the "vampings" of this celluloid star will all have cause for great satisfaction in presentations of "The She-Devil"—for Miss Bara gets representation in nine out of ten feet of a six-reel "Theda Bara Super-Feature." It naturally follows that those who admire Miss Bara's film efforts will delight in seeing as much of her as possible in the characters she creates.

"The She-Devil" takes on the character of a serial presentation in the shifting scenes, phenomenal escapes, sensational "chases," and ultimate conclusion at the point originally decided upon. There is no special reason for the feature to stop at six reels; the story might be continued with more escapes, more shifting locations and more evidences of Miss Bara's abilities, by grace of direction, to create excitement, overcome obstacles and keep on "vamping" ad lib.

Miss Bara is pictured as an improper lady, originating in a small Spanish village, who is discovered with no visible means of support. The Parisian artist who declines to tarry after she has served him a portion of her most delicious pastry seems to have been the only man who had not "fallen" for her cooking. There is a mountain brigand who has read in the papers or had heard it gossiped about that Lolette (the character played by Miss Bara) was notoriously seductive and desirable.

The artist, the bandit, Paris and its salubrious environments, are the principal factors in the film construction entitled "The She-Devil." Miss Bara provides the means to a six-reel end, and, incidentally, is seen to dance, "emote," "vamp," smoke cigarettes and wear any number of different styled gowns. The proceeds of a stage-robbery figure largely in the situations, and although Lolette is never shown in the act of pawning any jewels, she never lacks the cash to negotiate everything the heart of a vampire might crave.

For those who admire Theda Bara and her productions, "The She-Devil" will deliver the goods. Make no mistake about that.

"THREE X GORDON"

Jesse D. Hampton's Production Featuring J. Warren Kerrigan Contains Temperance Plea.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE reformation of a dozen young heirs to great wealth and their escape from the booze habit takes the place of any real drama in "Three X Gordon," a five-part Jesse D. Hampton picture featuring J. Warren Kerrigan. Kenneth B. Clarke furnished both the story and the scenario, and Ernest C. Warde directed the production. The picture is distributed by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

"Three X Gordon" starts off along the familiar track, and introduces the spectator to the rich young man who drinks and raises the deuce generally with a crowd of young chaps of his own set until his father becomes angry and sets him adrift. In this case the hero's name is Harold Chester Winthrop Gordon, and his best girl is Dorrie Webster. Harold accepts the situation, bids Dorrie farewell, joins forces with his chum, and starts to walk in the direction of the setting sun.

Hunger forces the pair to apply to a farmer in New Jersey for something to eat. The farmer gives it to them, after they have earned it by the unaccustomed sweat of their brows. To their astonishment they commence to like hard work, and at the end of a few weeks find that they have improved their health and conquered the rum demon.

A great scheme suggests itself: They determine to reform all the drink hounds in their set. Knowing that they will not leave the gay life willingly, the two reformers kidnap their subjects and force them to take the cure. About the time they have rescued a dozen of the moneyburners the United States gets into the big war, and Gordon and his chum head a squad of perfectly fit huskies who are eager to serve Uncle Sam. Once in his uniform, Gordon wins over his father, his best girl and his best girl's father.

None of the above doings is very exciting, but the moral tone of the story is above reproach. It has been well produced, and J. Warren Kerrigan and his associates give a good account of the acting. Lois Wilson plays the hero's sweetheart. Photographer, Charles Stumar.

"THE CHEAT"

Jesse L. Lasky's Great Success Featuring Sessue Hayakawa and Fannie Ward Again Released.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

WHEN "The Cheat" was first shown it instantly won its place among the most dramatic stories of the screen. Hector Turnbull, the author, was credited with having written a photoplay that had great power and gave the leading actors unusual opportunities to display strong passion and technical skill. The verdict still holds good. Under the direction of Cecil DeMille the story is told on the screen clearly and convincingly, and the acting of Fannie Ward, Jack Dean and the Japanese player, Sessue Hayakawa, does justice to every demand. Its reissue should make the picture many new friends and delight its old champions.

"WOMAN."

Notable Production by Tourneur from Whittaker's Tribute to Modern Womanhood.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

REMARKABLE contribution to the aesthetic movement in motion picture production. "Woman," is so entrancing to the eye and so beguiling to the thoughts and sentiments of the spectator that it lures him into a state of dreamy forgetfulness of himself and the little world in which he has been living. It can thus do without dramatic suspense, but that value is present, along with logical development, power of construction and, above all things, an atmosphere so convincing that events seem to take place instead of being presented in illustration of the final purpose.

It thus becomes one of the finest products of the year.

There seems to be a cynical tendency at the beginning, wrongly called a "prologue," for it is the first act of the main line of action. A husband finds his young wife amusing because she is a woman, as though he had never met one before marriage, and he is so uncertain about her mental and moral make-up that he consults an encyclopedia, a correspondence school not being handy. He finds Eve guilty, and poor, dear Adam, innocent of any wrong intention, just as he is today, according to Kipling. This story of Eve is beautifully pictured by Tourneur and the lady herself, beautifully impersonated by Miss Ethel Hallor—no wonder Adam fell!

The cynical modern husband puts the story of Eve behind him and delves in history for more temptresses, skipping such ladies as Mary, Rachel, Joan and others of noble character, confining his investigations to those who caused the downfall of more innocent and unsuspecting male creatures. Messalina is one of these, the infamous third wife of poor old Emperor Claudius, and the magnificence with which the life of this Roman decadent is pictured is startlingly beautiful and sensuous. Although its appeal is independent of the emotions, a pageantry of primitive love and luxury, of hate and revenge, of lust and murder, a moving pattern only, it is so rich, so exotic, so powerfully imaginative in mood and setting, that the effect is as deep as that of pure drama.

Three other episodes follow, the historical one of Heloise and Abelard, Diana Allen the temptress, an imaginative one of Cyrene and the young Brittany fisherman, to prove that woman is fickle; Miss Gloria Goodwin very effective as Cyrene, and an illustration of woman's vanity taken from our Civil War, the least effective, because women were even more heroic in those days than now—the war was here, in our midst, and our women put aside all vanity. This last episode seriously weakens the entire production, for the ultimate purpose is to pay a splendid tribute to woman of to-day. It is averred that she has emerged from slavery to be man's equal in many respects, his moral superior. This is not to be denied, but the contrast loses force by depicting our women of the Rebellion, as typified, to be weak and vain.

The moral is all right, but there is more to say of the continuous enchantment of Tourneur's pictures. He has had, almost invariably, to deal with stories of dead issues, but he had made them rich with poetic charm, to almost breathe a new life into them. When he gets a virile drama of to-day and to-morrow, he will probably blaze a path across the dramatic horizon which will dim all his previous performances. He is a veritable artist, especially in marshalling a mass of human figures, robed or disrobed, into a tremendous decorative composition, worthy of the great masters of other days.

"THE WOMAN THE GERMANS SHOT."

Julia Arthur as Edith Cavell, the Murdered English Nurse, a Heroic Figure in Powerful Indictment of the Huns.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

THE bare facts of the Cavell case furnish one of the most dramatic and unforgettable incidents of the great war. Anthony Paul Kelly in adapting the historical event to the screen has added but little of a romantic nature in order to give the story a stronger human interest. The picture, which is entitled "The Woman the Germans Shot," is a straightforward and uncompromising screen-telling of the facts leading up to the murder, and its principal character is acted with dignity, feeling and an excellent quality of screen art by Julia Arthur. John G. Adolphi directed the production and handled his forces with skill and judgment. The supporting cast, which includes Creighton Hale, Thomas Brooks, Joyce Fair, Paul Panzer, William H. Tooker and Sara Alexander, does its share toward the success of the picture. Joseph L. Plunkett and Frank Carroll, the producers of "The Woman the Germans Shot," have an offering that will make a hit with every hater of the Hun.

The opening scenes take place in England when Edith Cavell is a young girl. George Brooks, an English lad, is in love with Edith, but she has decided to devote her life to the relief of suffering, and the young fellow joins the army. Twenty-five years later Brooks returns from Africa accompanied by his son. The father is blind and Edith helps to take care of him after he is operated on. His sight is restored. The war breaks out, and Edith Cavell goes to Belgium as a nurse. Frank Brooks, now a British soldier, is captured by the Germans. Edith Cavell aids him to escape. Frank gets back safely to his father and his sweetheart, and Edith is tried and condemned for assisting him. The scenes of the trial and the execution are carried out according to the published accounts.

"THE ROSE OF WOLFVILLE."

Patricia Palmer Appears in Title Role of an Excellent Wolfville Story.

WHAT is probably the best of the two-reel Wolfville stories issued so far by General Film Company as a Broadway Star Feature is "The Rose of Wolfville," which was shown during the past week at the Rivoli Theatre. It has an interesting and well told story and there is plenty of action; in fact, as much as is found in a large number of five-reel features. In addition, the story has both humor and pathos, and should be well received by any audience.

Nan and Jed are sweethearts, and their fathers are highwaymen. Jed decides to go straight, but the older men induce him to join in one more haul. This proves to be their undoing. Jed is wounded, but makes his getaway in a sensational manner, while the other two are killed. The sheriff takes Nan to live with the family of the judge, but their narrow method of living becomes irksome, and she slips away to her father's cabin. The sheriff, who is in love with her, follows. In the meantime Jed, who has secured an honest job, return for Nan. The sheriff arrests him, but with Nan's assistance they finally elude them and go away to start life anew.

Patricia Palmer is well cast as Nan, with C. E. Hatton as Jed. Tom Lugham gives a good performance as the sheriff and Carl Forms as Judge Roach. The photography and locations are excellent, and the production is capably directed by R. N. Bradbury.

COMMENTS

General Film Company

THE ROSE OF WOLFVILLE (Broadway Star Feature).—This is probably the best one of the two-reel Wolfville stories issued so far. There is plenty of action and a lot of good riding. Patricia Palmer is splendidly cast in the title role.

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation

WOMEN'S WEAPONS (Paramount).—Ethel Clayton is the leading player in this five-part picture, which shows how a wife wins back her husband from a soul mate. Beulah Dix wrote the story and Robert G. Vignola directed it. Elliott Dexter is a member of the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

WHEN DO WE EAT? (Paramount).—A comedy verging on farce at times, the story of a half-starved little actress who saves the village bank from being robbed, with Enid Bennett in the leading role. Ince supervision. Reviewed in last week's issue.

HER FIRST MISTAKE (Paramount).—A Sennett farce out of the ordinary in its remarkable revelations of character among babies, dogs and chickens, who become expert comedians, though unconscious ones, in one of the brightest of Sennett products yet shown on the screen. One big laugh. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Fox Film Corporation

THE SHE-DEVIL (Fox).—Announced as a "Theda Bara Super-Feature," this newest of the vampire's exploits is all that. Miss Bara is in evidence practically all of the time, enacting a role written expressly to exploit her screen personality to the fullest extent. Exhibitors who have a large following for Miss Bara may safely promise an entirely satisfying display of her peculiar gifts. There will be no Theda Baraite disappointed in "The She-Devil."

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE BLADE OF HATE (Vitagraph).—Chapter three of the serial "The Iron Test," in which Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway are featured, shows the escape from death of the two circus performers when the van goes over the side of the road into the chasm. They catch on the overhanging limb of a tree. Back at work in the ring once more, their mysterious enemy, the Red Mask, again tries to kill them by placing an open knife in such a manner that their trapeze rope will be cut through during their performance. Only the skill and strength of Bert saves them both.

BEARS AND BAD MEN (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Semon is the author, producer and leading actor in this one part knockabout farce. A comic feud in old Kentuck, a revengeful bear and an utter disregard of life, limbs and physical beauty on the part of the entire cast supply the picture with plenty of rough-and-tumble humor.

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation

THREE X GORDON (Jesse D. Hampton).—J. Warren Kerrigan is the star of this five-part picture, written by Kenneth B. Clarke and released on the W. W. Hodkinson program. The story tells how a number of young bloods were cured of the liquor habit. It is well produced and acted. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

Mutual Film Corporation

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 67 (Mutual).—In this issue Charles Schwab is seen launching two merchant ships; Richmond, Va., organizes to fight the epidemic, and the high school, turned into a hospital, is seen receiving victims from busy ambulances. Scenes from the battle front show the placing of a captured German pontoon as a section of a pontoon bridge, and other scenes of interest in evacuated section of Belgium.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 68 (Mutual).—This issue includes scenes showing women at work in the fight to kill the epidemic, serving poor sections of the city with articles necessary to resistance, a patriotic meeting of the Women's Munition Reserve, and scenes showing how the Y. M. C. A. helps to keep our soldiers in good cheer in France. The launching of an oyster fleet and scenes showing the interior of a laboratory on board one of the boats where the oysters are tested for unhealthy conditions.

THE DARE-DEVIL (Mutual-Kane), Oct. 13.—A five part spy story in which Gail Kane is featured. The production is not an altogether satisfactory one from the standpoint of consistency. A full review will be found elsewhere.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE RIDE TO DEATH (Pathe).—Episode No. 4 of "Wolves of Kultur." Hartman's death occurs in this number, as the result of a dash over a cliff in an automobile. The feat is far from new, but well handled. Barclay's disguise and meeting with Zaremba and the other plotters is a strong feature; also Bob's unavailing effort to settle scores with Zaremba. The serial grows in interest as it proceeds.

A STRANGER FROM THE SEA (Pathe).—Episode No. 11 of "Hands Up." This opens with the rescue of Echo by Two-Gun Carter from the falling weight. In the course of various exciting events her father is shot by Sam Killman and dies before he has revealed the identity of the Phantom Rider. A stranger is cast up by the sea near Crow's Nest, a robbers' resort, who says he brings a message from the Inca Indians of Peru for Echo. The message is genuine, but before obtaining it she is led into a trap. The number is well made and full of interest.

NAVAL AIR POWER (Pathe).—No. 9 of the Official British War Films. This goes into the matter of instructing young aviators and is quite the best thing of the kind so far shown. It pictures Britain's young admirals of the air assembling machines, starting engines, studying angles of flight and making flights over cities and in the clouds. From the educational standpoint this could not be improved upon.

THE UNCONQUERABLE SPIRIT (Pathe).—Episode No. 18 of the Official War Review. This number deals with the spirit animating the Allied troops in the present war, and does much to explain why Germany was unable to win from them. Scenes from various fronts are pictured and the number closes with views of General Pershing decorating American heroes.

Tarzan follows, and finds the Porters in their beautiful Californian home. He rescues Jane from a dive keeper who abducts her for ransom. Clayton, who has followed Jane, persuades her that Tarzan has been unfaithful. Wild Life of the Jungle Contrasted with Civilization.

Advertising Angles: Pick up your advertising where you left it off at "Tarzan of the Apes." Give special emphasis to the fact that this is a sequel to the other production and not a rebooking of the first film. It might even pay, if you have three-day runs, to rebook Tarzan for a day or two before showing the sequel and advertise for the pair. This should be done where you did not originally play "Tarzan of the Apes." If you do not rebook, advertise that those who did not see the first production will have no difficulty following the story from the synopsis. Add that by itself "The Romance of Tarzan" is a complete play, and not merely a continuation of the first release. Hammer these facts in, and you should sell to capacity.

Advertising Angles: Boom Miss Gish as one of the Griffith stars, and connect her with her clever work in "Hearts of the World." For the story angle give the plot in brief. You might hook up the baby show with a slide baby show along the old lines. You can also hook up with a thrift stamp drive, since this furnishes one of the chief angles of the play.

The despairing Trenchard enlists. He is blinded, and when his sight is restored he is dumfounded to find that the nurse who cared so tenderly for him is none other than the spy woman. His sick leave is spent at Nice, where the princess has also come. Advertising Angles: Make what capital you may of the stars, but hammer home the fact that this is an intensely interesting story, as well as a propaganda play, produced on a large scale, with scenic and other effects. If you can manage it, a veiled woman would be effective as a ballyhoo. In a small town you might offer a prize to the first person guessing the identity of the mysterious woman. Get up a patriotic lobby display with flags and decorations.

Advertising Aids: Two one-sheets, two three-sheets, one six-sheet, two twenty-four-sheets. C. street parade, with a couple of absurd looking hounds, and the rest of the well-known trimmings.

"NEWMAN" Brass Frames and Rails that 90% of all the brass frames used in the moving picture houses throughout the country are "NEWMANS"?

DO YOU KNOW

WHY?

Because we steadily have refused to cheapen or lower the quality of our goods, even though others have sought to undermine our prestige by underselling with cheapened products. That is one of the reasons why nine out of every ten frames sold bear the name "NEWMAN."

Insist on that name and save money.

You ought to have our latest catalogue. Write us today.

We manufacture the frames in various finishes which do not require polishing.

Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.

The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. : : : :
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now!
Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

DURING this period of epidemic, and while your houses are closed up for the most part, are you using your time to advantage?

NOW is a good time to apply soap and water, the paint brush and varnish.

Within a week or two, partly through your co-operation and that of your neighbor, the epidemic will have been checked, and the ban lifted. New pictures will be made and released. Theatres across the country will open their doors again, and those of you who have cleaned house will be amply repaid for your work by the crowds eagerly seeking entertainment.

Pursuant to this unfortunate epidemic, gentlemen, cleanliness will more than ever continue as an asset. Give your house plenty of fresh air, sunlight, and soap and water.

Across the weird abyss of ages he leaped from the strange jungle home where he ruled—a white king of apes and tigers and long tusks—to the gilded halls of civilization, searching for his wildwood mate.
There in the primeval forest she had come to him, this beautiful white woman from civilization, and their hearts had spanned the centuries that divided the dawn of time from the light of modern life. From infancy he had nestled at the breast of a mother ape; he spoke the language of the long tails; the elephant, the lion, the crocodile were his slaves—yet he loved with the heart of man. Then she had been torn away from him. You saw them last at the jungle's edge, a strange affinity of incomprehensible nature—then she disappeared.
Could Tarzan—he of the apes—let her pass out of his life forever? How could he search for her in a world he did not know existed?
Now we see him again—a strange figure amid the lights and people of civilization—a giant of the wilds banded and bound in the conventional clothing of civilized man. Again he has found his mate, but a strange barrier stands between them. Is her heart abstracted with pride? Why do strange woes attack him? Why do voluptuous women try to tempt him—he who knows nothing of the world and its ways? Maddened, he fights with the very tempest of the jungle within his mighty being. Broken-hearted, he runs away. Will the jungle accept him again as its king? Will Tantor, the elephant, kneel at his command?
What is the answer to this riddle of primeval man and modern maid who lived amid jungle wilds and palaces

S. BARRET MCCORMICK wrote it to appeal to human people, who love, hate, fight, struggle, who want their entertainment to be human—

He took profitable advantage of the wonderful exhibitor-advertising material in

"THE ROMANCE OF TARZAN"

He brought them in droves by describing—

TARZAN'S fight with savages and wild beasts to maintain his supremacy as the white jungle king.

HIS MEETING with the beautiful white flower of girlhood from civilization—the awakening of love—their parting.

TARZAN'S yearning—that drove him to search for her in a new and strange world.

HIS THRILLING quest—beset by multitudes of new and unsuspected dangers.

HIS SUPER-HUMAN strength helpless before the duplicity and intrigue of the social conspirators who sought to keep him from her.

THE SLOW DAWN of realization—the wrath of a mighty jungle man unloosed in the heart of modern palatial grandeur.

THE CIRCLE found a tremendous range of of appeal in this great sequel to "Tarzan of The Apes."

ITS UNPRECEDENTED exhibitor-advertising qualities recommended it to FIRST NATIONAL EXHIBITORS' CIRCUIT as the one production on which to hold its national exhibitor-advertising contest with awards totalling $1,200, in Liberty Bonds to the winners.

dainty BILLIE RHODES

"She is certainly as clever as the best of them"

CANADIAN MOVING PICTURE DIGEST

I attended a pre-view of "The Girl of My Dreams," Billie Rhodes in the lead. I have never laughed more heartily at a screened comedy than I did when I witnessed this picture. * * * There are many great bits of comedy, not of the stereotyped order, but so natural and so amusing that they were a treat. There are also some big "punches." * * * Billie Rhodes is a "duck," not once did her work jar. She is certainly as clever as the best of them in this line of work. Her comedy was a "scream" and her pathetic scenes were delicately handled, showing a truly artistic temperament. Also she is very young and pretty; two indispensable assets.

Produced by NATIONAL FILM CORPORATION OF AMERICA

Los Angeles liked her - so will every other city

BY SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT T. L. TALLY OF LOS ANGELES SHOWED BILLIE RHODES IN HER INITIAL BIG MOTION PICTURE EFFORT AT HIS THEATRE FOR THE FIRST TIME ON ANY PUBLIC SCREEN

"Delightful Vivid Original"

LOS ANGELES "TIMES"

A new and delicious film personality, delightful, vivid, original and combining the charm of the ingenue with a deeper note of histronism—that's Billie Rhodes, in "The Girl of My Dreams," at Tally's Broadway this week. Where has this Billie person been keeping herself, anyway? Of course, we really know. She's been playing in some charming one and two-reel comedies, and we've liked her for a long while. But we had no idea, when she romped through those things, of what she really could do.

"A Full-Fledged Film Star"

LOS ANGELES "HERALD"

Little Billie Rhodes stepped out of the two-reel comedy into a feature yesterday with the same naivette that made creditable her matutinal plunge in the mountain pool. She bears the stamp of innocence in every pretty feature, and looks out upon the world with a trusting faith and responsive affection that endears her to every spectator. The little actress registers joy and pathos with ingenuous fidelity to nature. Her tears are genuine well springs of sorrowing youth and no mere glycerine drops appended where they will be the most becoming. She is apparently free from any endeavor to "look pretty," and climbs about on mountain sides, up and down eave spouts and through rugged walls with boydenish abandon.

"Endears Her to Every Spectator"

LOS ANGELES "EXAMINER

Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, histrionically, pictorially and financially. There have been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation's" and "Hearts of the World's," for instance) but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary—it is her initial five-reel starring vehicle. It won't be her last—if I am any prophet. Even if she couldn't act—which she can and does—her pretty face, clustered with cute little dimples, and fascinating personality would insure her of success. In this production she is the real girl of your dreams, a fascinating little creature, who is bound to soar to lofty heights in the film sky.

"Little Doubt of Her Success"

LOS ANGELES "EXPRESS"

The management of Tally's Broadway Theatre kept its promise yesterday, and put before the motion picture world a new star of personality and charm. Strictly speaking, however, Billie Rhodes is not a new star. She has a large following among those who like short-length comedy, and needs no praise for her ability to do sprightly and pleasing things in that metier. But now she appears in the realm of serious drama. The reception of the play yesterday left little doubt of her success. * * * As for Miss Rhodes, she is so arch, chic and spontaneous that she wins admiration at every step. There can be no doubt that if she is fortunate enough to find the plays to fit her dainty personality she will take a leading place at once among the popular stars of the day.

CONDITIONS CAUSE FOR HOPEFULNESS

Epidemic of Influenza Is Breaking Away in Many Sections, Permitting Picture Theatres to Resume Active Operations—Philadelphia and Chicago Important Centers of Renewed Activities

THE epidemic of influenza is abating. The reports that reach us are encouraging. In the east theatres are reopening. Chicago reports that moving picture theatres are resuming in that section under certain restrictions. Philadelphia, where the scourge has been particularly distressing, theatres are open and business is again becoming normal.

The epidemic holds many localities in its relentless grasp, but there is a general air of hopefulness in our reports from widely scattered territory as disclosed in the dispatches that follow. Exhibitors have suffered great loss in money, but there has been no weakening in the determination to face the emergency and make the best of a deplorable situation.

Death has taken toll of many prominent men and women in the motion picture fraternity, exhibitors, players and producers having suffered grave losses during the weeks that the scourge has ravaged all walks of life. In the death of Harold E. Edel, managing director of the New York Strand, the exhibitors lose a leader who has devoted his youthful years to the upbuilding of the business. His example has been a fine incentive to other managers in bringing the business of motion picture exhibition into the forefront of theatrical activities.

While the skies are clearing the affairs of the motion picture industry are still struggling forward under heavy handicap in many sections of the country. The ban upon production and full activities at first declared by the N. A. M. P. I., for four weeks has been extended for still another week, November 17 being now set as the date when operations in production and distribution will be fully resumed.

The following reports will give a general idea of conditions throughout the country as we go to press, Monday, November 4. They are by no means complete, but reflect a condition vastly improved since our last issue.

Quarantine in Illinois Outlined by Dr. Drake

THE arrangements outlined in our issue of November 9 regarding the reopening of theatres in Chicago were carried out to the letter, with the additional provision that all theatres should close at 10 o'clock p. m. On Friday, November 1, the closing time was extended to 10.30 p. m., as the latest reports showed a rapid decline in the daily death rate and in the number of new cases of influenza and pneumonia.

It is lamentable to state that quite a number of picture theatres were ordered closed, after being reopened, the requirements of the State Health Director had not been observed by the owners. These requirements insist on the following:

1.—All premises must be thoroughly cleaned, kept clean and well ventilated at all times.

2.—Conditions of crowding must be strictly avoided.

3.—Extraordinary diligence must be exercised to exclude from the audience possible infection bearers, such as persons showing evidence of colds or those residing on premises on which a case of influenza or pneumonia exists.

On Friday, November 1, 370 picture theatres were in operation in the city. The attendance showed that the people were hungry for screen entertainment from the first day of reopening (Wednesday), when theatres on the north side as far south as Diversey Boulevard were opened, until Friday, when the entire city was included, with the exception of South Chicago.

When seen Friday afternoon, November 1, State Health Director Dr. St. Clair Drake expressed great satisfaction with the improved conditions of the epidemic in Illinois. He stated that Waukegan, Lake Forest, Highland Park, Woodstock and Belvidere in the northern part of the State, as well as Chicago, had been authorized to enforce a modified quarantine during the latter part of the week ending Saturday, November 2.

Beginning Monday, November 4, he advised that it was altogether probable that restrictions will be raised in all northern Illinois communities, excepting a few in which the situation was not yet satisfactory.

From the middle of the week beginning Monday, November 4, restrictions will be modified in Central Illinois, Dr. Drake announced.

He also expressed the opinion on Friday, November 1, that, judging from indications then existing, southern Illinois will remain closed for at least two weeks longer.

Beginning Monday, November 4, as advised by Dr. Drake, the following North Shore communities, in addition to those in northern Illinois already mentioned, will operate under modified quarantine: Evanston, Wilmette, Kenilworth, Winetka, Glencoe, Highland Park, North Chicago, Libertyville and Arion.

Dr. Drake was much pleased with the conditions in Chicago, which he described as "rapidly improving." He informed me that the decrease in the death rate and in the number of new cases was "over 60 per cent. within the last four days."

He urged the greatest caution in keeping all theatres, halls and other meeting places well ventilated, properly heated and thoroughly clean.

"A recurrence of the epidemic later on, in the winter (pneumonia) season, would be a terrible calamity. Compared with such a calamity, the results of the present outbreak would be mere child's play. Such a recurrence would lead to the closing of all theatres and meeting places for the entire winter," said Dr. Drake.

Epidemic in San Francisco Believed to Be Checked

FOR the first time in its history San Francisco has been without theatrical amusements or concerts for an entire week, and it is likely that at least another week will elapse before public gatherings of any kind will be permitted. It is believed that the epidemic of influenza has been checked, through the drastic measures adopted by the local Board of Health, and that the number of new cases will show a rapid decline from now on. The wearing of gauze masks has been made compulsory, and business men and women are going about their duties with faces screened from view.

The Board of Supervisors recently sent a letter to the Board of Health commending it for its energetic action in seeking to check the spread of the epidemic, this letter, including the suggestion of Supervisor James A. Power, that Class A moving picture houses be reopened as early as possible in order to relieve the depression of spirits in the community. Chief Health Officer William C. Hassler has since advised that it is the plan to permit the best ventilated theatres to reopen at an early date, but he has suggested that it will be a week, at least, before such a step will be considered safe. The Allied Theatrical Managers of the city met this week and adopted resolutions supporting the stand of the Board of Health

It was decided not to reopen houses until the board announced that it was safe to do so and tentative plans were adopted to designate reopening day as "Theatre Day," the occasion to be marked by gala bills.

The resolution adopted a week ago by the California State Board of Health was not a specific order for the closing of theatres, as was the case in San Francisco, although it was generally understood to be such. A few houses in the interior operated for several days after the resolution was passed, but at the present time no California theatres are being served by local film exchanges, the recommendations of the State Board being observed to the letter. There are four houses in Nevada still open, but the closing of these is expected at any time. Almost all film exchanges are open and a few traveling men are on the road, but little business is being done. There is a chance that the reopening of houses may be gradual, owing to different local conditions, and if this is the case, the problem of handling business on the part of the exchanges will be greatly simplified. Some offices have retained their full working staffs, while others have released workers who have already found positions in other lines.

Government Losing $40,000 a Week.

Theatre owners are not alone in feeling the effects of the ban on amusements, Uncle Sam also suffering a financial loss. Internal Revenue Collector Justus S. Wardell estimates that the Government is losing $40,000 a week in the San Francisco district through the closing of theatres and cabarets.

"Within a few weeks we have the holidays, which with the exception of a week or so mean poor business. Then comes midwinter with its storms, traffic tieup, and other troubles; and then Lent. You can see that the best weeks of the year have passed and gone without anything in the treasuries of the theatres upon which to build future business."

Another well-known exhibitor said: "I look for the biggest season in years. The public has been shut in by sickness and the grip scare and has reached the point where they must turn to amusement to relieve their minds of the strain. It will be a quiet holiday season in the way of giving gifts, and I look for a liberal expenditure for amusements. The new increased wage schedules have put more money in the pockets of the class of people who attended moving picture houses then they have ever known before. They are going to spend this money, and the motion picture manager who books good strong attractions is going to reap a harvest."

New England Almost Clear.

The epidemic has almost completely subsided in eastern New England. Houses in Portland and other leading Maine cities have been reopened. In Vermont the ban will not be lifted until November 4. In New Hampshire and Rhode Island the ban has been lifted in most of the houses.

In western Massachusetts the theatres reopened to big business on Monday, October 27. In Springfield the schools remained closed, but the theatres were opened to poor business, as the grip is still raging in dangerous proportions. In other western Massachusetts cities the grip epidemic played havoc with business, but with the lifting of the ban on motion picture houses there was a good attendance.

Prospect for Early Opening Encouraging in Northwest

WITH a slow but encouraging decline in the number of cases reported daily, several of the smaller towns of the Northwest have reopened their theatres and other public places, although Minneapolis and Duluth and the larger cities of this territory are still closed by the epidemic.

The arrival of colder weather, accompanied by snow and rain, is believed to have had a good effect upon the situation, settling the dust which has been responsible in a large measure for the spread of the disease.

Preparing for Big Business.

Northwest distributors and exhibitors are feeling more optimistic at the present writing and are preparing for a record-breaking era of business as an aftermath of the epidemic. In the meantime, St. Paul, which is still an open town, continues to draw many theatre patrons from Minneapolis.

Although the past week has seen a slight but steady decline in the number of cases reported each day, Dr. H. M. Guilford, health commissioner of Minneapolis, declared that he was not so sure whether the epidemic had reached its crest in Minneapolis and would continue its decline.

"I do not want to make any predictions just now," he said, "because judging from the way the epidemic has run its course in other cities it is hard to tell just when it will let down materially. I am hoping, however, that the situation will soon permit of the opening of theatres."

Influenza Takes Its Toll.

Influenza has taken its toll among several moving picture men of the Northwest. Al Buck, brother of W. L. Buck, proprietor of the Gem Theatre, of Waterville, Minn., who came to Minneapolis to join the army, contracted influenza and died two days later.

Charles D. Wells, manager of the Isis Theatre of Cedar Rapids, Iowa, one of the prominent moving picture men of the Northwest, succumbed to the dread disease after an illness of but a few days.

Mathew Gruber, proprietor of the Grand Opera House of Stanley, Wis., is mourning the loss of two sons, Floyd, one year old, who died October 14, and Michael M., aged 19, who passed away four days later. Both were victims of influenza.

Overhauled and Renovated, Atlanta Houses Reopen

ALL the theatres of Atlanta reopened their doors on Saturday, October 26, at the end of the third full week, during which they had been closed by action of city council as a precautionary measure against the spread of Spanish influenza. Similar bans are expected to be raised at Chattanooga, Tenn.; Birmingham, Ala.; Jacksonville, Fla.; Savannah, Ga., and other cities in the South Atlantic territory within the next few days.

Power Shortage Threatened Hardship.

A shortage of electric power in North Georgia earlier in the week threatened to add further hardships to those visited upon local exhibitors by the "flu" epidemic, as a few days previous to the lifting of the health order a representative of the Federal War Industries Board, who is at present supervising the distribution of current among essential industries here, announced that no power could be spared the theatres even if they were permitted to open.

On Friday, after the city board of health had refused to recommend the reopening of the theatres at a meeting featured by much wrangling, city council was called into special session by Mayor Candler and voted to repeal the emergency closing ordinance passed three weeks ago. Local exhibitors, therefore, were thus placed in the position whereby, although they possessed municipal authority to reopen, the obstacle presented by the mandatory power ruling prevented the resumption of operations.

May Use Power for Six Hours Daily.

Immediately after favorable action by council, a delegation of officials from the Atlanta Theatre Managers' Association, headed by Hugh L. Cardoza, president, called upon Captain Miltenberger, representative of the War Industries Board, and, upon a vigorous presentation of their claims for consideration, succeeded in securing a concession from him by which theatres were permitted the use of electric current for power and interior lights for a period of six hours daily.

The managerial association officials pointed out that the motion picture industry had been declared essential, that President Wilson had indorsed the screen as an important factor in holding up the national morale, that the Southeastern fair here had recently been allowed power during an acute shortage, and that any saving in current effected by keeping the theatres idle would be more than offset by the lights burned in thousands of homes which would otherwise have been dark while the tenants were attending the theatres.

On Saturday the theatres accordingly opened up on the six-hour schedule and on Sunday all power restrictions were withdrawn in view of a material alleviation of the shortage occasioned by plentiful rainfall through the territory. On Monday all Atlanta theatres resumed their customary basis of operations.

Attractions Shown as Billed.

All the first-run houses here opened with attractions billed at the time the "flu" scare caused the shutdown. The Rialto is offering Douglas Fairbanks in "He Comes Up Smiling," the Forsyth, Charles Ray in "The Law of the North"; the Tudor, Dorothy Phillips in "The Risky Road"; the Strand, Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," and the Criterion, Clara Kimball Young in "The Marionettes."

The Vaudette, a five-cent house since the first of the year, inaugurated a change in policy with its reopening and is now presenting second-run Paramount and Artcraft features at a five and ten cent scale.

The Almo No. 2 announces the booking of the new Pathe-American features, the first of which to be presented is "The Eyes of Julia Deep," starring Mary Miles Minter. "Hobbs in a Hurry," the William Russell feature originally booked by Manager Schmidt to start the series, was due for presentation when the influenza epidemic arrived.

Practically every exhibitor in Atlanta completed extensive overhauling, renovating and redecorating work during the three weeks' suspension of business.

Influenza on the Wane in the Southwest Territory

WITH the wane of the Spanish influenza epidemic in the Southwest the business situation for motion picture exhibitors and film men in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas appears to be reassuring. It is apparent that the first two weeks in November will see practically all the theatres in the three states opened and catering to a play hungry public.

Openings are announced in all parts of the Southwestern district during the last week of October. From scores of cities comes the news that the disease has apparently run its course and that theatres, churches and schools are to be allowed to open again.

In Dallas motion picture exhibitors and ministers went to the mayor and asked that the quarantine be taken off churches and theatres, commencing Sunday, October 26. Owing to miserably wet weather conditions city health authorities did not grant their request.

They told both clergymen and moving picture men that it would only be a matter of a few days before the quarantine would be raised.

It is expected that Dallas shows will all be open during the first week of November. City health authorities told the committee petitioning against the quarantine that they did not want to open the theatres only to find that they would have to shut them again.

In all parts of Texas army camps are commencing to lift the influenza quarantine. This is regarded as an encouraging sign.

The following cities report that quarantine is raised and all shows open: Houston, Hearne, Fort Worth, Waco, Athens, Huntsville, Mineral Wells, Hamilton, Ranger, Orange, Brenham, Laredo, Bryan, Cameron, Denison, Electra, Mexia, Terrell, Sherman, Cleburne, Burk, Burnet, Wolfe City and Galveston.

Openings are coming in from the three states at the rate of about a score of towns a day and booking clerks are kept exceedingly busy.

Indianapolis Houses Open to Enthusiastic Crowds

BANLESS, but not quite "fluless," Indianapolis went back to normal conditions on Thursday, October 31. The bar against all public gatherings imposed by the health authorities on October 7, to check influenza, was lifted at midnight of October 30, and the next day motion picture theatres and soft drink places reopened their doors and business houses resumed their normal business hours.

The Circle Theatre reopened with "The Romance of Tarzan," which was scheduled at the Circle the week the order went into effect. The Alhambra resumed business with Charles Ray in "The Law of the North." The Isis opened with William Russell in "Hobbs in a Hurry," the picture it was to have run when the ban arrived. The Colonial presented "Maid o' the Storm," the Regent had Mae Marsh in "Hidden Fires," D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World," is scheduled for another run at English's beginning Sunday afternoon, November 30.

The reopening of the local motion picture theatres was marked by unusual demonstrations on the part of the audiences. Programs in practically all of the houses were greeted with more enthusiasm than had been demonstrated for several months. Although the crowds attending the reopening were not of extreme magnitude the local exhibitors are of the opinion that as soon as the people are convinced that the danger is entirely past the crowds will become larger.

Two exceptions were made to the order lifting the ban. Persons who have colds or coughs are not permitted to enter the theatres and all street car windows are to be kept open. Exhibitors are paying strict attention to enforcing the rule regarding sneezes and coughs, because they do not want to have to undergo another enforced vacation of three weeks if they can aid in any way to prevent it.

The reopening of the theatres brought out an abundance of newspaper advertising. The Indianapolis Star on the morning of October 31, carried two whole pages of advertising matter regarding the reopening of the motion picture shows and the Indiana Daily Times and the Indianapolis News, the two afternoon papers, carried equally large advertising spaces regarding the theatres.

In the remainder of Indiana, the ban established by the state board of health remains effective until Saturday night, November 2. Action may be taken, it was said, at the board's headquarters, that in some fifteen or twenty counties where influenza is not yet under control to keep the ban on, with some modifications, for possibly another week.

Washington Theatres Open Their Doors

AFTER having been closed for exactly one month, Washington theatres will reopen November 4, the majority of them attempting to secure especially attractive features to signalize the resumption of business. With less than one day's notice, Washington theatres were ordered to close on the night of October 3 for an indeterminate period, the local health department taking this as one of the many ways in which it was attempting to fight the epidemic of influenza. The short notice gave the exhibitors no opportunity to make arrangements for final programs, nor did it permit the exchanges to then take up with the theatres the question of arranging for the films to be sent out for the reopening.

During the closed period, however, the Washington Exchange Managers' Association, at a special meeting, decided to continue programs from where they left off when the houses were closed, so that most of the local theatres will, on November 4, show the programs which they had expected to exhibit a month earlier. It is believed that this method of handling the situation, especially in view of the fact that the majority of large producing companies also declared a shut-down, will reduce to a minimum any disorganization or friction that might have been caused by the closing order.

From the public's point of view, the closed period was softened somewhat by the knowledge that, when the open season for theatres was again declared, they would be able to attend shows in redecorated and renovated houses, since a number of the exhibitors took advantage of the quiet period to put their theatres in good condition. It is declared that never before was Washington able to boast of so many newly painted theatres at one time, and some of the exhibitors asserted that they have long been waiting for just such an opportunity to clean up.

The reopening of the theatres will see another new house in the field, Loew's Palace Theatre, at Thirteenth and F streets northwest, having announced November 4 as its opening date, soon to be followed by the opening of Crandall's Metropolitan, further up on F street.

Spokane Preparing for Reopening.

For the last 15 days, Spokane, in common with other cities and hamlets of the United States, has been worrying along bravely without the stimulating effects of moving pictures, vaudeville or road shows, due to the Spanish influenza epidemic.

Some managers and exhibitors have taken advantage of the lull to visit the coast exchanges and line up attractions for the near future, hopeful that the closing edict is not to remain in force forever. Still others spend part of the time on golf courses. Nearly all of the managers have taken advantage of the closing edict to renovate their places and painters and calciminers have been kept busy. When the doors again swing open to the public bright, clean auditoriums will welcome the patrons.

Approximately 20,000 persons attend the 11 theatres of the city each day during the 365 days of each year and on Sundays and holidays the aggregate attendance probably runs close to 30,000, while on some days it may drop to 12,000 or 15,000, but a conservative average is placed at 20,000. This means that during the 15 days practically 300,000 admissions have been kept out of the tills of Spokane theatre box offices. The average admission price of these people runs about 15 cents, summing up road shows, vaudeville houses and picture shows, meaning a loss of $3,000 daily, which is, of course, offset by the payrolls and expense of film service.

Monthly admissions aggregate $90,000, or about $1,080,000 a year. This shows that Uncle Sam will feel the effect in no small degree, for he gets about 10 per cent. of this, or at least about $10,000 a month. While admissions are not coming in, the rents, taxes, insurance and some other fixed charges continue and considerably more than 100 employes with a payroll of close to $12,000 a month are out of work.

Manager J. W. Allender, of the Majestic and Lyric theatres, has his program completed to January 1 for as soon as the house gets permission to open.

The Clemmer will reopen with Harry Gerard as musical director.

Epidemic Decreasing in Rochester.

While some of the Rochester theatre managers had tentatively booked films and plays for the week beginning November 4 and had figured that the closing ban would be lifted by that date, it is now apparent that the theatres will not be opened until after election day, and probably not until the following Saturday or Monday.

The epidemic in Rochester is slowly but gradually decreasing, but, according to the health authorities, the danger is by no means removed. The number of new cases reported still runs up into the hundreds every day and the death list from influenza and pneumonia hovers around thirty.

Officials in charge frankly admit that conditions are improving rapidly, but cannot see their way to rescinding the closing order until the situation shows a decidedly marked improvement for several days in succession. Should the number of deaths and new cases decrease considerably for two or three days in succession they could then hold out some hope of immediate opening, but not before. Various dates, including November 11, have been suggested, but Commissioner of Public Safety Hamilton says that this or any other date is merely guesswork.

Subsides in Baltimore.

The influenza epidemic, which for the past several weeks has been raging in Baltimore, has suddenly subsided and is now about over in this section. But Health Commissioner Blake of Baltimore City has not, at this writing, raised all the restrictions which were placed on the theatres and moving picture houses.

Just why such distinction should have been made between the churches, the schools, the theatres and other places of public assemblage as to the time when people could gather in each, appears to be a mystery that no one can solve.

The restriction was raised partly beginning Monday, October 28, and all the theatres were permitted to open from 7.30 P. M. to 11.30 P. M., but on Tuesday, October 29, the regulation for the moving picture theatres was changed, and they were told to open at 6.30 P. M. and close at 10.30 P. M., while other theatres were permitted to continue with the former regulation.

On Friday, October 25, however, the bans were lifted entirely on places of religious worship and also on retail stores on Saturday, October 26.

On Friday, October 25, a delegation of moving picture theatre owners went to Dr. Blake, asking that the hours be changed from either 5 to 9 P. M. or 6 to 10 P. M., and this was refused, but the aforementioned time was set. Some of the managers looked on it as if they were ready to take what they could get, while others were restless under the restrictions.

Restrictions have been raised in the following cities throughout Maryland: Elkton, Federalsburg, Cambridge, Easton, Cumberland and Annapolis.

Business Slump in Boston.

There has been a sudden slump in the tremendous business which followed the reopening of the theatres in this section on November 20. The weather has been a leading factor in this slump.

Following the reopening of the motion picture houses after a three-weeks' closing because of the grip epidemic there was a record-breaking attendance. Every manager reported large audiences with a prospect of one of the best seasons in years. Then the weather man stepped in with some of the warmest October days known in years, and after the depression of the epidemic, people flooded into the public parks and out-of-door places in preference to attending the theatres.

While for the past ten days the slump in business following the reopening has been heart-breaking to the theatre owners and managers, a cold snap would probably bring the record attendance that followed the first reopening.

There is a wide diversity of opinion as to the future of the business in New England this winter. One prominent exchange man said today:

"The houses will never recover from the losses they have sustained from the grip epidemic. My salesmen report a number of small houses which will not reopen this winter. The five best weeks of the year are those following Labor Day. The grip ban came in the midst of this rushing business, and the loss can never be recovered.

Dayton Situation Develops Into a Muddle.

The main question in Dayton at the present time in reference to the opening of local theatres seems to be "who knows when the opening takes place?"

The local officials were not in favor of closing in the first place, and it is said that the local health officer made the statement that to close the theatres was folly when crowded ten-cent stores, department stores, street cars and such as this were allowed to pack 'em in as usual. This was not the end, however, for there are two government flying fields at Dayton, namely the Wilbur Wright Field and the McCook Field. Both of these were under quarantine and at one time the influenza was very heavy at both. The commanders of these made a statement to the effect that if the local authorities did not close the theatres they (the government officials) would. In order to save trouble Dr. Peters, local health officer, then decreed that theatres would all be closed after October 9.

The local situation was serious, there being about 265 deaths caused by the influenza and 156 deaths caused by pneumonia. After the epidemic had abated somewhat the announcement was made that reopening would be permitted on October 28. This, however, was changed to November 3 by authorities and on October 29 a further postponement until November 11 was made. The local managers held a meeting on October 28 at the rooms of the Miami Valley Exhibitors' League and decided to send a committee to call on Dr. Peters and see if an opening could not be arranged for the 3d with the consent of the state authorities, who also have a hand in the granting of the official permission. It was decided to see Dr. Peters on Wednesday, October 30, and try to change the mandate.

Seattle May Be Closed Two More Weeks.

It was felt by Seattle health authorities a few days ago that the influenza epidemic, which has kept motion picture houses closed for the last three weeks, had reached its crest, but on Thursday, October 24, there was an increase in the number of new cases and in the number of deaths, so that the ban will probably remain in effect for two or three weeks yet.

A special joint meeting of the Washington Theatre Managers' Association and the Northwest Film Board of Trade was held on Wednesday, October 23, to discuss ways and means of getting the theatres open as soon as possible, since it was thought that the epidemic was on the decrease. A committee selected from the two organizations was appointed which was to meet the health authorities and the mayor and try to make arrangements for the immediate reopening of the theatres.

Statewide Quarantine Lifted in Iowa.

The Spanish influenza statewide quarantine in Iowa was officially lifted the week of October 27, it being optional with each city and town as to when motion picture theatres might open and other public assemblages resume. Des Moines took the lid off Monday, October 28. Film exchanges are still in a chaotic condition as regards business and no roadmen will be sent out for at least another week, as exhibitors will not be in a mood to buy new pictures until business has opened and the revenue of which they have been totally deprived for the last two weeks starts coming in.

Philadelphia Opened October 30.

Director Wilmer Krusen, of the State Department of Health and Charities, who, on Friday, October 25, in conjunction with the Philadelphia Board of Health, had lifted the ban in so far as it related to schools and churches, permitted theatres, as well as saloons and wholesale liquor stores, to resume business on Wednesday, October 30. Most of the Philadelphia theatres reopened without a hitch. Nearly all of the managers, operators and ushers were on hand in their usual places to proceed with the regular routine of the show.

Epidemic in Richmond at Its Crest.

The question of allowing Richmond, Va., theatres and schools to reopen was brought up at a meeting of the City Health Board Friday, October 25, and it was announced afterward that the unanimous opinion of all members of the board was that it would be unwise to lift the ban until all danger of a recurrence of the epidemic had passed, with the result that theatre managers have resigned themselves to a week or ten days more of inactivity. The epidemic here has just reached its crest and is expected to subside rapidly within the next week.

Grip Cases Receding in Buffalo.

As the number of cases of the Spanish influenza in Buffalo is steadily decreasing, it is expected that Buffalo's moving picture theatres will reopen early in November. The epidemic control committee, appointed by Health Commissioner Gram, adopted a resolution expressing the opinion that the ban could probably be lifted by the first of the month. According to word received the Buffalo film exchanges and picture houses, which were closed in the following places on account of the "flu," have reopened: Oswego, Syracuse, Albany, Watertown, Binghamton, Schenectady, Saratoga, Schuylerville, Ilion, Rome, Oneida and various other points throughout the state.

Some Western New York Cities Open.

Theatres in several Western New York towns are again open. Seneca Falls, Sodus, Batavia and a few other communities opened during the past week. In most of the towns a general opening will take place on November 4, but it is probable that in a few places the opening will be deferred.

Cleveland Not Yet Ready for Opening.

Cleveland exhibitors had no idea, up to October 24, as to when they would be allowed to reopen their theatres.

The health commissioner said it might be a week and it might be longer. However he also said that he will give the exhibitors the benefit of any chance to reopen a day or two before the start of a new week, should conditions warrant.

Winston-Salem Opens November 4.

Picture theatres in Winston-Salem, N. C., will be allowed to reopen on Monday, November 4, according to ruling of the local health board. At the same time, Greensboro, Durham and Raleigh are allowed to reopen their doors to the public.

Norfolk Opened October 31.

Norfolk, Va.—Theatres were allowed to open Thursday night, October 31, in advance of the expected time, no managers having made arrangeme s for shows prior to Saturday, November 2. However all theatres opened promptly at 7 p. m., and the theatrical section was thronged with amusement seekers, whose appetites have been whetted to a keen edge by almost four weeks of suspension of activities. All local theatres are inspected daily by health authorities for the present in order to see that proper ventilation is provided and that disinfection of the premises is properly done in accordance with orders issued when the ban was lifted.

Denver Opens November 10.

Denver, Colo., November 2.

Moving picture houses here will not open before November 10. Newspapers forbidden to flash election returns on screen because of the ban on outdoor gatherings. Epidemic abating in the city but spreading throughout the State.

GAHAM.

Michigan Will Lift Ban November 8.

Detroit, Mich., November 3.

The ban on moving picture theatres throughout the entire State will be lifted positively by Friday, November 8, and possibly Thursday, according to a statement made by Governor Albert E. Sleeper when in Detroit November 2. The epidemic is on the wane, and in Detroit conditions are about normal.

SMITH.

Influenza Hits Vitagraph Forces.

Several prominent Vitagraphers were touched by the influenza last week, but in mild form, and all are now recovered. Edith Johnson, leading woman for William Duncan in the serial "The Man of Might," was the first one to be attacked, and she was ill for several days. Paul Hust, who has been directing Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway in "The Iron Test," felt a sudden illness, so drove to a Los Angeles hospital, where it developed he had a touch of the dreaded malady. He remained in the hospital several days, but the disease did not get a real hold on him, and he is now back at the studio. R. H. McCray, of the technical department at the Vitagraph plant, was another victim of the influenza, but he, too, has recovered.

Meeting of the By-Laws Committee at Hotel Astor

PETER J. SCHAEFER announces that the by-laws and constitution committee of the Exhibitors Branch of the N. A. M. P. I. will meet at the Hotel Astor, New York, Friday, November 15. A full attendance of the membership of the committee will be on hand.

HAROLD EDEL SUCCUMBS TO INFLUENZA

Managing Director of New York Strand Dies Suddenly at His Home in This City Mourned by Hosts of Friends

AT seven o'clock Saturday evening, November 2, Harold E. Edel, managing director of the New York Strand, died at his home in this city a victim of influenza. His wife and child, Harold E., Jr., survive him. The funeral services were held Monday afternoon, November 4, at Campbell's Funeral Church, and the remains were shipped to Cleveland, O., for burial.

The Late Harold Edel.

The death of Harold Edel was a shock to the motion picture and theatrical profession. News had come that he was ill of Spanish influenza, but there was no inkling that his condition was serious. Hence the severity of the shock when thousands of his friends read in the Sunday morning papers that the managing director of the New York Strand had died the previous evening.

Mr. Edel was born in Greenville, S. C., twenty-nine years ago. At the time of his death he was the youngest man on Broadway, and perhaps in the United States, holding a position of similar prominence and importance. Upon graduating from Georgia University Mr. Edel came north, finding his way into the amusement business at the age of seventeen, when he was given charge of the penny arcade, in East Fourteenth street, New York, owned by his uncle, the late Mitchell H. Mark.

Mr. Mark soon transferred young Edel to a more important position in Lawrence, Mass., where he was placed in charge of Mr. Mark's moving picture theatre. Six months later he was again promoted to the very important position of manager of the Globe and Coliseum theatres in Cleveland, where he remained two years. When the Alhambra, Cleveland, was opened young Edel was placed in the position of manager thereof where he remained until he was selected as Canadian general manager for Kinamacolor.

Subsequently he returned to his uncle's employ, being made general manager of the Mark-Brock theatrical enterprises in Buffalo. There he remained until he came to the New York Strand, having meanwhile opened and directed the Strand, Buffalo, in which he had purchased an interest. His transfer to the New York Strand was made when S. L. Rothapfel resigned the position of managing director at that theatre to take a like position at the Rialto.

The progress Mr. Edel had made, thus early in life, was indicative of his capacity as a business man and a showman of keen instincts. Personally he was most affable and agreeable, these traits of character adding daily to the thousands of friends he had made during his twelve years in show business.

National Film Product Under New Control

THE Robertson-Cole Company further intrenched itself this week as a big factor in the motion picture industry by a special arrangement with the National Film Corporation of America, whereby it will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National's de luxe Billie Rhodes pictures and the series starring Henry B. Walthall, besides looking after all National Film Corporation interests. "Smiling Billy" Parsons has closed his New York offices and will confine himself entirely to producing. Robertson-Cole will supervise the accounts of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation in relation to the Parsons Capitol Comedies, and it will have authority to approve all contracts made through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for the release of the National's feature, "The Romance of Tarzan," the concluding chapters of "Tarzan of the Apes."

The National Film Corporation is planning to produce a new super-attraction, completing it for release before next summer. The title and subject have not yet been announced, but Robertson-Cole will control all distributing rights

Robertson-Cole Acquires Rights.

Within the past few weeks Robertson-Cole closed deals whereby all J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and Screencraft features are to be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States. The Robertson-Cole Company has also acquired for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Desmond pictures, to be made by Jesse D. Hampton, and Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas."

Publicity Manager on Vacation.

Vivian M. Moses, Select's publicity manager, has left New York by motor for a two weeks' vacation in South Carolina. Sumter is Mr. Moses' home town, and after paying his respects to the proprietor of the general store and a few local celebrities, he will go on a week's automobile tour of the State. Mr. Moses spent Sunday and Monday in Washington, where he visited his wife, who is head of the personnel division of the Fuel Administration.

The Motion Picture Exhibitor

New York Exhibitors Open New Headquarters

A MEETING and luncheon of the Exhibitors' League, New York Local No. 1, was held on Thursday, November 1, at its rooms. About fifty exhibitors attended. President John Manheimer presided. The new headquarters of the New York local of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League are located on the first floor of 727 Seventh avenue. The league leased the entire floor and subleased the back part of it to a publication concern, which greatly lessens the rental. The space occupied by the league faces on Seventh avenue and extends back about 60 feet, giving plenty of room for office space and a large meeting room, seating about two hundred persons. The furnishings are of rosewood with decorations of light gray. The building is equipped with an elevator and competent service. Its central location at Forty-ninth street and Seventh avenue, right in the heart of the film district, makes it extremely accessible and convenient to those who are always doing business with exchanges.

Among those present were: Henry Haring, John Manheimer, William Hilkemeier, Sydney Cohen, Maurice Needles, M. J. Gerdson, Max Oestricher, Clarence Marteneau, Chas. O'Reilly, Rudolph Sanders, Charles Steiner, William Fait, John Wittman, Henry Cole, I. N. Hartsall, A. J. Stockheimer, Aaron Corn, Gus Koenigswald, A. J. Stockheimer and Sam Spedon, of the Moving Picture World.

After reading the minutes of the previous meeting the opening subject of discussion was the question of the local's finances. It was decided that all dues of delinquents should be paid by November 15 and a collector be secured to make collections where members were still in arrears. The league's present obligations in maintaining their new quarters made this action imperative. The question of continuing delivery and collections of films with the Prudential Transportation Company was put to a vote, and it was decided in favor of the Prudential at a cost of $7 for each week, under a bond of $1,000 for losses and non-delivery by the Prudential Company.

Embargo Creates Discussion.

One member announced that he had just been informed that the producers' and distributors' branch of the National Association of the M. P. I. had decided to continue the embargo on new releases until November 18. This brought about a lively discussion of the N. A. M. P. I.'s action in the first instance without taking the exhibitors into its confidences. The question was asked: What is to hinder the producers and distributors continuing the embargo indefinitely? "Nothing," was the reply. Someone asked if the exhibitors didn't have a voice in this matter. In response to this question it was stated that as yet the exhibitors were not a branch of the N. A. M. P. I.

It was explained by Mr. Blumenthal that while it was decided in conventions at Chicago last September by the A. E. A. and the M. P. E. L. of America to amalgamate and become a branch of the N. A. M. P. I., the exhibitors had not been officially notified and would not be until President Schaefer had appraised them that they were a branch of the N. A. M. P. I. Mr. Blumenthal said he understood that Mr. Schaefer would be in New York on November 11 to confer with the directors of the N. A. M. P. I. on this matter. It was regularly moved, seconded and unanimously carried that Mr. Schaefer be requested by the president of Manhattan local to meet its members in special session, before his conference with the N. A. M. P. I., that the league might have an opportunity of explaining its views and attitude in the premises. On motion the meeting adjourned subject to the call of the chair.

Boston Picture Men Organize Trade Board

A CHANGE in the rules of membership and dues was approved at a special meeting of the Massachusetts Branch of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of America, at a meeting held at the Boston headquarters this week. More than two score of prominent motion picture exhibitors, exchangemen and dealers in accessories attended the meeting.

Bert H. Cornell, secretary of the league, called the meeting to order and Frank J. Howard was made temporary chairman. Upon motion of Ernest H. Horstmann it was voted to authorize the by-laws committee to change the present name of the league to that of the Massachusetts and Rhode Island Exhibitors' Board of Trade.

The following changes to the by-laws were also voted:

Article III A—To read: Regular meetings of the league shall be held on the first Tuesday of each month at 2 P. M. at the league headquarters.

Article XI—To read: Membership. Any person engaged in the motion picture industry as exhibitor, manufacturer, exchange man, or dealer in accessories, shall be eligible to election to membership in this division. Application for membership shall be made in writing by the applicant upon such blanks, giving such information as to the applicant as the board of directors shall provide, and such application shall be signed by a member in good standing recommending the applicant. Such applications shall be referred to the membership committee, who shall investigate its applicant and report its recommendation thereon to the association. Such application shall be accepted or rejected by three-fourths of those present.

Article XII—Dues. Exhibitors:

Class A—Houses 1,500 seats or over, $25.

Class B—Houses 1,000 seats to 1,499, $20.

Class C—Houses 600 to 999, $15.

Class D—Houses less than 600, $10.

The dues for membership for exchange, manufacturer or dealer in accessories shall be $10 per annum. All dues shall be paid semi-annually, in advance, Jan. 1 and July 1 of each year.

Metro Closes Albany Exchange.

Metro Pictures Corporation announces that in the future all of its business that has been handled from Albany will be taken care of by the New York and Buffalo offices of the company, the Albany branch having been discontinued October 22. E. M. Saunders, special representative of Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., who has recently been on an extended tour of different cities in upper New York State, in the interest of his companies, concluded the arrangements. The change, Mr. Saunders declares, will work to the advantage of not only Metro and Screen Classics, Inc., but to the exhibitor as well, as the division of territory between these two big offices will bring the buyer in closer touch with the producing companies.

Al. Nathan Managing Symphony.

Al. Nathan, who until recently was in charge of the Broadway Theatre, and was then sent to Montreal to assume a similar position at the Holman Theatre there, has temporarily transferred his activities to the Symphony Theatre of New York, where he is now in full charge of things. Mr. Nathan originally came from California, where he managed the Superba Theatre in Los Angeles and the Empress and Alhambra in San Francisco. During the last Liberty Loan drive Mr. Nathan was personally responsible for the sale of $101,000 worth of bonds at the Symphony Theatre.

Merrill Secures Another House.

The Merrill Theatre Company, of Milwaukee, operating the Merrill Theatre, has leased another downtown house, the Strand, with a seating capacity of 2,000. Both houses will be under the management of E. C. Bostwick, who for the past two years has managed the Merrill under the open booking plan. Under its new management the Strand will be known as the New Strand and run under the open booking plan.

OFFICIAL WAR PICTURES HELD TOO TAME

Carolyn Wilson, the Famous War Correspondent Humorously Proves That the Contrary Is True

OUR people "over here" expect impossibilities in the way of taking moving pictures "over there" of our brave boys on the front. They want action and blooded action. No backline views are good enough, even though the shells be screaming overhead and the cameraman's life is at stake for every step taken.

Of course I refer to Government war pictures released through the Film Division of the Bureau of Information, the scenes of which are taken at the front in France by members of the U. S. Signal Corps. The ordinary man and woman, boy and girl have been so often accustomed to seeing moving pictures of the lurid, die-quick type and are so innocently unconscious that all such scenes have been faked in safe places, where life and limb are never at stake, are naturally much disappointed with the seeming tameness of pictures which have actually been taken out on the battle front—not in the attacking ranks, of course, for that the commanding officer would not permit.

A very timely and most interesting reference is made to the taking of these war pictures in an article contributed to the Chicago Sunday Tribune, by that able correspondent Carolyn Wilson, now at the front, in France. Our old friend Lucien Wheeler, formerly general manager for Wm. N. Selig, who is known as a fearless man and the former personal protector of several U. S. presidents, receives humorous mention in the excerpt from Miss Wilson's article, which is given here:

"When you see the moving pictures of our men in action back there in America, does it seem to you that there isn't anything thrilling? Are you longing for flashes of them leaping across the parapet, charging down an invisible foe? You've seen those pictures before, but often they have been 'faked,' and that is just the thing which the decided—not to say firm—Scotchman who is in charge of the moving picture men will not allow.

"'As long as a picture has the initials of the signal corps under it and a caption which shows it to be taken at the front, at the front is where it is to be taken, and I'll break any man who fakes,' he says.

"'If the public wants to see sensational picturesque stuff, let them go to some of those heart sobs. They'll get nothing but the truth from our department.'

"Capt. Hardy is in charge of the laboratory out at Vincennes where all the film is turned in from no matter what section of the front it is taken. There is a corps of photographers working under him, some commissioned in the signal corps, like Weigle, but most of them government employes of the bureau of public information, civilians who only wear the uniform by courtesy and are obliged to affix the black P on the white band on their arm, just as the correspondents wear a red C on a green band.

"Several of the enlisted men down there at the laboratory have turned out to have really remarkable artistic viewpoints—they know what makes a good looking as well as an interesting picture. Although they were only working around the laboratory, Capt. Hardy discovered this from the choice of plates which they would lay aside to be developed, and many of them have been sent out since with cameras.

"Some of the men at the bureau of public information felt that the pictures lacked 'pep'. They felt they were too much back line stuff and that what the people in America wanted was action. So the chief of the department said: 'Go ahead; go on out there. You have all the opportunity you want to get anything you please. Go out and make your own conclusions.' So a party of them went out with cameras and high hopes—among them Lucien Wheeler of Chicago, who is attached to the London branch of the propaganda office, and Perry Arnold, old United Press man.

"'And what did they get?' Capt. Hardy asked me. 'Nothing but cooties.' Which is considerably too much."

William Duncan Vitagraph's Popular Serial Director

WILLIAM DUNCAN, Vitagraph's popular and widely known director of serial pictures, made a brief stopover here Thursday, October 31, on his return from New York to Los Angeles. When the influenza epidemic in Los Angeles eased up work in the studios there, Mr. Duncan declared a vacation of two weeks for his company and himself, and decided to visit his wife and family at his home, on Long Island, the first opportunity he has had to do so in two years. But with work which had to be finished in Los Angeles before he left and the time consumed in making the round trip, and in visiting the New York office, just four days were left for the home visit—rather short after an absence of two years, it must be said.

When seen for a few minutes at the Vitagraph office Mr. Duncan was all enthusiasm over his present work. He is now engaged on "A Man of Might," a serial in fifteen episodes, two reels to each. This will be finished early in January, and Mr. Duncan considers it fully equal to its predecessor, "A Fight for Millions," which has proved exceedingly popular. Edith Johnson plays the leading woman, opposite Mr. Duncan, who appears in the leading role.

Mr. Duncan is of the opinion that the thrilling scenes of any episode in a serial picture cannot be pre-arranged to the greatest advantage of the episode itself. He has found by experience that if pre-arranged they are always changed when the moment suggests other thrills which are better. The location in which the scenes are filmed is always a strong determining factor in such cases.

Mr. Duncan will pay the east another visit sometime in January. He intends to spend a week in Chicago, during which he will visit various theatres daily, both at matinees and evenings, and make himself known to patrons by interesting talks on pictures.

This was not my first meeting with Mr. Duncan. That took place in 1912, when he was with Selig's Chicago forces. In the following year he took a Selig company to Colorado and Arizona, where western pictures were produced under his direction, with Myrtle Stedman as leading woman. He joined Vitagraph's forces in the fall of 1913 and directed pictures at the Santa Monica studios, being soon afterwards transferred to the Hollywood studios of that Company, where he has remained since.

Orpheum Heroes Honored by Tablet.

Twenty-eight stars appear on the service flag of Jones, Linick & Schaefer's employes. In honor of these 28 men who have given their services to Uncle Sam this well-known firm has just had cast a handsome bronze honor roll which bears the inscription, "In honor of the Employes of Our Organization, who have Enlisted for Naval or Military Service in the World's War." The twenty-eight names are also engraved on the bronze roll, and the tablet was placed in a prominent position in the Orpheum Theatre, on State street, at the reopening of the house, Thursday, October 24, when quarantine was lifted from the houses in the Loop after the influenza-pneumonia epidemic.

Beneath the names is engraved the following excerpt from one of President Wilson's speeches:

"The right is more precious than peace; we shall fight for the things which we have always carried nearest our hearts. To such a task we dedicate our lives."

Select's New Offices Opened.

Fred C. Aiken, manager of Chicago's Select offices, and Ben Beadell, assistant manager, were kept busy receiving the numerous callers last week at the new quarters, on the nineteenth floor of the Consumers' Building. Souvenir cigars of the most approved brand were generously passed around and congratulations were heartily extended by every visitor.

The new offices are very handsomely furnished and every facility for transacting business with exhibitors promptly and expeditiously has been provided.

Manager Aiken has appointed Miss O. Brookhouse as head of the booking department. This lady has had a diversified experience in the film business for the past seven years, and is well known to the trade. She is the only woman at present holding such a position in this city. The only other woman booker of films whom I have known in Chicago was Miss Jennie Corbett, who held that position in one of the exchanges of the General Film Co. for three years, and afterwards with the Fox Film Corporation for two years.

Ben Beadell informed me that Fred. McMillan has succeeded John Balaban as Select's traveling representative in Indiana.

"And the Children Pay" Gets Permit.

Sam P. Kramer, president of the Maytrix Photoplays, Inc., of New York City, spent most of last week in Chicago, in connection with the censorship of his company's seven-reel feature, "And the Children Pay."

This production was rejected by Major Funkhouser about six months ago, and the company took the matter to the Circuit Court where the decision was in favor of the Maytrix organization. Funkhouser appealed the case to the Supreme Court of the State and won his case.

During Mr. Kramer's stay in the city the picture was viewed by Censor Frazier and his board, and after certain cuts had been made a permit was granted. Mr. Kramer was pleased with the reasonableness of Mr. Frazier and with the give and take policy which he follows in adjusting contested cases of censorship. If all difficult cases can be adjusted in this manner both the city and the producer will save both time and money.

Mann Page, co-author of "The Hand Invisible," a World picture in which Montagu Love and June Elvidge are starred, is a cousin of Thomas Nelson Page, the famous novelist and at present the American Ambassador to Italy. Mr. Page, although a recent recruit among scenario writers, has long been a contributor to the fiction department to the more prominent of contemporary magazines.

World Salesmen Die from Influenza.

During the past week two World Pictures salesmen passed away with the influenza. They were Arthur Thompson, Chicago, and Dale P. Hill, Kansas City. Both of these men were highly successful and greatly esteemed by the exhibitors in their territory. Their death is a real loss to the industry. The World, however, is glad to know that the families of these men have this comfort in their bereavement. Under the group insurance plan recently adopted by World Pictures each family will receive a substantial sum of money from the Aetna Life Insurance Company with whom the World insured all of its employes, free of charge to the employes themselves.

Duncan Visits in New York.

William Duncan, the star and director of Vitagraph serials, took advantage of a temporary layoff at the company's plant in Hollywood to come east and visit his parents, who live at Steinway.

FILM IMPORTS STILL SHOW DECREASE

Statistics Compiled by Department of Commerce Disclose Interesting Figures on Imports and Exports

IMPORTS of motion picture film, as reported by the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce of the Department of Commerce, continue to fall off. Total imports for the first eight months of the current calendar year are slightly less than half of those reported for the corresponding period of 1917.

During the eight months ended with last August, our imports of sensitized but unexposed film amounted to but 19,303,323 linear feet, valued at $320,157, as compared with 46,339,432 feet, worth $692,293, reported for the corresponding eight months of last year, and 25,876,296 feet, with a value of $379,735 in 1916.

Negatives also fell off considerably, but more in value than in footage, the total for the eight months being 261,996 feet, worth $73,747, as against 476,009 feet, with a value of $278,292, in 1917, and 642,322 feet valued at $200,597, in 1916.

Imports of positive film have been falling off at the rate of a million feet a year since 1916. During the first eight months that year, the total reported was 3,547,313 feet, valued at $162,556; the following year this fell to 2,292,933, with a value of $158,933, and this year the total again fell to 1,442,627 feet, worth $95,870.

Our exports of film and motion pictures also are falling off, but not at as great a rate as the imports. During the eight-month period, the shipments of unexposed film amounted to 38,937,445 feet, valued at $943,605, against 46,781,026 feet, worth $991,193, in 1917, and 48,214,152 feet, with a value of $1,547,291, in 1916.

Shipments of exposed pictures which, during the first eight months of 1916 had amounted to 123,122,257 linear feet, valued at $5,155,936, last year dropped to 81,361,947 feet, with a value of $4,363,120, and this year fell to 55,144,699 feet, worth $3,112,909.

The only country importing these film which showed an increase over last year is Australia, which, for several years, has been steadily increasing its consumption of American films. That country, during the eight-month period of this year, took 8,155,383 feet, with a value of $434,184, as compared with 6,521,299 feet, worth $412,813, last year, and 4,710,064 feet, valued at $354,191, in 1916.

Argentine and Brazil, new markets, are importing considerable film. During the eight months ended with August, Argentine took 3,013,748 feet, valued at $115,730, and Brazil 1,747,060 feet, worth $102,172.

Exports to Canada, although showing a falling off as compared with last year, were greater than in 1916, when they amounted to 8,297,889 feet, with a value of $619,741. Last year, Canadian imports increased to 9,887,102 feet, valued at $746,741, and this year decreased again, to 8,892,751 feet, worth $651,408.

The greatest decrease reported by the bureau is in shipments to the United Kingdom. During the first eight months of 1916 we exported to the United Kingdom 73,654,887 feet of exposed film, with a value of $3,047,781. Last year the total fell to 21,746,288 feet, worth $1,646,580, and this year again fell, reaching the low total of 11,753,870 feet, valued at $723,067.

After increasing from 7,698,938 feet, worth $193,516, in 1916, to 10,057,102 feet, valued at $254,066 last year, exports to Italy this year fell to 633,797 feet, with a value of $14,889, and at the present time no film at all is being exported to that country, indicating its elimination in the near future as a market for American film.

Imports to France are also at a low stage, the eight-month total being 1,062,776 feet, with a value of $182,552, against 9,527,767 feet, worth $227,931 in 1917, and 14,574,519 feet, valued at $403,446 in 1916. Shipments to France during the month of August were valued at but $272.

Exports to Newfoundland and Labrador feel off somewhat, the reduction being especially noticeable in the values, indicating that those provinces are calling for cheaper grades. The total for the first eight months of 1918 was 848,887 feet, valued at $28,567, against 1,149,600 feet, worth $44,439 in 1917, and 1,246,120 feet, with a value of $66,391, in 1916. Shipments to other, unspecified, countries also fell off somewhat, being 19,036,427 feet, worth $860,340, as compared with 22,472,789 feet, valued at $1,030,550 in 1917, and 12,939,840 feet, with a value of $470,867 in 1916.

C. D. Hill Serving in France.

Word has been received from a well-known exchange man who joined the colors last spring, C. D. Hill, formerly manager of the Indianapolis branch of General Film Company. He is now a private in the 155th Ambulance Company, 114th Sanitary train, American Expeditionary. Writing to W. F. Rodgers, sales manager of General, he reports, among other things, that he was lost for two days and nights in France. It was caused by dropping out of line with swollen feet. He spent one night in his shelter tent which he was carrying and another night in what he describes as "a nice barn." He was able to converse with the natives with the aid of a French dictionary. Before locating his company he picked up twenty other men who were in a similar plight, which made his wanderings endurable. At the time of writing he was billeted with his company in an old chateau five stories high, containing 100 rooms.

No Operation for Bernhardt.

Mme. Yorska received a letter from Sarah Bernhardt's granddaughter before the two sailed for France, in which the writer says that no operation for any sort of trouble is contemplated by Mme. Bernhardt, and that she is as well as usual and is only lonesome for her home and her own country.

Death of Myrtle Gonzales.

Myrtle Gonzales, one of the outdoor girls of the pictures, daughter of an old Spanish family of Los Angeles, died of heart disease at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Manuel G. Gonzales, on October 22.

In motion pictures Myrtle Gonzales was usually seen in the hardy, out-of-door type of heroine, and a number of her later and best productions dealt with stories of the forests and snows. Probably her best known picture was "The Chalice of Courage," produced by the Vitagraph Company.

The actress as a child had a fine soprano voice and sang in church choirs, concerts and at benefits. She played juvenile parts with Fanny Davenport and Florence Stone before she took up motion picture work some six years ago.

On December 1, 1917, she gave up her screen work and was married to Capt. Allen Watts, who was in Los Angeles on leave from Camp Lewis at the time. Mrs. Watts went with her husband when he returned north, but had to come back to Los Angeles on account of her health, and Capt. Watts was placed on the retired list that he might bring her home. He is again a director at Universal City, where he was employed when he met the actress. Myrtle Gonzales was twenty-seven years old, and leaves a seven-year-old son by a former marriage to James P. Jones.

Mae Marsh Arrives.

Mae Marsh, her sister Mildred and her sister-in-law, Maud Marsh, arrived in Los Angeles on October 23. They were met at the train by a number of friends, including Dorothy Gish and Constance Talmadge, with their respective mothers, and other former studio associates. Mae's trip west was not altogether joyful, on account of the sister-in-law, Maud, developing a case of "flu," which caused much uneasiness and anxiety to the party, and then news reached them on the way that Mrs. Marsh had suffered a stroke of paralysis and would be unable to meet her daughters when they arrived.

Mae Marsh plans to start work on a new Goldwyn production at the Triangle studios early in November provided the closing regulations will permit.

The film is intended to be a complete surprise to the public. Miss Keller's brother, Phillips Brooks Keller, in the U. S. Aviation service, is in Los Angeles on a visit to his sister, and will appear in the Keller film.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

FILMLAND is still full of Flu, but we are doing things to it and taking things for it. Yeast, for instance. The wagon of a rising and progressive yeast maker, decorated with the slogan, "A Yeast Cake a Day Keeps Influenza Away," parades the streets of Hollywood and does a thriving business.

And we have stopped stretching our gum. Although this reprehensible habit has been frowned on in our best circles since we were struck by the wave of correct social usage that put the taboo on full dress in clubs and made it underigeur for leading men to shoot their cuffs upon entering a drawing room, it still persisted among the younger juvenile and ingenue set. Since leading germicidists have pointed out that anything the fingers touch may be the lurking place for germs, however, gum is being kept in the mouth, where it belongs. It is an ill wind, etc.

Tom Ince has furnished all of the employes at his studio with flu masks, and while they interfere to a considerable extent with cigarette smoking, and give the voice a tomb-like tone, they are being worn with resignation, fortitude and the aid of two strings that tie behind the ears.

Mack Sennett has equipped his forces with little bags of powdered camphor, asafoetida and other sweet smelling unguents. The bags are worn around the neck just south of the wishbone, and everyone on the place, including Teddy the dog, Pepper the cat and her seven kittens, are wearing them.

Cheerfulness Under Flu-Masks Reigns.

There is not half as much dolefulness as might be expected. Taking precautions, vacations and the situation cheerfully is the order of the day, and in spite of the fact that few of Filmland's folk seem to be working, many of the studios are grinding away.

I dropped into the Fox Factory early in the week and found Frank Beal making a big set for Madeline Traverse's new play, "The Danger Zone," and was introduced to Miss Traverse, a most engaging sort of person resembling the late Juno very much as to looks.

The set was fine and big, and Mr. Beal assured me it was an exact replica of a room at The Breakers, the Cornelius Vanderbilt mansion at Newport, and I haven't the least doubt but what it was.

Thomas Holding was the leading man and Edward Cecil the heavy. Fritzi Ridgway was the ingenue, and there were at least fifty spike-tailed and boiled-shirted players acting as atmosphere, and over all was an air of high society doings of the most de luxe kind.

After this I called at the old Meena plant, where King Vidor and the newly-organized Brentwood players are making features. The Brentwooders were shooting scenes for their first picture, "The Turn in the Road."

King Vidor doped out the story, made out the scenario, wrote the continuity, selected the cast, and is directing the piece. He admitted to me in a moment of confidence that he expected the finished product to be very good because of all this, and if he has as much luck as a director as he had as a picker of players, I am inclined to agree with him.

Helen Jerome Eddy, Lloyd Hughes, Winter Hall, who was King Albert of Belgium in De Mille's "Till I Come Back to You;" George Nichols, of Griffith's "Hearts of the World"; Pauline Curley of Fairbanks' "Bound in Morocco; Little Ben Alexander; Helen Eddy's mother, who plays the part of mother to her own Helen; and Austin Lane and Mandy Johnson, two character players who are much in demand by directors who do not believe in lamp-black as an adjunct to the make-up box when Afro-Americans are needed, are in the cast.

Vaunts An Unusually Friendly P. A.

I stuck around at the Brentwood place for quite a spell, as they say back in Missouri, because everybody was so friendly, including S. P. Trood, the press agent.

Of course, press agents are expected to be friendly, but this chap was especially so. He showed me "Jerry's pups," seven of them—all orphans. Jerry, the mother, had been poisoned just the day before. Surely there is a separate and extra hot hell for dog poisoners.

After Brentwood I dropped out to Gower and Sunset, where the Francis Ford Company was making a big scene for episode twelve of "The Silent Mystery" serial. The stage was all set for a cafe in Egypt, and "Frank" Ford himself and Rosemary Theby at one table, were doing away with real food, including an appetizing looking salad and coffee, and getting wised up to the machinations of a pair of villains, each wearing a look of cunning and a red fez on his head, who occupied another table near by.

Pete Gerald was helping Ford direct, and playing a part in the scene at the same time; and Valerio Olivio, Mary Garton, Jerry Ash and thirty-five or forty pieces of human atmosphere were at the tables, all helping to make the scene real. An Egyptian orchestra that looked as though it might have come in on the last boat from Cairo, was also part of that realistic scene.

There is no use talking, you've got to hand it to Francis Ford for knowing how to pull that oriental stuff.

Where the L-Ko Laughs Come From.

As soon as I could drag my feet away from the music I went across the street to the L-Ko plant, and found two companies at work.

Noel Smith was doping out a rib-tickler called "He Fiddled Into Fame" with Marvin "Fatty" Loback, who is not losing weight because of worrying over the Flu; Russ Powell, in a silk hat; Harry Griffith, Harry Mann, Phil Dunham, with a Chink mustache; Walter Stevens and Dick Smith as assistants.

Over on the other end of the lot Joe Le Brandt was staging a big scene inside of a barn, where a gang of sure-thing prize fight promoters had put up a fake fight on a community of Rubes. It was good stuff. Billy Armstrong and Eddie Boland were the pugs, and others in the comedy were Charles De Lea, Dan Crimmons, old-time circus clown; Jack Henderson, Eddie De Comas, who does a strong man act in vaudeville when he's not in the films; Owen Evans, Rube Miller, and Professor Chas. A. Millsfield (the Prof. stuff is genuine. He carries the papers to prove it). Otherwise known as Monsieur Pom-Pom, traveler, scientist, doctor of philosophy, teacher of modern and ancient language in his moments away from the studio, and owner of the only set of educated and temperamental whiskers in the movies.

The professor, like Josh Billings' mule, is "a most amusin' cuss," and I don't think Joe Le Brandt would consider putting on any kind of comedy without him in the cast.

nine interest in the comedy, and Bartine had a grievance.

They were getting ready to shoot stills when Bartine spoke her mind, and as she was on top of a step ladder at the time she could be heard by everyone in the set.

"I never get my picture taken around this place," she remarked, "except when I am wearing a boy's suit, or pajamas, or something like that. I am going to my dressing room and change to a straight costume, and everybody's got to wait till I come back."

Feeling real sorry for Bartine and being a Samaritan, I led "June" Estep, the photographer, off to one side.

"June," I said, "you are going to make a picture of Miss Burkett in a straight costume, but as there is always a chance of the plate getting spoiled, you'd better shoot her just as she is up on top of the step-ladder to make sure."

June did as he was told, and the other plate was not good—just as I feared—and Bartine was forced to go to press in another pajama pose.

Dropping into Lasky's, I found everybody busy getting ready to entertain Prince Axel of Denmark, who was to visit the plant next day. They had flags and all sorts of Danish decorations everywhere, and Kenneth McGaffey was scouring the neighborhood for a bouquet of Finnan Haddies, some one having told him that such was the name of the national flower of Denmark.

Joseph R. Darling Expected Home.

Joseph R. Darling, representative of the Fox Film Corporation in the Far East, is expected home next month, according to word received from him this week. Mr. Darling, who has made an extended stay in the Orient, recently left Shanghai, on his way to Batavia in the interests of the Fox organization.

SWEET FILM DECLARED A "KNOCKOUT"

Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan Pronounce "The Unpardonable Sin" Biggest Production of the Year

HARRY GARSON and Marshall Neilan make no bones in declaring "The Unpardonable Sin," Major Rupert Hughes' startling story of the Germans in Belgium, in which Blanche Sweet is starred, and which vehicle serves to bring this popular actress back to the screen after more than a year's absence, as one of the biggest and most important productions of the year.

Mr. Garson wires: "'The Unpardonable Sin' is the most wonderful picture I have ever seen. It is a great big special with a tremendous kick, a production that only comes once in a lifetime. Miss Sweet looks better than ever, and her double portrayal of the two sisters, Dimny Parcot and Alice Parcot, will be an absolute knockout. There is no question but that the picture will have a long and successful run in New York."

And this from Marshall Neilan, who directed the picture in person: "'The Unpardonable Sin' is by far the biggest and best production I have ever done. There is punch and situations one after the other from beginning to end, such as you have never seen in any other picture. 'The Unpardonable Sin' will, I am sure, create a furore."

Mr. Neilan, well known as one of the top-notch directors in the business, has certainly let down the bars of his usual conservatism, and it is predicted that he has pulled a surprise of some sort.

Negotiations are now under way with several first class legitimate houses to house "The Unpardonable Sin" for a long run, beginning about December 1. Just what theatre will be selected is not known, but will be decided upon in a few days.

The picture is in eight reels. A tremendous advertising campaign, national in its scope, is promised for this production.

Blanche Sweet plays two parts, Dimny Parcot and sister. The sister writes from Belgium that she has become the victim of German "kultur," and is so heartbroken that she begs her sister not to look for her. Dimny's trip from Los Angeles to Belgium is fraught with many adventures and great peril.

Wallace Beery portrays the part of Col. Klem, the German officer who has so ruthlessly mistreated the sister, and Dimny manages to meet him and foil him later. The entire eight reels are declared to be full of power and action, with many thrills. It has the "happy ending."

Mr. Garson will show the production to the Government officials at Washington on his way from Los Angeles.

tures, died of Spanish influenza October 28. She was last seen in a World Pictures production which her husband directed. Since 1911, when she began her screen career with Edwin S. Porter, under direction of Mr. Vale, the name of Louise Vale has been familiar to picture patrons.

Following her appearances in Rex features she went with Pilot and Reliance, following those engagements with a long stay in the Biograph organization, starting in 1913. In all of her screen appearances with the companies mentioned, and later with Universal, she was directed by her husband.

Louise Vale was well and favorably known upon the dramatic stage before she turned to pictures. Appearances with stock companies in New York, New Orleans, Rochester, Syracuse and other cities preceded her starring tours in "Under Two Flags," "The Girl of the Emerald Isle" and "When the Bell Tolls," in which she made the rounds of the popular priced theatres.

NEW EXCHANGE SYSTEM TO OPEN

Film Clearing House, Inc., Perfects Plans to Market Pictures for All Producers—Has Strong Financial Backing

TAKING advantage of the opportunity offered by the temporary closing of theatres and the consequent readjustment of the different branches of the motion picture business, a new and distinct plan of distribution has been worked out by a number of New York business men and will be put into operation immediately on a large scale and a permanent basis. The new exchanges will be known as film clearing houses, and will be owned and operated by a company known as Film Clearing House, Inc., with a personnel and financial standing designed to insure the complete confidence of all producers and exhibitors.

Plans of Operation Complete.

Both the policy of the organization and its plan of operation were decided upon before its formation, so that it enters the field with a definite purpose and with clearly stated principles which will be rigidly adhered to from the very beginning. In each large city now recognized as a film centre for surrounding territory a model exchange will be opened at once. Each department of these exchanges will be carefully and expertly arranged to handle every production it receives as separate and distinct from every other production, with the definite purpose of making a clear and comprehensive report each week on each film. These weekly reports, which will be accompanied by a check covering the amount of money earned by the picture, are a prominent feature of the new organization, as upon them depends one of its most drastic rules; a statement of each production's business each week with a money settlement.

The system for the physical handling of each production as a separate show (for every picture will be as much a thing apart from every other picture, as if it were a theatrical attraction on tour under a road manager), will be worked out to the smallest detail from the time the first print enters the first office opened by the new company. This principle will be rigidly adhered to for all time, because Film Clearing House, Inc., is essentially for the distribution of the pictures of producing companies independent of each other and is for the use of any studio or group of studios that desires to create its own market.

Believes System a Real Need.

It is the firm belief of the experienced men of big business behind the new corporation that a system of exchanges, financially responsible and established for the sole purpose of handling the pictures of any reputable producer, is a real need of the industry. This conviction led to their decision to put such an organization into immediate operation. They realized that if the producer of a worthy picture saw an opportunity of offering it to exhibitors through businesslike and efficient exchanges where it would have the same chance of making money in keeping with its merits as all other productions, that independent producers would be encouraged to continue to produce and the making of good pictures would receive a great impetus.

In other words, the old truism brought about by conditions in the theatrical business twenty years ago, "Any body can put on a show, but where are you going to show it?" which explained the reason for the failure of countless independent producers who were not included among the favored few associated with the theatrical syndicates, and now threatens to discourage independent picture producers, prompted them to perfect an organization that would allow for the placing in the theatres of all independent productions that appear on the market, as soon as they are completed. With Film Clearing House, Inc., an important factor in the industry, the success of any producer, whether his output be six pictures a year or fifty-two, should depend upon their merit rather than the producer's connection with one of the large distributing corporations. This is the belief of the men establishing the new exchanges, and the rules governing the different offices have been worked out with this end in view.

Who the Organizers Are.

Among the men prominent in the new organization is Ashbel P. Fitch, well known New York lawyer and director of many large corporations. Mr. Fitch is president of Film Clearing House, Inc., and has been actively engaged for several weeks in perfecting the carefully laid plans which are now being executed.

Col. Jacob Ruppert, whose name has become as prominent in sporting circles through the ownership of the Yankees of baseball fame as it is in big business through his great brewing company, is one of the board of directors; while another familiar name on the board is that of William M. Seabury, one of the organizers and general counsel of the old Motion Picture Board of Trade, and, until recently, general counsel of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. Walter N. Seligsberg, who has represented many leading film executives during his active association with the industry for several years, is one of the company's attorneys.

Although these men are probably as well known in film circles as they are in the realms of other "big business," they decided to associate with the company the most active and efficient film men that they could find in the independent field. As a result, Frank G. Hall, is supervising director of the new organization and is now starting the opening of the exchanges, which will be made ready for business at the earliest possible moment.

Producers to Have Own Sales Force.

The directors of the Film Clearing House, Inc., lay stress upon the following innovations in connection with the working out of their plans: The exchanges will take care of the pictures of any producing company or any group of producing companies for distribution in all parts of the country. The exchanges will only supply the services connected with the physical distribution of these pictures. No sales force will be maintained by the exchanges, the producers or groups of producers putting their bookings in charge of their own salesmen. Film Clearing House, Inc., will have no producing companies of its own, neither will it have any interest in nor any affiliation with producing companies. It will maintain efficient business organizations in every territory for the handling of film, advertising matter, etc., and for the recording of bookings and making of collections for rentals, and it will supply offices and equipment for the sales organizations representing the different companies whose film it handles. But the pictures will at all times be under the actual control of their owners, and a strict accounting of all bookings and all moneys will be made to the owners every week. "HOPP" HADLEY.

Pathe Shows Atkins at Play.

A dramatically impressive idea of some of the effects of an air raid is given in No. 11 of the "Far Flung Battle Line," released by Pathe on November 10. It is called "British Troops in Italy," and shows Tommy Atkins at light-hearted, heavy-handed play and in the grimmer work, which tries the souls of men—in the field, shot with gay flowers and bursting blooms of fire; and after a desperate fight in the air, which brought down one of the enemy's machines, we see the destruction that this relatively small incident caused. The fighting machine dropped like a flaming meteor and striking a housetop set the building aflame. And thus the spectator wonders on seeing some of these daredevil airmen on the screen how they can put aside the grim shadow, which is ever at their elbows, and laugh and joke as though all the world and the war especially were a huge carnival.

Shutdown Extended One Week.

At a meeting of the producing and distributing companies of the motion picture industry held Thursday, October 31, at the offices of the National Association, 806 Times Building, New York, it was unanimously decided that the period during which the motion picture industry should be closed down owing to the epidemic of Spanish influenza be extended one week from the time originally decided upon.

At the meeting held on October 15 it was unanimously decided that all production and distribution of new pictures should be discontinued for one month, or up to November 9. The meeting held to-day decided to continue this period for one week more, or up to and including November 16. The motion picture business will resume operations on Sunday, November 17.

Minus 100 Per Cent.

Gordon F. Fullerton, better known as "One Hundred Per Cent." Fullerton, has severed his long connection with the Jensen and Von Herberg houses to engage in foreign trade. He modestly explains that Seattle is second only to New York as a foreign trade centre, and he wants to get in now to be ready to grapple with things when commerce opens up. He sees the chance coming to do big things, and has taken his place in the line already forming on the right. Mr. Fullerton was one of the best hustlers in the motion picture field. The same energy put into commercial work should yield even better results. We are sorry to lose him, but we wish him all sorts of good luck.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

NOVEMBER 11 to 18 is the period selected for the United War Work Compaign. Something over $170,000,000 is required to extend and continue the great service the several War Work organizations are prosecuting along the several battle-fronts and at other points where American troops are quartered. We may safely assume that all our readers are familiar with this work in all its phases and do not have to be told what the impending campaign is for or how necessary is the money asked for. The only question before us is: how much can we raise for this great patriotic purpose? This is the time when the true measure of our patriotism is established. When we bought Liberty Bonds we simply invested our money in the surest thing on earth—American Victory. Now we are asked to give all that we can to comfort and sustain the brave boys who have made our bonds good. What is their sacrifice worth to you?

To carry on this campaign among the members of the motion picture and theatrical interests of New York William Fox has been appointed leader. What he did at the last Red Cross drive has not been forgotten, but what we will have to do this time is considerably larger in the way of a big job. That his efforts may be successful this time as it was before every bit of power and push that we can put back of him must be concentrated on the work to be done. Will you be in the ranks of the pushers?

In immediate charge of the motion picture end of the drive is Fred H. Elliott, secretary of the N. A. M. P. I., who has been appointed to handle that part of the campaign. Mr. Elliott made a good record during the Red Cross drive and should have the support of the trade. He has formulated a comprehensive plan of intensive action and has named an efficient corps of assistants covering the various motion picture activities in New York and vicinity. Details of organization for the drive in other cities have not reached us, but there will be no exception in the matter of efficiency and earnestness in this campaign. Don't forget that it BEGINS on Monday, November 11.

THERE is great reason for alarm in the proposal of the Senate Finance Committee to levy a tax of ten per cent. of the gross rentals of motion pictures. There are few commercial enterprises in existence that are able to carry a levy of such magnitude. Indeed, it is little short of confiscatory if, as the proposers claim, it is to be paid solely by the exchanges and not to be passed on the public. Of course we know, regardless of what the august Senators may claim, that it will have to be passed along and will be passed along to be paid ultimately in increased admission prices as all such imposts are paid. With a twenty per cent. admission tax upon all forms of amusements the Congressional tax layers should be satisfied.

THE wide field of usefulness covered by the MOVING PICTURE WORLD is indicated in a letter we have lately received from Mrs. Clara Wood Derr, past president and director of the Cleveland (O.) Cinema Club. Mrs. Wood Derr writes:

We find your magazine most helpful in our work in the Cleveland Cinema Club. It is very helpful to students of the art and industry of motion pictures. We know of no other magazine covering the ethical side of films as you do. We cannot do without it.

Four of Cleveland's Public Schools are open evenings as Community Centers, fully equipped with motion picture machines. As chairman of the Cinema Club's School Committee it is our duty to direct the choice of film-programs for motion picture performances given at these Centers.

This is but one instance of the confidence that is placed in the World by its subscribers. The day has passed when a "trade paper" may be looked upon solely as a reflection of the physical activities of the industry it serves. The educational side of moving pictures is becoming more widely recognized as the possibilities of this class of entertainment is realized by the men and women of broadening vision who are entrusted with the welfare of the masses.

Discussing the Situation

AS a reply to an editorial in the MOVING PICTURE WORLD of October 12, entitled "Conservation—But Not Stagnation," we have a letter from George Kleine which deserves printing, not so much because it adds testimony of value to the subject of the present status of the motion picture business, but because it gives our readers a sample of the careless language representatives of the trade sometimes use when talking about business conditions and because it goes to prove a statement made by us at different times that our industry is frequently unfortunate in its representatives. But here's what Mr. Kleine says:

Chicago, Ill, October 26, 1918.

Editor Moving Picture World:

Dear Sir—A mild attack of the prevalent illness and pressure of other matters have prevented my answering previously the editorial entitled "Conservation—But Not Stagnation," your issue, dated ctober 12, 1918, which is manifestly prompted by my letter to the Priorities Committee at Washington, and I assume that the reference to "A Chicago Distributor" is aimed at myself. Time is short and your space is valuable: I make this brief as possible. You say:

"We hear charges of waste and lack of economy—"Looking about the field carefully has brought us to the conclusion that these criticisms are groundless."—"Fortunately the level-headed business men who are engaged in this industry—are conducting their affairs with a full knowledge of what they are doing, and doing it in a safe and sane manner, as the success of their work proves."

In answer, I will quote from the statement of Walter W. Irwin, general manager of the Vitagraph Company. This quotation is taken verbatim from the official report of hearings before the Committee on Finance, United States Senate, page No. 594 and following; the italics are mine:

"Senator Jones.—How much has your inventory increased during last year?

"Mr. Irwin.—Our inventory has not increased, and our inventory is really fictitious. . . . It was necessary for us, in order to show any profits at all upon which to borrow money, in some cases to pay our tax. to inventory our negatives upon their former value, the value when we were able to sell those negatives abroad. . . . Our balance sheet shows our negatives put in at their former value. . . .

"Senator Jones.—Do you mean to say that you have been making those great expenditures in piling up goods on the shelves, as you call it, when you feel that you are never going to get your money out of them?

"Mr. Irwin.—Yes, sir.

"Senator Jones.—As a business man, do you mean to tell me that you are putting your money into those things when you honestly believe the chances are you will never get your money out?

"Mr. Irwin.—Yes, sir. . . . The competition in this business is so keen that the company that does not continue its expenditures, and continue a product that is in advance of the public demand, soon falls to the wayside."

I further quote from your article as follows:

"It may be safely said of every going concern in the motion picture business that its affairs are as conservatively administered as the dictates of good business could demand."

In answer, I quote the following from Mr. Patrick A. Powers, of the Universal Film Company, taken from his statement before the Committee on Ways and Means at Washington in June of this year: from the official record, Revenue Bill, No. 10, Hearings Before the Committee on Ways and Means, House of Representatives, page No. 676:

"I venture to say that the production end of the business has lost money in the last year. I don't mean that every one in the business has lost, but the production of pictures has lost money; there has been more money spent on the production of pictures than has been taken back from the public. That is due to overproduction, and money going in which did not come back through the theatres from the public."

Again from your editorial:

"The men who are guiding the affairs of the established and going concerns in this business of ours have conserved their energies and resources, protecting them from loss and injury."

In answer to this I again quote Mr. Irwin, page No. 599 of the Hearings Before the Senate Committee referred to above:

"Our product, in order to hold those patrons, must be in advance of the public demand as to merit, as to artistry, as to acting, as to production, as to setting, as to stories, and, with the cost of everything increasing, the competition among ourselves is so great that no company can let up. One manufacturer was asked in a meeting with the exhibitors, 'If you are losing money, why do you continue in business?' This president of one of the largest manufacturing companies answered: 'We will continue in business just as long as we have 5 cents to take the subway and go down to Wall street.'"

Quoting your editorial:

"Conservation and Efficiency we have."

And again from the record of the Senate Committee:

"Senator Jones (to Mr. Irwin).—To have it appear in this record that you are contending that you are deliberately investing money in a thing which you deliberately believe you will never get it out of is beyond the comprehension of at least one member of the committee.

"Mr. Irwin.—Senator, we must do so or quit. May I point this out to you? If you will look at our balance sheet you will see that in many instances we have borrowed that money."

Everyone who is at all familiar with conditions, knows that Messrs. Irwin and Powers have accurately analyzed this extraordinary business of production and distribution of moving picture films which invests money without any hope of recovery.

Recognizing this condition which was threatening the industry some time ago, I stopped continuous production. A business is presumably conducted for profit, and, while every business is subject to occassional losses, how a sane business man can continue pouring torrents of money, whether his own or funds loaned by others, into a bottomless pit, is beyond understanding.

Either the editorial ears are stuffed with cotton and the editorial eyes wear blinders, or the editorial pronouncements are not sincere.

Yours for the truth, wherever it hits,

GEORGE KLEINE.

On the other hand we recall reams of announcements by the same gentlemen proclaiming the wonderful, not to say gigantic, and stupendous success achieved by their respective companies, so that it may safely be concluded that the truth is somewhere in between what they would have the Congressional committee believe to be hopeless and what they would tell the world about their successes. At any rate, they are still doing business, and we have not heard that the sheriff contemplated putting padlocks on their doors.

Though the quotations from the record of the hearings before the Senate Finance Committee serve Mr. Kleine's purpose admirably, we fear that he would not take it as a tribute to his intelligence and perspicacity if it were thought that he believed those statements unqualifiedly.

Hodkinson Offers Remedy.

Another communication bearing upon the situation comes from Mr. W. W. Hodkinson, who has been heard from through these columns on other occassions. Mr. Hodkinson desires to express the following thoughts:

The motion picture industry, particularly the producing and distributing ends, are not suffering so much from the influenza epidemic as they are from the un-economic basis on which they are operating.

The epidemic is merely serving to bring about readjustments which the operation of economic laws would automatically bring about at a later date and probably in a less drastic and spectacular manner than any resulting from a continuation of the shut-down.

It is economically impossible for a dozen producer concerns to give their adequate attention to production, and as a side line to efficiently run a distributing organization that is supplied solely by their own account or such other product as is daring enough to place itself in the hands of a rival producer-distributor.

This un-economic condition results from two causes. First, pride of the producers who would prefer to fail trying to be "the whole industry" rather than succeed as a part of some really constructive organization; and, second, even when necessity, such as the present conditions, proves the inconsistency of their methods, they do not trust each other enough to enable them to cooperate in any adequate manner.

It is useless to offer constructive advice and criticism to this class. They want none of it. All they want is quick profits, in many cases at the expense of the other fellow, instead of being willing to cooperate and make a dollar in a constructive manner, to be divided later.

As a student of conditions in this business over a period of ten or eleven years, it is my opinion that the business only works together under pressure, and unless the present pressure is sufficient to force the distribution of the product of a half dozen or so producers into some responsible hands where there is an absolute control as to methods under which the product is presented to exhibitors, rather than by the peculiar forcing tactics of the producers themselves, it is only a question of time until natural laws and the competition of larger and more powerful interests in the business will cause the disintegration and failure of some dozen and more concerns, or will cause a co-ordination of their interests according to some sane plan, so that they may exist.

Yours very truly,
W. W. HODKINSON CORPORATION.
William W. Hodkinson,
President.

We have always entertained a high regard for Mr. Hodkinson and know that he has a wide experience in the picture business, yet we fear that he will have to reform human nature to a considerable extent before he will be able to accomplish his desire. Businesses older than ours and infinitely better suited to the so-called best methods of merchandizing, have not yet brought themselves to that state of mutual confidence which Mr. Hodkinson's plan comprehends. Also, there are striking examples of the futility of attempting such mutualization in the motion picture business.

SENTIMENTAL STORIES

By Robert C. McElravy.

"MARK TWAIN hated sentiment." How often the above remark has been reiterated, frequently with a degree of solemnity which indicates that certain people must believe it to be true. Possibly at some time or other Mark Twain may have said he hated sentiment; indeed it is altogether probable that he did, for he often exercised the privilege accorded women and humorists of saying the opposite of what they mean. At any rate, every line he ever wrote, properly understood, reveals him as one who loved mankind, appreciated its tribulations and sought to alleviate them. He often hid his softness behind the most outrageous mirth. He delighted to shock his readers and often succeeded. "Be good and you'll be lonesome," is an example. He also painted the badness of a bad boy in so human a way that people were almost afraid to let their own boys read it. For instance, he had Huck Finn say, as he slipped under the flap of a circus tent: "I have no objection to paying money to get into a circus, but I don't see any use wasting it to get in."

There can be no doubting that Mark Twain was both a humorist and a sentimentalist of the right sort. He was not so obvious about it as some writers, for his public understood him and it was not necessary to be so. When he wanted the public to forget that he was or ever had been a humorist the public laughed, for he was continually handing it phrases that could only be accepted as humor and nothing else. But his account of the death of Susie, his life of Joan of Arc, his story of "The Prince and the Pauper," and almost every one of his personal letters, are full of personal feeling which almost runs riot at times.

The sentiment of Dickens is of course much more obvious. He so loved to picture the human side of life that he often yielded to the most pronounced sentimentality. He did not hesitate to be melodramatic when he chose and his deathbed scenes were not infrequent. Thackeray had a harder surface in his writings, but it is not difficult to discover frequent traces of real sentiment; "Henry Esmond" is full of them. All of the great writers had it in some measure. Mr. Howells, although he is generally accepted as a realist, is full of the milk of human kindness. His sentiment is usually found in his choice of subject matter; he gives up realism, it is true, but he reveals only sides of life that it is agreeable and helpful to examine closely. Such tragedies as he pictures are the normal, acceptable tragedies of daily life, never tending to the merely sordid and depressing.

The apologists for commercialized fiction, or stories with a hard, smooth finish, in which there is no trace of genuine feeling, have little to support them. This is the ephemeral sort of thing that serves its little hour, all too quickly ,and then passes on, leaving no visible trace upon the public mind or heart.

Writers for the screen should never make the mistake of excluding sentiment from their creations. The success of moving pictures is largely due to the fact that they have revealed depth of feeling. They have frequently gone too far, but the impulse has been right from the beginning. They have held up human life in all its variations, they have pictured its joys and sorrows, its throbbing hopes and frustrating despairs.

A revelation of sentiment in fiction and upon the screen is a direct answer to a public need. The average citizen of the world becomes schooled to the hard facts of life. He cannot wear his heart upon his sleeve, as the saying goes; he cannot tell other people his troubles, for he realizes they have enough of their own. Yet Mr. Average Citizen has plenty of imagination and sentiment in his heart and he is constantly wishing to get the other fellow's view of life. He wants to know what others would do under conditions similar to his own. He wants to know how others would bear up under his tribulations and how a man should act under given circumstances.

How is Mr. Average Citizen to find out all these things? Well, he sometimes picks up a novel, or attends a play or perhaps drops in at a moving picture theatre. It is a grave mistake to think he is looking entirely for recreation. He is not seeking to escape from the realities of life so much as to get into closer contact with them. He expects a whole lot—he wants humor and pathos and all of the immediate states of feeling brought before him. In other words, he craves the sentimental side of life, revealed in impersonal but none the less helpful terms.

In which way does he get the most satisfaction, from the book or the play or the moving picture?

INFLUENZA EPIDEMIC WANING

COMPREHENSIVE reports from Moving Picture World correspondents indicate a rapid subsidance of the epidemic feature of the plague of Spanish influenza. As a result the authorities are permitting theatres to open quite generally. Where the embargo has been lifted a great revival of business is reported. The public has shown an eagerness for entertainment that exceeds expectations, which is taken as a sign that a good season is before us. In some localities health officers are still keeping the doors closed until all danger of further epidemic shall have passed, but these conditions are not expected to last much longer. It has been a hard siege for picture men, but all have stood up well under the strain.

CANADIAN MANAGERS FAVOR STUNTS

Many Exhibitors Across the Line Fighting Shy of Lobby Displays—Believe Experience in Mechanical Stagecraft Necessary to Devise Balanced Settings

By W. M. Gladish

CANADIAN moving picture theatre managers have become wise to the value of "stunts" during recent months, generally speaking, and the various feats which have been staged have been interesting, varied and full of meaning.

As a rule many of the exhibitors have been fighting shy of lobby displays because the belief is held that once a theatre puts on a special front it becomes necessary to keep up the outside show or people will feel that an attraction is not up to standard unless there is a lobby display to advertise it. A number of exhibitors also feel that an experience in mechanical stagecraft is necessary in order to devise properly-balanced settings or to secure a striking effect with a cheap outlay.

For these and other reasons, a number of exhibitors have been resorting to "stunts" in the literal sense of the term. There are some managers, however, who use special lobby displays regularly and who also pull off a special stunt in addition quite often. For the recent showing of "Tarzan of the Apes" at the Rialto Theatre, Toronto, Manager W. J. Stewart arranged with a nearby book store, conducted by a Mr. Britnell, to make a display of cutouts of Tarzan along with a stuffed tiger. Mr. Britnell put on a sale of Tarzan books, with the result that thousands of copies were sold, it is declared. Even more than a thousand copies of "The Jewels of Opar," the latest Tarzan story, were sold, it is stated. The Rialto Theatre, a few doors away, also had a big lobby display for "Tarzan of the Apes," which consisted of a jungle scene. The feature ran all week and enjoyed big business.

Manager Sexton, of the Family Theatre, a Toronto suburban theatre, started something when he arranged for the "grand opening" of a series of special children's matinees to be held every Saturday afternoon throughout the fall and winter. He announced, through the medium of program cards, that special pictures had been booked for these performances. One of these is the serial, "The Railroad Raiders," and another is the series of Judge Brown stories, which are being shown only at the special Saturday matinees.

Laurie Puts On Guessing Competition.

Manager Archie Laurie, of the Regent Theatre, Guelph, Ontario, recently conducted a stunt in connection with the showing of "The Flame of the Yukon." Before Laurie left the Midway Theatre, Montreal, he became famed for special lobby displays, and it was at the same Midway Theatre that the present manager of the Broadway Theatre, New York, earned his spurs. One of Laurie's stunts in Montreal was to fit up an automobile to resemble a large bullet to advertise the Universal serial, "The Brass Bullet."

One of the most spectacular stunts ever pulled off in Toronto was conducted by Roland Roberts for the showing of "To Hell With the Kaiser" at the Regent Theatre, the downtown house. Roberts became the editor and publisher of a four-page newspaper of standard size, which was all done up like a special war extra. The delivery trucks of The Daily News were used to distribute the "Regent Graphic," as it was called, throughout the city, a crew of men going with each truck to hand out the newspapers free of charge. On every residential street the people made a rush for the trucks, believing that something extraordinary had happened in Europe. The flaming headlines told, in various ways, of the showing of the feature at the theatre.

A little stunt, but one that counts, has lately been adopted by a number of exhibitors. This consists of the showing of a sign on the front of the theatre to announce that prospective patrons would be just in time to see the whole of the last performance of the day.

Get Publicity Out of a Scrap.

When the manager of the Strand Theatre, Montreal, presented "My Four Years in Germany," a scrap was staged for the purpose of getting some free publicity out of the newspapers, it is declared, and the trick worked. The fight was between the exchange and the theatre over admission prices, the exchange claiming that the theatre had no right to present the picture at ordinary prices, and, of course, the manager came right out with the plain statement that he was going to stand by his patrons and give them a real show for regular money. There was a threat that the matter would be taken to the courts.

Somewhat of a new departure in moving picture circles has been an arrangement for the taking of a 1,000-foot picture showing the processes in gold, silver and jewel manufacturing. The picture was taken for Henry Birks & Sons, Limited, of Montreal, and this company addressed a circular letter to its clients and others all over Canada regarding the picture. The offer was made that the letter could be used for admission to any theatre where the picture was being shown, and the amount to cover the one or more admissions would be paid by the company upon the receipt of letter or letters from an exhibitor.

A neat stunt was pulled off by the Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, when an advertisement in local papers consisted of a statement of commendation for the Province Theatre, a rival house, which had just been reopened after being remodeled.

Children Shout for Cloakey.

Manager Cloakey of the Allen Theatre, Calgary, has made a practice of giving out free tickets to children at special children's performances for rides in a sightseeing street car which he charters to carry advertising banners for a coming attraction. The guests of the theatre manage, of course, to make enough noise to attract all kinds of attention.

Not long ago the Rose Theatre, Regina, Sask., distributed "Rose Theatre Book Covers" to children at a special children's performance. This was just before the reopening of school and the book covers are now being used freely to protect school books. The covers advertise the theatre, of course.

John Arthur, orchestra director of the Regent Theatre, Toronto, pulled off an inside stunt in connection with the playing of "The Rainbow" as an overture. The house was darkened, and gradually across the front of the drop appeared a colored rainbow—just as the orchestra took up the strains of the piece. Mr. Arthur also has arranged for the playing of some martial air as a prelude to the news weeklies, the introductory piece leading right into the showing of the war views. The orchestra continues right on with the theme through most of the pictures of current events.

Rotsky Makes Good Use of Want Ad.

Manager George Rotsky of the New Grand Theatre, Montreal, ran an advertisement in the classified department of the Montreal Standard under the heading of "Wanted—A Mother" to advertise a picture of the same name, starring Madge Evans. This tiny "ad" had a far-reaching effect because several weeks later he received a letter from three Belgian soldiers on the firing line in which they asked him to secure a godmother for them.

Manager James Crang, of the Oakwood Theatre, Toronto, participated in a photoplay making and popularity indicator which sold him a lot of tickets, created considerable new business and advertised his theatre throughout the city. The popularity issue preceded the making of the picture, which was "all action and no acting," and the popularity of the patron depended upon the number of tickets he or she sold for the theatre. The picture was unnamed when shown, and then followed another struggle for the choosing of the title, the prize for which was a "screen test," which was shown later at the theatre with the name of the winner.

Mr. Piton, manager of the Globe Theatre, Toronto, made use of an extra projection machine in his office to show parts of a current attraction on a small transparent screen in the front window, so that people on the street could get an idea of what was going on inside. For this presentation the film was reversed so that it could be read properly on the opposite side.

Puts On Six Chaplins in a Week.

Manager Herb Jennings of the Strand Theatre, Ottawa, was probably the first Canadian exhibitor to stage a special week's showing of pictures in which one star was featured. This was done when he was in charge of the Mary Pickford Theatre, Toronto, when he presented six different Chaplins during the one week. This was followed up later when the Carlton Theatre held a "Mary Pickford Week," during which six different Pickford pictures were presented.

The anniversary of the opening of a theatre always presents an opportunity for a special event. Such is being arranged by Manager Mills, of the Loew Theatre, in Montreal, for the week of November 18, when a special bill will be presented.

For the first run of "The Still Alarm" at the Rialto Theatre, Toronto, Manager Stewart borrowed a quantity of equipment from the Toronto Fire Department for lobby display purposes, distributed 20,000 large handbills that reminded one of old circus days and used many billboard stands throughout the city. Despite the epidemic, the theatre enjoyed big business.

Manager W. A. Bailie, of the Cum-Bac Theatre, Toronto, made an unusual contract with the Toronto Railway Company when he secured an arrangement whereby all cars on the Dovercourt route, which pass the theatre, carry signs on the fender advertising current attractions at the house.

The variety of these stunts is wide. Some of them may sound a little old and others are brand new. Maybe they will give other exhibitors an idea or two for special advertising.

THE BUSINESS SHOW AND THE EXHIBITOR

Predigested Food for the Live Mailing List and Facilities for Printing One's Own House Organ

AT the business show held at the Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory in New York during the week of October 21 were exhibited several devices which would have interested the exhibitor proprietor of a mailing list if the manufacturers of said devices had thought to take the exhibitors into their confidence and invited their presence to inspect the goods and become acquainted with the convenience of possessing them.

Anyone who keeps in captivity a live mailing list knows that it must be constantly fed with new names. And what the average card index of names looks like after a few mailings from it is something to call for tears from the one who carefully compiled it.

For those who would prefer to have addressing stencils prepared for them the Adressograph Company, of 901 West Van Buren street, Chicago, showed two models of addressing machines known as H-2 and H-3. Both of these machines will address cards or envelopes at the speed of from one thousand to two thousand an hour, and may also be used to insert names and addresses in form letters. The difference between the two models lies in the ability of H-3 automatically to feed the stencil plates instead of relying upon the operator to shift them by a hand-operated mechanism as in H-2.

The stencils, when filed the same as index cards, constitute a record list which may be consulted at any time.

To those who wish to make their own stencils the outfit shown by the Rapid Addressing Machine Company, of 32 West Twenty-third street, New York, will appeal. This model, known as the "Silent Four," and which may be placed upon any desk or table, operates at a speed of from twelve to eighteen hundred addresses an hour, and occupies a space of 10 by 24 inches. The stencils for use with this machine may be made by any stenographer with the ordinary office typewriter.

Our conferee, Epes W. Sargent, has shown from time to time what the garden variety of printer will do to an exhibitor's cherished copy. Still, those awful examples actually came through in time to be used, or Sargent wouldn't have been able to have reproduced them. But think of the poor exhibitor who wants to send out an alluring invitation for his patrons to come and inspect Charlie Chaplin's feet, Mary Pickford's smile or pretty nearly the entire scenery of Annette Kellermann, and finds that the boss has gone fishing or the compositor has enlisted. And the show coming off tomorrow night!

If anyone who had had one such experience had investigated the duplicating devices which blossomed at the business show he would have appreciated their worry-free possibilities. The Underwood Typewriter Company, of New York, showed a duplicator with which a large batch of form letters could be produced from a typewritten stencil in very short order.

If one wishes to combine the ability to issue process letter announcements with that to turn out real printed matter illustrated with cuts, and to do the entire job on his own premises—something which will appeal to the larger houses—the Multigraph, exhibited by the Multigraph Sales Company, of Cleveland, fills the bill. With the Multigraph Senior one may issue an illustrated house organ in colors without going near the print shop.

CHANGES IN FOX OFFICES.

Several changes are being made in the offices of the Fox Film Corporation in the Leavitt Building, 130 West Fourty-sixth street. Partitions are being torn out, departments are being shifted, and office space is being rearranged with a view to taking care of the growth of several departments.

The offices of the New York exchange have been extended to include most of the reception space on the seventh floor. The foreign department, which has been growing so rapidly it has moved three times within a year, is now more conveniently and commodiously quartered in offices adjoining the New York exchange. "Salome" headquarters have been moved, and the auditing department has taken over the entire tenth floor.

During the last week all carpets and rugs throughout the Fox offices have been taken up and given a thorough cleaning as a precaution against the spread of Spanish influenza. Tuesday, fire prevention day, was observed by the overhauling of offices and desks, and the removal from the premises of all waste material.

Changes in Atlanta Offices.

A. C. Bamberg has resigned as manager of the Triangle office in Atlanta. He was replaced by Mr. Pratt, of Boston.

James V. Allan has resigned from the George Kleine System to accept a position with the First National in New York, and was succeeded at the Atlanta office by J. B. Wilbanks, who was former assistant manager of the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, handling the Paramount-Artcraft pictures.

Mundusfilm Company Buys First National Subjects

WHAT is believed to be one of the largest single transactions in this market for foreign rights of American screen productions was consummated last week by Sidney Garrett, president of the J. Frank Brookliss Company, in behalf of Madame Schuepbach, head of the Mundusfilm Company of Paris. The transaction involves the purchase of the productions of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, excluding the Chaplin pictures, for France, Switzerland, Holland, Italy, Greece, Egypt, the French Colonies and the Balkans.

Mr. Garrett, as the American executive of the Mundusfilm Company, made the purchase through David P. Howells, who controls the foreign rights of the First National. The acquisition of such a large block of foreign rights gives Mr. Garrett a strong position in the foreign market. In addition to the First National product Mr. Garrett has purchased for Madame Schuepbach all the Metro pictures and Screen Classic Pictures, of which the J. Frank Brockliss Company controls the world rights; the Lillian Walker Pictures, and such well-known specials as the famous Million Dollar Chaplin Comedies, for France and Switzerland; "The Whip," "The Barrier," "The Bar Sinister," "Today," "The Mad Lover," "Lest We Forget," "The Cold Deck" and others of like calibre.

Giegerich at Work in Hollywood.

Charles J. Geigerich, well known in newspaper and motion picture circles, has been appointed as publicity representative for Vitagraph at the company's studio in Hollywood, and has already taken up his duties there.

This is Mr. Giegerich's second affiliation with Vitagraph, he having been the first publicity director of Vitagraph-Lubin-Selig-Essanay, Inc., at the time of its formation in 1915. Subsequently he was assistant manager of the motion picture department of the Morning Telegraph. Latterly he has been connected with the Pathe publicity department, the Motion Picture Story Magazine and Universal.

Mr. Geigerich acted as manager for Lee Keedick of the lecture tours of Sergeant Arthur Guy Empey, who subsequently appared as the star in Vitagraph's special production of "Over the Top," and he also acted as publicity representative and road manager for Lieutenant Pat O'Brien, the aviator who escaped from Germany after leaping from a train in transit.

Allied Metals Congress at Milwaukee.

At the Allied Metals Congress held at the Auditorium, Milwaukee, Wis., October 7-12, inclusive, the Rothacker Film Mfg. Co. maintained a special operating booth, where industrial, educational and sales films were exhibited daily, from nine o'clock a. m. until five p. m. The booth was in charge of Messrs. Calvert, Tobin, Anderson, and Mehnke, of the Rothacker organization, and was liberally patronized all through the week.

The American Institute of Mining Engineers, the American Foundrymen's Association and the American Malleable and Casting Association were fully represented at the Congress, and exclusive moving picture privileges were granted the Rothacker plant.

Billing.

THERE are two picture theatres near where we sleep. One runs itself and the other is managed. One does a good business and the other, a better built house, does little better than pay expenses, apparently. One gets out a snappy program and the other gets a few out now and then. We pass both houses every morning between seven and eight o'clock. If it is in the middle of the week one house has a banner giving the week's program. Two three sheet boards carry the paper for the preceding day still lettered "today." The banner often does not go up until Tuesday. Sometimes it is Wednesday. The other house has a three space banner with the three big attractions lettered. That banner goes up during the last show Saturday night and every night, before the house is closed, the paper for the next day is pasted and when the grill is shut for the night the boards are so placed that they can be seen by the people hurrying to their train, and the people know that "today" means the coming evening and not last night. It's a little thing to paste the paper promptly, but it helps to make a difference of several hundred dollars in the takings of the two houses each month. We've spoken to a number of our neighbors and they all agree that they look for the attractions at one house and not for the other because one is always live and the other is dead until just before the matinee. All the chance to get the early business men, when they have come home, and to catch the matinee business of the women shoppers is lost by one house—lost to the other theatre. Keep your paper right up to the minute. Paste the paper for tomorrow so that the final night house can see it on the way out.

McCormick and the War.

It has been a long time since S. Barret McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, Ind., has sent anything in, but he shipped along a whole batch the other day, and we are going to shoot it along. Some of it dates back some weeks, but it is interesting to note his handling of the war releases. Here are some of his displays for "Pershing's Crusaders." To use them all would take too much space, for he used everything from two twos up. He had the film for a week, and he worked hard to get everyone in. The initial announcements carry a lot more text than some advertising experts approve of, but McCormick is an advertising expert himself and he knows that a picture like this must be talked up. The two twos, used for the run of the film, carries a good top line, but there is room for very little, and he figured that the emblem of the Committee on Public Information would mean more. Two three and a halfs carried more talk, using the same cut frame. This was specially drawn, as the setting in of the house signature shows. We have yet to see a layout where that signature does not become a part of the display and yet seem to be a special design. Both of these texts make appeal to the patriotic pride we feel in the accomplishments of the Americans abroad and capitalizes the essence of the releases. He knows that it is the function of the Division of Films to arouse patriotism, and he knows that to do this will bring him the largest returns, as well, so he plays upon our honest pride. It will be noted that in all this advertising he carries also the title of a comedy and a special musical novelty. Some of his Saturday displays were five nines, giving him plenty of space for selling talk, and yet he used only three lines of eight point—to get them well started—and then cut down to a six to get it all in. He knew that to run all six would probably keep many readers away, so he gets them with the eight point and when they are engrossed, he cuts down to the six and they finish it off, anyway. That is a little trick worth while remembering if you want to run a heavy bank of talk. Get them started on an easy face and they will keep on going where the chance reader might refuse to look over the text were it all in the smaller face. The standard space for the week seems to have been a three nines and we reproduce two good examples of this style. That on the left is unusually good with its suggestion of news straight from the front. Here, as in all of the displays, there is no repeat to the text. Each bank is different from the others. The same suggestion may be carried in two places, but the wording in entirely different. In one display the film is hooked up with the idea that you may see some one you know in the film, and the opening sentence reads "Just like a letter from 'somewhere in France'," which works in with the reproduced post card. The other, on the right, takes up Pershing's famous speech at the tomb of Lafayette. The last display is a five fulls for the opening day and a four fulls for the "tomorrow." Both hit right out from the shoulder, and both carry several hundred words of small type, partly in italic and partly in Roman.

A two twos used for a daily ad. in conjunction with a larger space.

A pair of three and a half inch double column spaces.

A five nines for "Pershing's Crusaders." Note the proportion of eight and six point type talk.

A five fulls and a four fulls for the opening and the previous day.

This marks a difference in the thought, for the italic deals with the sentiment inspired by the film and the Roman tells just what the film is and what it shows. This is a nice distinction. The very type face suggests the change in argument and takes the reader from the ideal to the practical. It is one of the little points which make the McCormick spaces worth studying, even if you cannot afford the same generous spaces. You can at least put into practise the ideas he originates, if on a smaller scale. The last display is for the more recent engagement of "Italy's Flaming Front." The larger is a three fifteens with a ten and a five also shown. This was hooked up with a Fairbanks comedy, but the bulk of the display goes to the war picture since he knows that Fairbanks will look out for himself if his name and play are mentioned. In the larger display there is even more talk for the picture than for the Pershing film. More is needed, save in the Italian section. You do not have to talk much about the troops on the Western front, but in spite of the splendid work the Italians are doing, they get less press space and so need more announcement when the Italian pictures are shown. This should not be so, but as long as the correspondents stay with the American troops the bulk of the stories coming over will deal with the engagements in France. McCormick knows this and he has been to unusual pains to make his copy snappy and to hook up the Italian heroes with the Blue Devils, Devil Dogs and other things that afflict the Huns worse than cooties.

That German Text.

The German text warning to keep away from a certain theatre because of a propaganda film, the text of which has already been given, has been very generally taken up by exhibitors. The warning is printed in German type, but with English wording. The latest house to try the scheme is the Campus, Detroit. The sheet is nicely gotten up, folded to suggest a legal document and provided with a huge red seal, unstamped. As a novelty it will work for any propaganda picture. We think, though, that the Campus has too much text. The reverse is printed up with English type on two of the three folds, with a cut for "The Prussian Cur" on the third section. It would be better to use merely the upper half of the front page text which reads:

Warning
By His Imperial Majesty
Kaiser
Wilhelm
to his loyal subjects residing in and about the City of Detroit.

This should be sufficient to get them to read the main text, but the house adds the full facts with house name, play title and date. All this would be more deeply impressed if the reader had to puzzle through the German text inside. As it stands, many may not open up the sheet, and so lose the full effect.

Study Psychology.

Pete Schmidt asks that we reproduce this display from the Saturday Evening Post of October 5. He writes that he feels this to be "one of the most wonderful pieces of psychological ad copy ever issued by a film concern." If you are interested in psychology get a copy of that issue and study it up. Personally it seems to us to be a lot of words and a little argument. It's all in the point of view.

Different.

Don't just say that you're a manager. Be one.

The Way to Get Help.

If your exchanges will not get advertising material to you, write the home office, and if the general press man cannot help you, get up to the Big Boss himself. Someone in each film company is interested in the sale of its films. Find him.

Simpler.

The Theatorium, Lewiston, Idaho, found a simpler way to advertise "Say Young Fellow." Instead of having a dummy newspaper made, they merely lettered part of an ordinary sheet with the title and name, tacked on a coarse screen half tone, and got the same effect with less art work to pay for. And to make certain that it would be seen, they took four seventeens for the space. The idea does not work well in too small a space but they took more than they really needed. The selling talk was added in 18 point bold in a panel below the cut.

Might Try This.

The Picture Play News, Rochester, N. Y., is running a special department for "one dollar specials" from the merchants. If you run a program in a small town and want to make certain it is read, print the doliar specials that give more than normal value, arrange to get the only publication, and the women will fight for your programs, and will have to read some of your talk if you run liners for the plays. Make the advertising rates attractive. It might even pay to run these specials free, insisting that unusual value must be given.

Seven-Eights.

Sometimes you can get as much as a full page without buying the entire page. Levy's Orpheum, Seattle, took but seven of the eight columns on the page and got practically the full display, for the space was ample and the colum of reading matter helped rather than hurt. The space is so laid out that plenty is said and yet each statement is kept apart from the others. It is not the mere fact of bigness that sells a picture, though bigness, in itself, suggests value. It is what is told in the space, and the chief advantages of a full page, apart from the unconscious impression, are space in which to talk and the ability to command attention. Both of these results are as easily gained with seven fulls as with the eight, and at the same time there is a slight saving in cost of space. We wonder what the exhibitor will do presently for "the most famous vampire the world has ever known." There were Cleopatra and Salome and Helen of Troy. After Trojan Nellie, what?

Novelties.

Novelty advertising can be carried to excess. Do not use novelties every week. Keep them for the special features or they will go stale when you want them most.

Save It Up.

Don't lie so hard about a cheap five-reeler that it prevents people from believing you when you have real goods to sell. Save them up for the worth-while stuff.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

A Far Better Name.

Might I, with all 'umbleness of spirit, suggest to our International a change which I firmly believe would be for the better, concerning the name or title of the organization? As it now is we have the spectacle of a title which is not only of such length as to be cumbersome, and perhaps even just a wee bit absurd; also one which, by implication, announces to all and sundry that a goodly proportion of its membership has no standing or ambition beyond that of the mere operation of a machine.

This department suggests that the adoption of a new name or title would work to the decided benefit of all concerned. It in fact proposes to and does suggest a title which, while probably susceptible of improvement, would not in the least affect the stage employee end of things, but would improve matters by removing a portion of its present unwieldy length, at the same time suggesting something beyond mere machine operation for the "operator" contingent. Let us place the present title and the suggested one together for comparison.

The present is: "International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Moving Picture Machine Operators of the United States and Canada," which I think you will agree is quite lengthy. The proposed one is: "International Association of Theatrical Stage Employees and Projectionists of the United States and Canada," which I would add notation that "stage men" would perhaps work still further improvement, though I do not wish to seem presumptious in proposing changes affecting men of the stage. Then, too, the word "Internatfonal" seems superfluous in view of the fact that "United States and Canada" are also incorporated. But it is the word projectionist I am chiefly concerned with, because beyond the shortening of the title by its substitution for "Moving Picture Machine Operator," it is suggestive of something beyond mere machine operation. It gives the man something to live up to, as it were.

As I have repeatedly pointed out, the term "operator" is ambiguous; also it is meaningless, since it does not express the kind of work performed. The man who projects should be very much more than the mere "operator" of a machine. When he has learned to operate the projector his problems are but begun. When the telegraph operator has learned his simple, little "key," his list of dots, dashes and the company "rules" which govern his work, he is, to all intents and purposes, entirely done. He is a competent "operator," and that settles it. He has no further problems to solve except that of holding his job. He is the "operator" of a telegraph key, and that tells his whole story. When the "operator" on vests has learned to run his, or her, machine (which is cared for by someone else) in such a way as to avoid errors and secure a maximum of production, he or she has learned all that it is possible to learn as an "operator on vests." When the telephone "operator" has learned her switchboard connections and to obey the various rules laid down by the company, she is through. Her apparatus is cared for, looked after and adjusted by others. She is a thoroughly competent "operator." And that is precisely why these various ones are mere "operators." Their work is all laid out for them by others. There is very little, if any, chance for initiative. They may become extra proficient, or expert operators, but that is largely a mere matter of speed. There is no outlet for self-expression. Theirs is a life of mechanical operation and "rules," their brain work being performed by others. They are mere "operators."

And now let us examine into the difference between the work of those we have named and the work of projective motion pictures. The man who projects pictures operates a machine, true, but right here all similarity ceases. Like the operator of a pipe organ he operates a machine (a pipe organ is a machine), but what is produced by that machine is very largely or entirely dependent upon the initiative, knowledge, individual skill and brain work supplied by the individual in charge of the machine. One "operator" of an organ may cause the organ to turn out a perfectly punk rendition of a high class composition. Another "operator" may take the same composition and the same organ and give a splendid, soul-stirring rendition.

Precisely the same thing is true of the man in charge of a motion picture projector. An "operator" in one projection room may give a splendid, sparkling screen rendition of a high class photoplay. Another "operator," having what would be, with application of the same knowledge, skill and ability, precisely the same opportunity insofar as equipment be concerned, receives the same identical films and produces a punk screen result. And it is precisely this opportunity for the application of knowledge, high grade skill and initiative which lifts the calling out of the "operator" class and makes of it something different, higher and better. The man in charge of motion picture projectors projects pictures, logically, therefore, he is a projectionist. His problems most emphatically do not stop with mere machine operation. He must care for and adjust the entire electrical projection equipment, as well as the optical train, which is not true of others bearing the title "operator," their equipment mostly being cared for and adjusted by others. His knowledge must even extend entirely outside the projection room, since the screen surface, auditorium lighting and even some phases of the seating directly affects the screen result as viewed by the audience. And as if this were not enough, the very actors are directly dependent upon him for the interpretation of certain phases of their art upon the screen, for who will deny that the projectionists can, by the mere moving of a lever, or manipulation of a crank, change the funeral scene into a ridiculous farce. And this is but a small beginning of the many reasons why the man in charge of projectors is not a mere "operator."

I again, though most respectfully, suggest to the International officers and to the membership at large a change of the title of the organization, with "Projectionist" substituted for "Moving Picture Machine Operators." It will shorten the name and give to the man a title which means something—give him something to live up to, as it were.

As to Memberships.

I recently had occasion to set down a list of what I belonged to in the way of organizations affiliated with the industry. Here it is: Active member of the I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O. through local 306, New York City. Active member Society Motion Picture Engineers. Active member American Projection Society. Honorary general director Association Moving Picture Operators of Argentine, South America. Honorary member International Projection Association. Honorary member Local Union 110, Chicago. Honorary member Local Union 384, Hudson County, New Jersey. Quite some membership. In addition the editor has been appointed in advisory capacity to the big war committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, and is member of several committees of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

The Old, Old Question.

Westley Trout, Arkansas City, Arkansas, is engaged in an argument with his manager as to speed of projection. He says, in part:

> Well, Brother Richardson, just a few lines with regard to speed of projection, concerning which my manager and I have indulged in a somewhat heated argument. He says his music rolls call for 10 to 12 minutes (per reel, presumably.—Ed.). My contention is, however, that the music rools have nothing to do with speed of projection. I am unable to understand why theatre managers who make no claim to knowledge of practical projection, undertake the contract of telling their projectionist, who is presumed to know his business (else why is he employed?) and who is presumed to know what speed is best suited to each picture and to each scene thereof, at what speed a film should be interpreted.
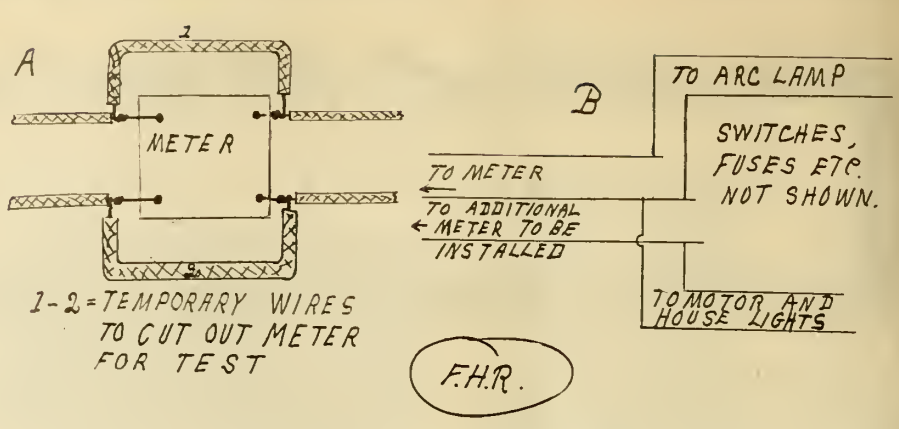
> I propose to leave it to you, Brother Richardson, to settle the argument, but this is flat, viz: I will not overspeed

my projection for any manager or exhibitor. If overspeeding is demanded there are those who will accommodate, I suppose, but I won't. This is not said merely for effect. It is a statement of fact. I have some regard for the property intrusted to my care, as well as for the work of the artists which is intrusted to me for interpretation on the screen. I do not believe that any real projectionist will ruin his work and the work of the producer and artist in order to accommodate the length of a music roll, or anything else.

Your manager, who doubtless means well, but does not quite grasp the whole significance of his order to accommodate the film to the music roll, should carefully consider a few points. Let him ask himself which he pays the big money for, the firm service or the music roll. Gauged by that standard, which is of the greater importance, the correct interpretation of the music roll or the film story? We have gone over this matter so very many times that repetition becomes stale, still here it is once more: The artist is presumed to know precisely how to get the best effect into any scene. He or she is, let us suppose, at a death bed. Now people around a death bed do not move like animated jumping jacks. Except on theatre screens they move slowly and sedately. The deathbed scene we have under consideration is, let us assume, played by one of our best artists, who receives more actual coin in one month, because he or she knows his or her business, than friend theatre manager receives in three years. The scene is acted by this artist and is "shot" by the cameraman at, we will assume, 65 feet per minute. So far so good. Now if the scene is projected to the screen at exactly 65 feet per minute we shall get an exact reproduction of the scene as it was enacted by people who know more in one minute about how the scene should be acted, to get the best effect, than friend theatre manager ever did or ever will know. On the other hand, if the scene be projected at 70 feet, or any other speed than that, at which it was photographed, he will get a different rendition of the scene than that given by the artists, and if the variation be too great the scene may be rendered absurd—a travesty on the original. But, you ask, how is the man to know how fast any given scene was taken? A very pertinent question, inasmuch as camera speed varies widely. There is but one way, viz: the governing of speed so that naturalness of action of the figures on the screen is attained, and the capability of doing this marks one vast difference between the "operator" and the projectionist. It is this one thing which lifts projection out of the "trade" class, and makes of it an art or a profession. Almost any fool can operate a machine, after a fashion at least, splice a film and trim a lamp, but it requires brains and real ability to interpret the art of high-class artists in such way that the original scene will lose none of its value.

But it is not so surprising that your manager will consider the time of rendering a fifty-cent music roll as of greater importance than the time of rendering a reel of film when producers themselves have for years displayed the most astounding density and almost unbelievable apathy on this subject. They have almost sweat blood to perfect a production to the last, most minute detail, but have seemingly cared not one tinker's dam for its correct reproduction on the screen. I have watched Mary Pickford shoot through a scene like a comet gone mad. I have seen ordinary stock automobiles make at least one hundred and fifty miles an hour; I have seen ordinary plug horses trot not less than sixty miles an hour; I have gazed in wonder as pall-bearers did a fast gallop out of the church and shot the coffin into the hearse like throwing a hone to a dog; I have seen Annette Kellerman swim at the very least twenty miles an hour. Yea, verily I have seen some marvelous things donc to high-class artists, to dumb animals and to other things on the screen. And I have viewed these various things, knowing that a good manager also viewed them, without seemingly the slightest suspicion that it was making a monkey out of the whole thing, to say nothing of adding dollars per day to his overhead expense through physical damage to films and machinery.

I have at times wondered if producers were not withholding their active support to this department in its fight to obliterate this evil through knowledge of the fact that overspeeding, while it kills the artistic effect of their productions, tears films to pieces with great speed, and you know the more films there are destroyed the more friend producer sells. Mind you, I am making no accusations, but in searching for reasons for lack of active support from the producer this is the only explanation I can see which looks at all reasonable.



Overload Causes Trouble.

Wm. R. Webb,. Jr., Bell Buckle, Tennessee, presents the following:

We have just purchased a new Powers 6-B motor driven projector, equipped with 220-volt motor. We find the motor will not pull the machine when the arc is on. Without arc and without film in machine, the motor pulls it at fair speed, but with film in and arc burning it drops to 46 or 47 revolutions of crank shaft per minute, when geared to its maximum speed. Also when arc is on the lights in building become very dim. Would this indicate trouble with the current? We are at the end of a long line of wire (3-wire system) and are connected to the middle and right-hand wire. Would the trouble be corrected were the motor connected to middle and left-hand wire, leaving house lights on other side? Street wires are not in good condition, insulation hanging in shreds from the wires at many points. Any suggestions will be appreciated.

There are three possible reasons for your trouble, viz.: an overloaded meter, overloaded generators or overloaded lines. Most likely it is due to the latter. To determine the matter, cut out the meter for a few moments by attaching short wires to cut around it, as per sketch. If your house lights burn O. K., and the motor holds up in speed when arc is on, that settles it. The meter is too small. If it is, and you continue running that way, it will most likely eventually burn out, whereupon the power company may try to make you pay for it. Remove the cut-out wires immediately after test, as with them on the meter would not register. If you find the meter is not at fault, then it is resistance due to overloaded lines, or else overloaded generators, which causes high voltage drop. You would find that instead of 220 you are really getting very much less pressure. The best way to answer your query as to connecting motor to other side is to try it. All that you have to do is to disconnect the motor wire connecting to OUTSIDE wire and connect it to the other OUTSIDE wire temporarily. DON'T connect the motor wire now connected to the middle wire (neutral it is called) to other wire unless you want fireworks. By doing that you would get 440 volts, if what you say about one side giving 220 volts is true. If the motor runs O K on the other side you might try connecting the house lights on that side also. But you must have another meter if you connect to the other side. At B in the sketch I have indicated the correct wiring if you use both sides. However, it is necessary that you consult the power company before making any changes. I suspect it is a small plant and most likely the generators are both loaded to the limit, in which case it is quite possible that any switching of the load would have serious results. Changing the motor itself to other side, however, will have no appreciable effect because the energy it consumes is negligible.

New Deal in Chicago.

Recently it was our privilege to meet Brother Richard Green, second vice-president I. A. T. S. E. & M. P. M. O., at headquarters, New York City. Friend Green is also president Chicago Local Union 110, of which the editor is honorary member. We were much interested in learning the facts concerning local 110, concerning which many rumors have been afloat.

Brother Green enjoys the confidence of his collegues at International headquarters, and his word may, we feel, be fully relied upon. He tells me that 110 is now in first-class shape, with the slate wiped clean and everything running smoothly. Past records are to be forgotten, and the local will live for the future. He gave to the editor a most cordial invitation to visit 110 at any time. Tommy Malloy is, he informs me, still business agent, and is making good; also favorable mention was made of Brother Fred Havill. You cannot imagine what a relief it was to receive this good report from 110, and from a source upon which we feel we may rely. May the good work go on.

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Evolution of Picture Music Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part II.

AT the time the exhibitors began putting in small orchestras, the famous song-slide made its debut. At first, a soloist would sing the words printed on a slide as the piece de resistance of the show. This proved novel and became a box office attraction; the singer's name, photograph, and the song being prominently placaded all over the lobby. Remember that this lobby never exceeded three feet in depth and everything could be plainly seen from the street by passersby.

A better form of song-slide shortly came into vogue, which showed scenes from the big moments of the song, and these slides were projected synchronously with the words as sung. Better singers were employed and the interest in this added feature became universally popular. Even yet the circus ideas clung to the picture shows, for the singer frequently went outside and sang, unaccompanied, to draw the patrons. The "Ballyhoo" was still retained, and he introduced the singer to the crowd in much the same fashion as at a circus when the bearded lady was presented.

The idea of a "Prophet not without honor save in his own country" was carried to extremes in the "barking" and billing. A singer was introduced as "Professor Hoozis, the famous baritone from Salt Lake, the greatest singer of the decade." Many patrons found him to be their next-door neighbor, and lengthy explanations followed. This unsavory method of advertising was countenanced and upheld by the best showmen with the fallacious idea that it was the only means of procuring results. They could not see any other angle at the time, but in less than a year, they were loudly proclaiming the singer as "local talent."

The song-slide fad passed—not for lack of merit—but because it was crowded out by better and longer pictures. Two and three reels appeared in the film exchanges. These took up time and the singer was no longer needed to fill out the performance. The theatres being small and the film prices higher, it was necessary to show a certain number of performances a day to pay the overhead. Thus, there was forced upon the showman, who was now known as an exhibitor, the running of continuous performances. It worked well from the start and the circus aspect of the side-show slipped away. With it went the "barker" and his "Ballyhoo." The picture business was becoming legitimatized, and more cultured people began to drift into a "movie," first, out of curiosity, but later because they found a clean form of entertainment, convenient as to hours, and cheap in price.

There was also a noticable transition in the music, both in the quality and the quantity. The scenes were fitted in consecutive order, and more or less accurately did they portray the emotions depicted. Real musicians saw the possibilities of the new field for wider endeavor and greater remuneration. In many cases, the trio gave place to a "Symphony Orchestra" composed of five or six pieces, and the admission was raised five cents.

Things were going fine for the exhibitor. He saw a fortune in the business of presenting pictures and so did many who were not showmen. "Movie" shows sprang up like mushrooms. Every few blocks one could find a little screen theatre, heavily placarded with its line of pictures "now showing."

There was a call for "talking moving pictures," so the progressive exhibitor proceeded to make them talk. A little company of would-be actors and actresses were engaged and placed behind the screen. Thep spoke a dialogue which was supposed to convey the thought behind the action in the photoplay; and, by watching the lips of the screen stars, they made a commendable job of it. This was found too expensive for the small theatres, but, having begun it, they attempted to do it cheaper by engaging one with a gift of mimicry to take all the roles. This wasn't bad until the talker ran out of ideas. When he began to repeat the same dialogue for different pictures, and allowed the heroine to assume the deep growling voice of the villain, it was all wrong, and "talking moving pictures" forthwith died suddenly.

During this experiment in making pictures into plays, the music was kept silent, as it interfered with the clearness of enunciation, especially as the talker had to project his voice through a muslin or canvas screen. This delayed the progressive growth of picture music for a time, but in the end proved a blessing. Patrons were led to a deeper appreciation of music through its absence, and when it returned the welcome was responsive and enthusiastic.

Orchestras were enlarged everywhere and a few singers were brought in to sing without song-slides. Needless to say, the mushroom crop of exhibitors died a natural death under the hot sun of competition and the fittest only survived. These enlarged their theatres and began to pay close attention to the class of program offered, including the music. In many cases, the orchestra leader was requested to allow the first show to proceed in silence, while he chose suitable music to play for the following performance.

This method, devised for musical efficiency, proved a boomerang upon the box office receipts. Nobody wanted to see the first show, and the loss was keenly felt when the exhibitor was forced to "turn 'em away" in the evening. He called upon the exchange for help, asking that his pictures for the day be delivered early enough in the morning to insure a pre-viewing by his musical director. The exchange could not comply with his request owing to the uncertainty of transportation facilities, and the exhibitor was compelled to devise some other scheme for the early fitting of his pictures. Believing that any kind of music would do for the first performance, he arranged with the orchestra leader to play something while he picked something else. Of course, this proved no improvement on the old plan and again he sought the exchange.

Looking about for relief, the eyes of the exhibitor fell upon the church organ. He noted the ease which which the organist improvised; he saw the publicity value of an organ installation; and he believed it to be the solution of his difficulties in picture fitting.

Only a few could afford a church organ, and the cost of employing an organist nearly bankrupted many of these. It is true that in part the difficulties of picture playing had been swept away, but, because organists knew nothing of picture fitting, the trouble of the showman began anew. It was necessary to have some advance data regarding the picture, with some suggestions as to its musical requirements.

From all over the country, producers and manufacturers of films received letters requesting some sort of music service. At first, these epistles received no serious consideration because, as one film magnate said, "We purvey pictures, not music." But the cry for musical helps or suggestions became so insistent that some action had to be taken.

This brought forth what was called a "dope sheet," being a list of the subtitles and the "dope" on the music. Later it became a cue sheet or a musical suggestion synopsis, which proved a real boon to the troubled musicians in the myriads of small towns and cities.

At first, the information gleaned from these cue sheets was meager in the extreme and frequently misled the leader in his choice of suitable musical material. There was nothing but a cue and its suggested number. If that piece was not in his library, the musician was as much at sea as ever. Nothing was said concerning the character of the picture, its atmosphere or direct cues, and in view of the fact that features had begun to appear in five reels, the plight of the orchestra leader was pathetic.

Gradually the cue sheets improved in their service, but even at this time (1918) there are film companies distributing cue sheets that are worthless for the practical purposes of the leader or organist.

"Yankee Doodle" Origin in Much Doubt.

Probably throughout the length and breadth of musieal literature there are no more deadly insane and meaningless words than those whieh have been given a tune and have had a degree of popularity for more than a century under the title "Yankee Doodle." The really amazing thing in connection with it is the undisputable fact that the air is still popular, although we are seldom tortured with the words.

The tune has been claimed by several nations as belonging to them exelusively. One authority states that it is an old vintage song of Southern France, and in Holland, where "as mueh buttermilk as they could drink and a tenth of the grain" became the reward of the reapers, they were accustomed to enliven the tedium of labor by singing this same tune to words as idiotic as our own.

The American Secretary of Legation in Madrid in 1858 writes: "Our national air certainly has its origin in the musie of the Pyrences. The first strains are identieal with those of brave old Biseay."

After the advent of Cromwell into the life of Charles of England, the air was sung by the cavaliers and court hangers-on in ridicule of Cromwell, who, it is claimed, rode into Oxford on a small horse with his single plume fastened into a sort of knot which someone dubbed a "Maearoni."

The tune first appeared in this country in 1755. General Braddock, of the British Army, was assembling the colonists near Albany for an attack on the French and Indians at Forts Niagara and Frontenae. The Continentals appeared in the fashions covering a period of two hundred years, and their arms were quite as quaint. The martial band, to whieh they awkwardly tried to keep step, played airs familiar to the grandparents of the British soldiers. Our ancestors had become farmers, and had long since forgotten war and the world's fashions.

The British regimental surgeon was somewhat of a wit and a musical genius. His sense of humor was touched by the motley crowd of new recruits. As they marehed into view and were contrasted with the handsomely uniformed and orderly soldiers, the picture ealled to the mind of the gentleman the similar distinction between Cromwell and the eourt dandies, and he planned a joke on the newcomers. He hastily scribbled the notes of "Yankee Doodle," wrote below them the absurd words which were in vogue in Cromwell's day, and passed them on to the uneouth musieians as the latest martial air of England. The band quiekly eaught the simple tune, and soon it sounded through the camp to the great amusement of the Britishers, who were not slow to see the application of the satire.

Was the humor of the situation prophetic of the phrase that "He who laughs last, laughs best?" It would seem probable, for twenty-five years later Lord Cornwallis marched into the lines of these same Continentals to surrender his sword and his army. And he marched to the strains of "Yankee Doodle." It was the custom to have the regimental bands of a surrendering army play any musie chosen by the victors. So fine an opportunity to repay old scores was not to be overlooked nor neglected.

It resolved itself into a simple problem in proportion: As Cromwell was to the dissolute army of Charles, our ancestors were to the equally lawless oppressors of universal liberty. Thus, throughout the Revolution, the song that autocracy had made to deride the upholders of politieal and religious freedom was the mareh played while paving the way to greater vietories built on the same prineiples.

After the war of 1812, Henry Clay and John Quincy Adams met the British representative at Ghent to arrange the final details and sign the treaty of peaee. The burghers of the town were proud that the event was to take plaee in their town, and they proposed a serenade to the two embassies. They knew the English National Hym, but also wanted to play that of America. They referred the matter to our representatives. Neither gentlemen could remember the tune. Mr. Clay said our chief national melody was ealled "Yankee Doodle." At last, after vainly attempting to recall the air, Mr. Clay sent for his colored body-servant and explained the situation to him. The boy at onee whistled the musie. It was quiekly harmonized, copied, and used for the purpose as desired.

That musically inclined colored boy furnished Europe with the first transeription of the music as an American National Song.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. CAN you tell me something about the light opera, "Alone at Last?" I believe it had quite a run in New York.

A. "Alone at Last" was presented at the Shubert Theatre in October of 1915, and had a run of five months. It had a superior grade of light opera musie eomposed by Frank Lehar, famous for the "Merry Widow" music. John Charles Thomas and Margaret Namara had the leading roles. "Some Little Bug Will Find You Some Day," sung by Lionel Atwill, was a great hit, and considered one of the most humorous songs ever heard in light opera.

Q. I have heen a reader of the Moving Picture World for five years, and find your new department very interesting. I am not connected with the film industry, being only a "fan." I wish to secure the ineidental musie for "Hearts of the World" and "Intolerance" (piano) and the "hurry" music used in the theatres. Can you give me the necessary information?

A. We are pleased that you have liked our department, and are always glad to be of service to any musician. A piano seore for either "Hearts of the World" or "Intolerance" being an original work and owned by the produetion eompanies, eould not be procured except through them, and it is a question whether they would wish to sell one or not. Regarding "hurry" musie, we advise you to write to Belwin, Ine., Columbia Theatre Building, New York City. They will send you a catalogue of sueh music and the priees of the same.

Q. Can you tell me where I may obtain a list of musical elubs and information about prominent musieians in this city?

A. There is a book published onee a year which will give you the information you desire. It is called "The Musieal Blue Book of America," and is obtainable at the publishers, Musieal Blue Book Corporation, 105 West Fortieth street, New York City.

Q. I wish to attend a free school where chorus music and languages can be learned. Do you know of such a school in New York City?

A. Edoardo Petri has charge of sueh a school as you mention. It is loeated in the Metropolitan Opera House. If you address the above gentleman at the Metropolitan, you will reeeive the necessary information. Enough French and Italian are taught to enable the pupils to use those languages in the chorus. Of course one must have a good voice to be eonsidered as an applieant.

Q. I have written several songs whieh I believe have merit. Will you kindly tell me where I ean dispose of them or where I can have them set to music and put on the market?

A. There is always a demand for exeellent lyries, doubtless beeause so little of the vast quantities written have any merit whatsoever. Neither you nor your friends are in a position to pass on your verses, as the opinions are bound to be colored by the personal interest. Just now, the song publishers and great artists are deluged with poems; so much so in fact that many of them have given out the information that they positively will not look over any more manuscripts. This is not intended to discourage any undiscovered genius, but merely to save you from a disillusionment that is praetically certain. After all this, if you are sure you belong to the elect and eare to send us what you consider your masterpiece, we shall be glad to help you in any way possible to us.

Q. I am a French horn player, and am in this draft. I should like to go overseas as a musician, but do not know just how to go about it. Can you help me?

A. As the French horn has come to be widely used in military bands, you should be a very valuable acquisition. The Twenty-fifth Coast Artillery Band at Fort Wadsworth, we understand, is open for good musicians. As each regiment is eompleted a new band is formed. The adjutant at Fort Wadsworth is in command of the band, and can be communicated with personally or by mail.

"When I Come Back to You"

Published by Huntzinger & Dilworth

New York

The lyrics of this song hit are by J. Will Callihan, author of the famous "Smiles." The appeal is irresistible and the song promises to be immensely popular.

Revival of the Old-Time Chantey Song.

A hundred years ago, when Amerieaan shipping was paramount on the seven seas, the sailors before the mast sang their chantey songs as they pulled on the ropes or tugged at the windlass. Chanteys were regarded as an aid to man power. They might be sentimental or ribald—more often the words were as ungodly as the men that sang them—but they smaeked of the salt sea, they promoted good fellowship among the men, and they were an organizing influence. Those days are eoming back. Not only have the inspiration and the power of song been reeognized by the War and Navy departments, but to further it on board all ships flying an American flag, the United States Shipping Board Recruiting Service has appointed an official ehantey man for our merchant marines, to help serviee singing among our sailors.

"Mary, the Baby and Me" a Catchy Song.

This delightful little song by Paul Cunningham and James Monaeo has been published by M. Witmark & Sons. It proves a hit wherever it is sung. "Mary, the Baby and Me" appeals to everybody and its suceess is assured.

ACTIVITIES IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

Military Training, Coal Production, War News, Indians and Coast Guards Among the Subjects

THE Arrow Film Corporation is releasing the two-reel novelty film entitled, "What of Your Boy?" produced in co-operation with and under the supervision of the New York Military Academy.

This production is a timely one in view of the fact that it deals with the advantages accruing to the youth of America, of a military training, and is a peculiarly appropriate production because of the fact that most of our schools and colleges have established military training as a part of their curriculum. The production compares the future of the boy without training and who ultimately becomes a gangster, as compared to the lad whose mental and moral make-up is strengthened by military training.

A scene in the production shows the youngest of those attending the New York Military Academy acting as an escort of honor to Marshal Joffre at the time of his visit to Washington's headquarters at Newburgh, N. Y.

"What of Your Boy?" will be released on the state right market.

Educational's Coal Picture Completed.

The Educational Film Corporation of America's fuel picture, "The Romance of Coal," is now completed and will be seen shortly at one of the Broadway theatres after it has been inspected by the Federal Fuel Administrator.

Texas Concern Makes Educationals.

The Shamrock Photoplay Corporation of San Antonio, Texas, is at work on a series of historical and natural history subjects, which are to be exhibited in the schools of Texas. These subjects are to be screened with appropriate lectures, which will further illuminate them. A great deal of time and expense is being expended on a wild animal picture, which is expected to be ready in three to four weeks' time, and in which a careful effort is being made to photograph wild animals in their native haunts.

"Naval Air Power" (Pathe).

This is No. 9 of the Official British War Films. It shows how student aviators in Great Britain are trained for their intrepid work. Various types of machines are demonstrated and some actual flights above cities are pictured. This is a fine educational subject and covers the air program of the war from many angles.

"The Unconquerable Spirit" (Pathe).

Episode No. 18 of the Official War Review. This illustrates throughout the indomitable will to victory of the Allied troops. Pictures of troops of various nations are shown, and not the least interesting feature is that of the prisoners taken in Lorraine, who have signified willingness to fight the Hun. How captured guns and ammunition are turned upon their former owners is another good feature. This closes with a review and decoration of American heroes by General Pershing.

"Black Feet and Flat Heads" (Mutual).

The first of an outdoor series which is being made by Rothacker to follow the Outing-Chesters on the Mutual program is entitled "Black Feet and Flat Heads." It was photographed among the Blackfeet Indians and shows them in the primitive state in which they lived years ago. They have performed their various dances and played their games before the camera. Indian chiefs in their native costumes, including the fantastical feathered headgear, dancing about the camp fire, accompanied by squaws and others of lesser degree, present an attractive sight.

"Heroes of the Coast Guard" (Ford).

The educational number on the Rialto program of the week of October 27 was entitled "Heroes of the Coast Guard," made by the Ford Motor Company. The picture was well made and contains a detailed illustration of the marvelous work accomplished by the Coast Guard. Muskegon, on the shores of Lake Michigan, is the scene of the labors of the heroes of the picture, in which we see the resuscitation of a half-drowned man, the launching of the life boat, and later the shooting out of breeches buoy and the work of salvation accomplished in this way. The picture is a satisfactory one and leaves very little to the imagination. This is one of the regular releases on the Ford Educational list.

A. PAUL KEITH VICTIM OF INFLUENZA

Half Owner of B. F. Keith and Keith & Albee's Theatrical Properties Passes Away in New York

AFTER an illness covering only four days, A. Paul Keith died at the home of one of his employes in this city, Wednesday evening, October 30, a victim of influenza. Mr. Keith returned from a tour of the B. F. Keith Circuit late in the previous week and was suddenly stricken. Despite all that medical skill could do to prevent his death, he passed away in the prime of life and in the fullness of a career that had brought him the respect and the admiration of thousands of people who appreciated his sterling qualities.

Mr. Keith was born in New York City, January 3, 1875. His father's home was in Boston, and there Paul attended school, his earlier education being supplemented by a short apprenticeship in his father's theatrical business. In 1896 Paul was graduated from Harvard and immediately entered into full participation in the B. F. Keith vaudeville and motion picture activities. The young man was taken under direct supervision by E. F. Albee, who has been an associate of the Keith family, in business and private life, for as many years as the name of B. F. Keith has figured in theatricals.

Paul Keith's mother died when he was a youth, and it was not until 1913 that his father, the late B. F. Keith, married for a second time, making Ethel Chase, the daughter of a Washington theatrical manager, his wife under circumstances that surprised the profession and caused wide-spread discussion among theatrical people. B. F. Keith dropped dead of heart disease in a hotel at Palm Beach, Fla., where he had gone with the second Mrs. Keith, upon his own yacht, for a bridal tour.

The Keith will disposed of a vast fortune, representing theatrical properties in many cities, a controlling interest in the United Booking Office and extensive real estate possessions, together with bonds and stocks that represented a total of many millions. Under the term of B. F. Keith's will the Keith theatrical interests came under control of a corporation, specifically formed, with E. F. Albee and Paul Keith each possessing a half interest. The personal property was willed to Paul as sole heir, the Keith widow having been separately provided for during the six months preceding his death while she was Mr. Keith's wife.

Apart from owing an extensive chain of vaudeville theatres the Keith & Albee theatrical interests comprise a chain of motion picture theatres extending through New England and into eastern Canada. In the Keith theatres moving pictures participate with the vaudeville, being frequently "featured" along with the regular headliners. There is a separate department connected with the United Booking Office that handles the moving picture angle of the Keith & Albee properties.

A. Paul Keith was as rugged and manly in his business transactions as he was in his personal attributes. E. F. Albee had "brought him up right," made a big showman of him, and the young man developed with credit to his parentage and his tutor. It may be said of A. Paul Keith that he was one of the rare examples in theatrical life where a young man grew to full estate with unquestioned credit to his bringing up. He was "a son of his father," and the show business lost a big man when he died.

The Roman Catholic priest who had been the family minister through all of Paul Keith's life came on from Boston in time to administer the last sacrament and accompanied the body back to Boston, where the funeral ceremony and interment was attended by hundreds of showmen Saturday, November 2.

Official Review Registers Victory.

The Official War Review, No. 19, to be released by Pathe, November 4, is a Victory Film. On the Italian front, Italy's victorious troops, aided by her Allies, press forward across the rugged mountains and into the war-swept plains. The great cable way, the teleferica, swings guns and munitions to the front, defying chasms and precipices, and on the snowy heights, sure-footed dogs carry ammunition to the fighters. On the Marne, French and Americans prepare to push forward against the retreating Huns, while long lines of prisoners keep streaming back. Longmont is retaken from the foe. In Palestine the British armies under General Allenby give the Turks no rest, and move onward despite almost insurmountable natural obstacles. Tractors draw great howitzers across the sands, and city after city yields to the conquerors. On the American front is shown the "Forward push" of the Yanks and how the soldier boys from overseas are contributing to the downfall of German militarism. Victory is in the air.

NEW COMBINATION OUTLINES PROJECT

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin Announce Ralph Ince Film Attractions Will Be Released Through S-L Pictures

AN important announcement is made of the crystalization of the plans of Messrs. A. H. Sawyer and Herbert Lubin in the launching of the first Ralph Ince film attraction, which is of great importance to exhibitors throughout the country.

Ralph Ince is now engaged in the production of this first big special which will be released under the banner of of S-L Pictures.

S-L Pictures. The combination of names associated with this venture assures the exhibitor that no precaution that human skill can devise will be omitted in the production of real film attractions.

Ralph Ince stands today as one of the foremost directors of motion pictures. Many screen successes have been identified with his name. During his connection with the Vitagraph, he achieved fame as an actor and director, having directed such well known box office attractions as "The Juggernaut," "A Million Bid," "The Wreck," "413," etc. Some of his more recent successes are "The Argyle Case," starring Robert Warwick; "Today," starring Florence Reed; "Tempered Steel," starring Mme Petrova, and "Our Mrs. McChesney," starring Ethel Barrymore.

Arthur H. Sawyer is one of the pioneers in the motion picture industry, having had a vast amount of experience relating to every branch of the business. He has been an exhibitor and was owner of one of the first chain of picture theatres in the United States. In the early days, Mr. Sawyer became interested in production and was general manager of the Kinemacolor Company as well as being responsible for the organization of that company in this country, which produced initial films in natural colors. He sponsored many of the first feature films to appear in Broadway theatres and was one of the first men to engage stars of the legitimate stage to play in pictures. He is also regarded as an expert in studio management and production matters and possesses a thorough knowledge of laboratory details and the innumerable other angles which enter into the production of pictures.

Mr. Lubin is considered one of the best exchange men and distributers of pictures, as well as being an organizer of big financial projects. He formerly controlled the Metro franchise in Canada and possesses a wide knowledge of the exhibitors' problem and requirements, having made an extensive study of exhibitors needs which will prove of great value in bridging the gulf existing between the producer and exhibitor. He has also been responsible for many innovations in the distribution and marketing of films.

Messrs. Sawyer and Lubin have introduced many new ideas in the marketing of pictures as was evidenced in their states rights sales of "The Warrior" and "Mother," which they handled so successfully.

In a recent interview Mr. Lubin stated: "For many months we have been engaged in a careful study of the market conditions with particular reference to the growing tendency and insistent demand of the exhibitors and public for high class productions.

"The oft repeated expression that the surface of the motion picture industry has only been scratched is quite true. It is also quite true that it has been badly abused but, after all, it really has only been scratched. We realize that at present there is an over-production of films, but I do not think that there is an over production of good films.

"The insistent demand of the public today for better pictures is proven by the success with which good pictures have met. Our plan is most comprehensive in scope and we are going to strive to bring the much discussed angles of distribution into the closest kind of contact with the exhibitor. We feel that an organization such as we have, committed to no specific method of distribution or tied to any definite date of release, will make a distinct contribution to the art of motion pictures and the furtherance of the industry along constructive commercial lines.

"The elimination of haste and waste which have so long been among the many troubles of the industry will be insured by the most careful preparation and the most methodical and painstaking study before a foot of film is exposed. The fact that we have Director Ralph Ince associated in our enterprise, personally directing our productions is in itself a guarantee to the exhibitor that we will turn out big pictures.

"Ralph Ince is peculiarly the exhibitor's director. The exhibitors in this country have an abiding faith in the value of his name, born of a long and satisfactory experience with the pictures which have carried the stamp of his workmanship and standardized excellence. We will have some very interesting announcements to make as to our stars and the calibre of other men identified with our organization. Our principal aim is to strive to produce features that will meet the demand of the public for bigger and better pictures."

Notes About Town.

Arthur S. Hyman, of Detroit, announces that in future the Arthur S. Hyman attractions will be distributed through the Dawn-Masterplay Company. He has purchased "Wives of Men," "The Million Dollar Mystery" and "My Husband's Friend" for Michigan. Mr. Hyman was years ago general manager of the General Film Company. He was in New York during the week of October 21 to arrange his New York office in the Longacre Building, where he is represented by George H. Callahan as general manager.

E. Mandelbaum, of Cleveland, was stopping at the Hotel Astor, October 25, where he expected to remain a week enjoying an enforced vacation on account of the closing of all the Ohio theatres during the epidemic.

Director Ralph Ince is busy organizing the Ince Film Company. He will produce six or eight special features a year, and expects to start work about December 1.

The Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, of New York City, will hold a meeting and luncheon on Thursday, October 13, on the opening of its new rooms at 727 Seventh avenue.

Universal's Cuban Exchange Burned.

News reached the Universal that its exchange and a theatre owned by the company in Havana, Cuba, were almost totally destroyed by fire on October 24. B. Lichtig, the exchange manager, and his wife, were rescued in their nightgowns from the second story window over the theatre. Thousands of reels of film, the accumulation of four years, were destroyed.

It is understood that the entire loss, which has not yet been estimated, is covered by insurance. The company will take steps to re-establish the exchange at once.

"Under Four Flags" Third Official War Picture

UNDER FOUR FLAGS," the third U. S. official feature war picture issued by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, will have its first official showings in New York at the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, where it will be offered simultaneously during the week of November 17. Showings at other important motion picture theatres will follow, and then the film will be released to smaller houses throughout the United States.

This variation in the method of releasing the U. S. official war pictures will have considerable interest for exhibitors.

Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films, in discussing the exploitation of the new Government picture, says:

"The method employed in introducing 'Pershing's Crusaders' and 'America's Answer,' to the public, which involved a number of 'shows', each with a complete organization, including a manager and agents, will not be duplicated with 'Under Four Flags,' although it was financially successful. It is believed that quicker results can be gained by first showing the picture in the large motion picture theatres, and in that way stirring up popular interest in the surrounding territory, and then releasing it to the exhibitors generally. This will concentrate all exploitation efforts, and enable the Division of Films, in co-operation with the exhibitors, to conduct a centralized, but effective, publicity campaign, that will not be strong in some spots and weak in others, but comprehensively helpful to all concerned. I am glad to say that this plan meets with universal approval, and that, even at this early day, indications point to a most successful campaign for the new Government picture."

S. L. Rothapfel, manager of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, where "Under Four Flags" will have its initial showing, says:

"In booking the new official war picture, I have not considered the financial side at all, but desire to cooperate with the Committee on Public Information and its Division of Films to give the public the greatest war picture that has ever been produced. I intend to contribute my time and the services of my staff, so far as they may be helpful, to assist the Division of Films and its producing department to prepare a pictorialization of America's participation in the war, in conjunction with the Allies, that will not only be splendidly effective from the standpoint of camera art, but which will also register events that will live through all history. There are angles of the war shown in 'Under Four Flags' that have never before been seen on the screen, and a picture of remarkable interest may be looked for with confidence."

War Work Organizations Use Many Pictures

IN THE past year the Y. M. C. A. alone of the agencies joined together for a United War Work Campaign, sent overseas 585 moving picture machines, 261 cases of moving picture parts, and spent $28,285.00. for moving picture films, in addition to huge quantities of foreign film used when the shipping shortage necessitated a curtailment of the American supply for use in France. It was estimated that the Y. M. C. A. movies entertained from 700,000 to 1,000,000 spectators each week. Seventy-five thousand feet, or about fifteen miles of new film are sent out every seven days. These movies are operated not only in England, France and the United States, but also stretch out into the seas, and take in transports, battleships and the like.

Practically all the seven organizations combined for the United Campaign, including the Young Men's Christian Association, Young Women's Christian Association, National Catholic War Council and Knights of Columbus, War Camp Community Service, Jewish Welfare Board, American Library Association and Salvation Army, are contributing in some way toward movie entertainments in camps or camp cities here and in huts overseas.

Vitagraph Officials Back from Trip.

A. W. Goff, assistant general manager of the Vitagraph Distributing Organization, and E. Auger, eastern division manager, have just completed a swing around the eastern circuit, and Mr. Goff is of the opinion that exhibitors are destined to have one of their most prosperous seasons as soon as the theatres are reopened.

"We visited Chicago, Cleveland, Detroit, Cincinnati, New Orleans, Atlanta, Washington and Philadelphia," said Mr. Goff, "and while the theatres were closed in most of these cities, the exhibitors looked at the situation philosophically. They realized that the closing order was a vital necessity in the interest of public welfare, and they are using their time to plan for the future. All of the exhibitors seemed to feel that just as soon as the ban on theatres is lifted that business will be greater than it has ever been before."

Mr. Goff said that the people in the closed sections are eagerly awaiting the reopening of theatres, and that, in his opinion, exhibitors will do bigger business than they ever knew. "People are theatre-hungry," said Mr. Goff. "They never knew before what the motion picture theatre meant in their lives, and they are just as eager to have the ban lifted as are the exhibitors.

Compliment for Zukor.

At a luncheon on October 3, held by members of the motion picture industry of England, in London, Robert P. Skinner, Consul General for the United States, paid remarkable tribute to Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. On this occasion Mr. Skinner turned over to the chairman Mr. Zukor's check for 1,000 pounds for His Majesty King George's Fund for the Disabled, which brought forth the greatest demonstration ever given an American citizen, according to cabled reports.

In his speech Mr. Skinner expressed his pleasure at the fact that the motion picture industry in America has been recognized as a national asset, and hoped the time was near when the British motion picture industry would also be recognized in a similar manner. Through C. A. Clegg, of the Famous Players Film Company, Ltd., London, Mr. Zukor's check was handed to Mr. Skinner.

Universal Sells News Weeklies to Hearst's International

HEARST'S International News last week cleared the last big obstacle from its path in the news pictorial field by purchasing the Animated Weekly and Current Events service from the Universal. The transfer provides that the Hearst International News shall take over the production of the two weeklies, beginning December 24, and that the distribution shall be done through the Universal exchanges. The Animated Weekly and Current Events have long held the highest rank in the news pictorial field. The service literally covers the earth.

Jack Cohn, regarded as the foremost editor of such service and who in point of continuous record, is the oldest news pictorial director in the business, developed the two weeklies from their infancy six years ago to the position they now hold. Mr. Cohn received a flattering offer from Hearst's International News, in connection with the transfer, to join the purchasing organization, but up to now has not decided what his future arrangements will be. It was understood that he might continue with the Universal, and devote his talents to direction of subjects for the Screen Magazine.

The Universal Screen Magazi e will not be affected in any way by the purchase. It is announced that efforts will be made to greatly extend the circulation of this subject. Its character will remain unchanged, except for the natural development of quality. The Screen Magazine is devoted to visualization of educational, industrial and scientific subjects.

The Animated Weekly was established six years ago. Jack Cohn, who joined the service of Carl Laemmle when the latter first entered the film producing business, back in 1909, was placed in charge of the news weekly a year after its beginning. Current Events was founded about two years ago.

Captain Fritz Duquesne in Dutch.

Captain Fritz Joubert Duquesne, at one time interested in film ventures in these parts, has pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with presenting a fraudulent claim for $33,000 against the Stuyvesant Insurance Company of New York, and is awaiting sentence which will be pronounced November 11.

Duquesne, whose right name is said to be Frederic Fredericks, was in the Boer war on the Boer side, and admits having been arrested by the British in Cape Town for conspiracy and spying in 1901. Escaping from prison he came to the United States and got into the film business as a cameraman in 1912. Later he started on a trip through the Amazon wilderness and it was the negative he alleged was taken on this trip that got him into trouble with the insurance company.

Broening Leaves Famous Players.

H. Lyman Broening, for the past five years chief photographer of the Famous Players, is no longer associated with that concern. Mr. Broening has to his photographic credit forty-five feature productions, fifteen of which were with Marguerite Clarke.

This friend brought news of the demise of a celebrated local character, with a record of many close encounters on the streets of the village.

"Listening In" on a Block Party While the Service Flag Passed

FROM Eighth to Ninth avenue the street was a blazing canyon of light and color. "God Bless Our Boys" was done in electric lights in a sign that stretched across the store-front above the speakers' stand. The "Harp of Tara" swung lazily in the breeze beside the Stars and Stripes.

From the front window of a "third floor front" hung the flag of Italy. Bunting ranged in festoons across the street. There were Chinese lanterns, lights and improvised illuminations everywhere.

If you have never wandered, with ears keen for chatter, through the crowds at a block party you've missed a lot. For instance:

"The old neighborhood has never been so gay. Sure its like the Avenoo of the Alleys—only it's all our own."

"There's the Widow Clancy—poor old soul. Only this morning the postman brought back one of her letters to her Danny—unopened. And in ten minutes the War Department message came. But she's game. All she did was to put out more bunting—and change her star to gold."

". . . it finished off like this: 'I opened the window and influenza'."

"There's Kitty Reilly. She's got everything on but the lamp shade."

"Oh, Ma! They say it was the Dutch delercatess what put the bum quarter in the Kaiser's coffin."

"Mrs. Cornelius says her Tony is a grand blessay." "My but she puts it on—only yesterday she told me he was a top sargeant."

". . . the one with the yellow hair? Oh, she just moved in Sunday. The boy that delivers for the Surprise Store says she's a picture actor. . . ." "I'll bet that old woman is her mother, livin' off uv her."

"Oh, gee! Didya hear. The war's over in Belgium. . . ." "You said it."

"My Danny says they dragged the Kaiser through the street today." "We never see anything that goes on, coz we're livin' in the back." "Aint you the joker, stealin' Frank Fogarty's stuff."

"Oh, look-a! Angie Bigelow and Scoots Mulligan dancin'. That's the first time he's had his arm around her since the picnic at the Palisades." "I heard they had a fallin' out." "It was more'n a fallin' out—it was a fallin' in. More like he pushed her off the dock at Hazard's Landin' and wet her hair all through . . . and what she said aint fit for me to tell."

"Old Mike Canavan's easin' himself home I see. He sure lives up to the cash and carry rule—they won't trust him down to the corner, my Danny says . . . so he pays cash and carries it home in him . . . aint you the easy audience!"

"Look at the decoration in Gladys Mullin's bedroom window. She paid the last dollar on that matrass to Cowper'waits only Saturday . . . and now she sticks it in the window for show!"

"Here comes the flag . . . take your hat off, Mally, like your father always told you . . . before he volunteered."

Lieut. Davidson, R. A. F., Receives Rousing Sendoff

IT IS NOT often that a man leaving for overseas gets the sendoff that was accorded Lieut. N. W. Davidson last week. Davidson, before joining the Royal Air Forces, was connected with the Western offices of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., at Montreal. Two weeks ago he received his commission as flight lieutenant, and getting a few days' leave before going overseas he accepted an invitation to come to Montreal and visit L. E. Ouimet. During the week Mr. Ouimet found it necessary to go to New York and took Davidson with him on a visit to the head office of Pathe.

While Davidson was in New York he met another R. A. F. man, who told him that he had just received notice to report back to Toronto, as there was a number of men called to go overseas at once. Davidson, desiring to get into this draft if possible, cut short his trip in New York and rushed back to Toronto. Several men that had been called failed to report on time and Davidson got the chance he wanted—to go overseas at once. He was permitted to proceed to Montreal twenty-four hours ahead of the troop train, which gave him a chance to spend Sunday with Mr. Ouimet.

On Sunday afternoon, October 20, he was invited to the head office of the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., where Mr. Ouimet, on behalf of the company, presented him with a silver identification wristlet and a purse of money which had been subscribed by the head office and exchange employes from all over Canada as a mark of appreciation of his former services and as a token of their personal esteem. On Sunday night a reception was held for Lieut. Davidson, when both the staff and their families had an opportunity of personally conveying their best wishes to their departing fellow worker. Lieut. Davidson was deeply moved by this testimonial to the esteem in which he was held, and in a few words expressed this feeling, saying that though he would soon be widely separated from those present his heart would always be with them, and that his interest in Mr. Ouimet, the Specialty Film and every one of the employes would always continue as strong as if he were with them in body.

Mr. Ouimet, in replying, said that he was proud to know that his company would be represented in the Royal Air Forces by one in whom he had the deepest respect, and that if Lieut. Davidson's conduct in the service of his country was equaled by that given to the Specialty Film Import, Ltd., he would gain high honors. Mr. Ouimet assured him that on his return, whether physically disabled or not, he would find a position for him with his company and that they would all give him a bigger reception when he came back than had been accorded him on his departure.

Lieut. Davidson sailed from an Atlantic port for England.

Fred G. Sliter Selected for Foreign Film Commissioner

FRED G. SLITER, manager of the New York branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed foreign film commissioner by the Committee on Public Information, U. S. Government, and sails early in November for his new post abroad. Mr. Sliter's selection was made after a careful survey of the field of available film men for the important duties which the position involve. His record as an efficient and aggressive exchange manager and his thorough experience in the field of film distribution won him the post. His resignation as branch manager for the Mutual became effective Nov. 1.

Fred G. Sliter.

Mr. Sliter came to New York August 1 of this year as manager of the Mutual Exchange from Albany, where he had been branch manager for two years. He has been in the Mutual organization since 1914, when he became a salesman in the Albany territory. In two years he became the branch manager.

Producers' and Distributors' News

Film Men Talk Big Figures While at Luncheon

IT WAS luncheon time. The place was the Hotel Astor Grill, and you've already guessed that the gathering was composed of film producers, film distributors, confidential advisers and confident critics. Louis B. Mayer, of Boston, was the host, and advice was about the only thing that did not appear on his check. And yet it was the one thing, provided the brand was right, that he would have most gladly paid for.

The topic was Anita Stewart, film star, whom Mayer coralled after one of the bitterest court fights in film history. Countless were the suggestions offered as to how this dainty and very expensive little lady should be exploited, and inexhaustible was Mayer's patience as a listener.

"Honor bright, Louis," said one guest, "what salary are you paying Stewart?" "More money than I once thought was in the whole world," he replied, then added quickly, "but bless her little heart, she's worth it."

"Well, if you are paying her so mueh money, you must have believed her a wonderful box-office attraction in herself. Therefore I can't understand why you deem it necessary to spend a fortune in securing her vehicles. You know today the star is the thing. Nothing else matters. Fans look for the star, not the play. Then why pay $50,000 for 'Old Kentucky,' or a good-sized fortune for 'Virtuous Wives'?"

"You know, Louis," chimed in another, "good direction is always essential, but I believe as Jim does that Miss Stewart is alone sufficient to get the money without paying George Loane Tucker a year's salary every week. A $500 a week director would have served the purpose just as well. And I'll go further and say that you are foolishly spending money in surrounding her with an all-star cast when you could give her a good company without namcs at one-tenth the cost. I think if you keep on you'll go absolutely broke. You seem to have gone wild with your money."

"Well boys," said Mayer, "I appreciate your suggestions, but there is nothing you've said that ehanges my opinion a particle. I not only believe I'm right, but I'll wager that nine out of ten exhibitors in the country will say that I'm right. According to you fellows I should build a half million dollar mansion and furnish it with rag carpets and cheap pine furniture. Wouldn't that be the height of folly? You'd have me set the Kohinoor diamond in brass instead of the most precious metal obtainable. Or you'd spend a fortune on a thoroughbred race horse and mount him with a fifty dollar a week jockey. No, boys, you're wrong.

"When I went looking for plays the priee was the last thing I considered. I wanted something that not only was the goods, but I wanted something that suited Miss Stewart's talent and personality. I think I've found one of these in 'Virtuous Wives.' When I settled the desirablity and suitability of the pipce there was no argument about the price. When I went after 'Old Kentucky,' I bought it and asked the price afterward.

"Now what's the sense of buying beautiful furnishings if you don't have them artistically arranged. That's where my director comes in. That's why George Loane Tucker is going to direct Miss Stewart's productions. And with him my method was the same. I hired him first, then asked him to name the salary.

"Now comes the surrounding company. What would you think of a great mansion finely furnished by a master hand if its grounds were not kept up, if the lawn was scragly and weeds grew where flowers belonged. It would be an eyesore. So it is with Miss Stewart, her play and her director. Her surroundings are going to be in keeping with the whole. That's why I've spared no expense on the supporting company.

"Of eourse I admit that my way may not be orthodox. But it is the difference between the machine-made suit of clothes in a sweatshop and a classy made-to-order garment from a Fifth avenue tailoring establishment. I am not making machine goods. I am building for the exhibitor a made-to-order product. I don't have to rush to get it out on a eertain date. I take my good time in making it right, and then announee the release date. When the exhibitor gets it he knows it's right. Certainly the process is expensive, but so is anything really worth while expensive.

"The exhibitor is mainly interested in two things: Satisfying his patrons and making money. He cannot do either without accomplishing the other. With a Stewart production he is going to do both. And, after all, boys, it's the exhibitor we are all trying to satisfy, and through him the public. I never saw an exhibitor yet who would not pay the price for a real production. And I'm willing in this instance to leave my case with him. Let him render the verdict. And I have no doubt as to the result."

Douglas Fairbanks Appointed National Publicity Promoter

JUST AS Douglas Fairbanks was about to board a train headed for California, after Liberty Loaning in the East to the extent of $7,000,000, John D. Rockefeller, Jr., and the Committee of the United War Work Campaign officially advised the Artcraft star that he had been selected to serve in the eapacity of Speeial National Publicity representative for their big patriotic war charity drive to get $170,500,000 during the week of November 11 to 18. Fairbanks cancelled Pullman reservations and immediately became active with Bruce Barton, chairman of the National Publicity Department, and Elmore G. Leffingwell, directing editor of this war campaign.

After Fairbanks had been in conference with the pubilicity committee, stories were given to the International, Associated and United Press announeing a spectacular coast-t-coast Douglas Fairbanks United War Work tour. This embraces big meetings at the National Capitol, Charlotte, N. C.; Spartansburg, S. C.; Atlanta, Ga.; New Orleans, La.; San Antonio, Tex.; El Paso, Tex.; Tucson, Ariz.; San Francisco and Los Angeles, Cal.

Douglas will address the crowds in the mentioned cities asking them to come across for this Allied War Fund organized at the request of President Wilson, who has already supplied the screen aetor with a message to the people of America, explaining why it is essential that this big war drive go "over the top."

The co-operating organizations who will benefit from this drive include the National War Work Council, the Y. M. C. A., the War Camp Community Fund, War Work Council, the Y. M. C. A., Salvation Army, National Catholic War Council (K. of C.), Jewish Welfare Board and American Library Association.

"Everybody's Girl" Released November 11.

"Everybody's Girl," a Blue Ribbon feature starring Alice Joyce, will be the Vitagraph release for the week of November 11. It is an adaptation from an O. Henry story, "Brick Dust Row," and was directed by Tom Terriss. This is the first of eight productions in which Miss Joyce will be presented during the current year, and it is declared to be one of the most human and appealing stories in which this star has been seen in many months. Other Blue Ribbon features in whieh she will be seen are "The Cambric Mask," "The Lion and the Mouse" and "The Captain's Captain."

In addition to having a plot of unusual strength and originality, "Everybody's Girl" has in it a strong eomedy vein, and the role portrayed by Miss Joyce is a eombination of pathos and humor. There are also some fine dramatic highlights, Miss Joyce leaping from the upper deck of a Coney Island excursion steamer during a fire panic on board the ship. Another striking situation is a revolver duel between two gunmen.

Pathe "Winning the War" Series.

Arrangements were made some time ago by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, with Pathe for a production of a series of one-reel pictures from scenarios furnished by the committee to be known as "Winning the War" series, showing the tremendous home aetivities directed to this purpose. The first of the series is scheduled for release the week of November 10, and is called "The United States Boys' Working Reserve Solves the Great Farm Problem." The spirit that animates these youngsters is clearly apparent—they work with a will, with enthusiasm and with the plain determination not only merely to fill the job, but to do it in such a way as to accomplish the highest production.

"Our Colored Fighters" in Demand.

Henry F. Downing, director of the Downing Film Company, which has taken over the distribution of "Our Colored Fighters," the picture that the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, has produced to show the participation of the negro soldier in the war, announces from his office in the Astor Theatre Building that colored churches and social organizations of colored people throughout the United States are taking a keen interest in the showing of the new picture, and that the original number of prints will have to be increased to meet the demand.

Carl Laemmle Back from Universal City

CARL LAEMMLE, president of the Universal, brought to New York a report of good things at Universal City on his return from the Coast. He declared that aside from the difficulties caused by the shutdown of production and releasing, conditions at the studios were better than they had ever been before. Mr. Laemmle reached Universal City just before the curtailment order was issued and remained there three weeks.

He witnessed runs of films recently completed and inspected the Universal ranch inside out. Incidentally, Mr. Laemmle witnessed a fire that for a short time threatened to wipe out the settlement.

The blaze occurred in the open fields just back of the Universal ranch and crept to within two hundred feet of the buildings. Harry Carey, star of Universal, at the head of a dozen or more darling horsemen of his company, rode out against the blaze, dragging blankets in the approved fashion of prairie firefighters.

Mr. Laemmle, meantime, helped to direct precautionary measures for the defense of the ranch. The blaze was extinguished after about two hours, and sentinels were placed to guard against a recurrence of trouble.

Reviewing the general conditions of the Universal's western organization, Mr. Laemmle talked in the most optimistic vein.

"Everything is all right," he said. "The shutdown will do no harm. Our ranch would have had to close up even if the general order to do so hadn't come, on account of the many cases of illness among our forces.

"When production is resumed to its full extent, it will be found that the efficiency has not been impaired. I was delighted beyond measure with the output of films completed just before the shutdown. They were the best pictures I had ever seen."

Mr. Laemmle spoke enthusiastically over one particular film that stood out among the rest. It was a war drama featuring Dorothy Phillips.

"I sat through fifteen reels of this picture," said Mr. Laemmle, "and I could have sat through fifteen more reels with pleasure. It will be a terrible job to cut the production down to eight or nine reels, as will have to be done."

The picture in question has not been definitely named as yet, but is identified for the present by the suggested titles, "Until We Meet Again" or "Carry On."

Sawyer Announces First Ralph Ince Film.

Arthur H. Sawyer, who has entire charge of the production of the first Ralph Ince film attraction, announces that work is rapidly being finished on the first picture. Interviewed recently on the subject of the forthcoming production, Mr. Sawyer said: "The scenario from which our first big feature is being produced was written by Roy L. McCardell, in pursuance of our insistent effort to leave nothing to chance. Both Mr. McCardell and Mr. Ince are enthusiastic in the praise of the story chosen, and I personally feel that it is one of the biggest themes yet presented on the screen. We have a big story, a big star, an all-star cast, and that, together with Mr. Ince, who is considered one of the biggest directors in the business, assures the exhibitors big box-office attractions."

Miss Dean Renews Contract.

Announcement has just been issued by the Universal that a contract has been made with Priscilla Dean by which this young star is re-engaged for a year dating from January 1, 1919. This news is simultaneous with a report that the story, "Raggedy Ann," by Charles W. Tyler, which appeared recently in the Detective Story Magazine, has been purchased as a fortheoming vehicle for Miss Dean. The story is an unusually dramatic one, in which the heroine is cast as a dashing, daring creature, the daughter of a notorious crook.

Miss Dean's most recent produetions were charged with episodes of action in which the young woman performs prodigies of wild temperament. Her latest picture is "The Wildcat of Paris." She takes the role of an underworld queen in Paris who leads the Apaches against the Hun invaders.

Other recent subjects featuring Miss Dean, all of which have attracted wide interest, are "The Velvet Hand," "The Brazen Beauty" and "Miss Doris, Safe Cracker," the latter of which will soon be released.

First U. S. A. Series to Be Released Dec. 9.

"When Your Soldier's Hit," the first of the twelve two-reel war activity pictures announced by Director Chas. S. Hart, of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, will be released December 9. The second picture, "The Bath of Bullets," will be released December 23. This new and interesting contribution to the history of the war in films will carry the general title, "The U. S. A. Series." They will be distributed by the World Film Corporation, which is now marketing "America's Answer," and is arranging to distribute "Under Four Flags," the third U. S. official war feature picture. The other pictures in the "U. S. A. Series" will be released at semi-monthly periods.

The twelve pictures are based on subjects in which there is considerable public interest, but which have hitherto not been filmed. "When Your Soldier's Hit" shows a phase of hospital work—that immediately behind the fighters in the field—that has never been seen in pictures. The second release, "The Bath of Bullets," which shows the actual use of machine guns and bombs in battle, is also a novelty. All of the series, it is declared, have an unusual punch.

Sol. Lesser Gets Official Film for California

Sol. L. Lesser, chairman Division of United States Official War Films of the California State Council for Defense, will handle the distribution of "Under Four Flags," the third war feature picture of the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information. Mr. Lesser has also handled the California distribution for "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer," the first two war pictures in the Government's "Following the Flag to France" series. The World Film Corporation, which handles the general distribution of "America's Answer" and "Under Four Flags," exempts California, Michigan, outside of Detroit, which is under the direction of the Michigan War Preparedness Board at Lansing, and North Dakota, which is handled by the North Dakota Council for Defense at Bismarck.

Caruso Debut November 10.

The screen debut of Enrico Caruso will be the outstanding feature of the resumption of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation's release schedule November 10, and it is an interesting coincidence that the revised schedule calls for the initial public showing of his first Artcraft picture, "My Cousin," at practically the same time that the great tenor embarks upon his sixteenth season at the Metropolitan Opera House. Other productions scheduled for release the same day are Billie Burke's newest Paramount picture, "The Make-Believe Wife," and Bryant Washburn's first Paramount offering, "The Gypsy Trail."

Brockliss to Export Metro.

Sidney Garrett, president of J. Frank Brockliss, Inc., wishes to announce that the Export & Import Company control the Metro subjects for the whole of continental Europe, Brazil and Argentine, and all communications for those territories should be addressed to them.

Big Salvation Army Film To Be Produced

NEGOTIATIONS were closed last week between Jesse L. Lasky, vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and Evangeline Booth, representing the Salvation Army, for the filming of a motion picture telling the story of the Salvation Army both in war and peace.

The story of the motion picture finds its basis in historical truth and in recently developed facts, which reveal the Salvation Army as perhaps the most popular war-work organization of which American troops have any knowledge and as a body of men and women who serve without selfish views or considerations.

In the production of this film the Famous-Players-Lasky organization will have the full cooperation of the Salvation Army. Commander Booth herself will appear in the picture as she discharged her regular daily duties, and the story will be filled with the due reverence and profound respect the subject calls for.

Work on the film will be commenced in the near future, upon the termination of the present period of inactivity agreed upon by practically all of the film producers as a result of the influenza epidemic. The picture will be started in New York and finished at the Hollywood, California, studios of the producers.

Goldwyn Releases Listed for Nov. 17 Opening

Goldwyn has found a way of tremendously stimulating the business of the nation's motion picture theatres upon the reopening of activities. Announcement of new releases by Goldwyn, beginning November 17, reveals that a second big production of Geraldine Farrar's and a second Rex Beach production of tremendous importance and timeliness are scheduled for release only two weeks apart. Two productions of such powerful box-office calibre are certain to prove effective in again restoring theatre patronage to high-tide proportions in all localities. The new release dates and the productions and stars scheduled are:

November 17: Tom Moore in "Thirty a Week," by Thompson Buchanan; directed by Harry Beaumont.

November 24: Mabel Normand in "A Perfect 36," by Tex Charwate; directed by Charles Giblyn.

December 1: Geraldine Farrar in "The Hell Cat," by Willard Mack; directed by Reginald Barker.

December 8: Madge Kennedy in "A Perfect Lady," by Channing Pollck and Rennold Wolf; directed by Clarence G. Badger.

"City Saints and Country Sinners."

World Pictures has purchased from Forrest Halsey an original story which will have for its working title "City Saints and Country Sinners." It will be put in work at the World studio at Fort Lee when work is resumed at the termination of the present shutdown. Mr. Halsey has in his story reversed the usual accepted idea that the city is populated with sinners, and that right living can only be found in the rural sections. On this thesis he has created what is expected to be a picture out of the ordinary.

Maurice Tourneur to Make Pictures in California

MAURICE TOURNEUR has just announced his intention of going to California for the winter, making his next three or four productions on the Coast. Mr. Tourneur will leave with his staff immediately after completing "My Lady's Garter," the adaptation of the late Jacques Futrelles' detective mystery romance now in course of filming.

It will be the well-known director's first visit to the Coast. Mr. Tourneur has been producing in America for four years, all of his activities having been confined to the East.

"I am not making the trip particularly on account of unfavorable conditions," says Mr. Tourneur. "I want to work on bigger subjects in a bigger way. While I have been quite satisfied with the results so far, I have always felt cramped. I've wanted space and atmosphere. I feel that California will give me these things. And I am going to do the biggest things of my career out there."

Mr. Tourneur has not decided definitely upon his next production. Since launching Maurice Tourneur Productions, Inc., the director has produced three offerings, the Drury Lane melodrama, "Sporting Life," the distribution rights of which were immediately purchased by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; "Woman," and "My Lady's Garter," now nearing completion. Each has been widely different from its predecessors, and the next production, it is said, will be totally different from anything he has yet done.

Will Show "Cannibal" Film at Hotel Astor November 19

FOLLOWING the announcement that New York rights to the Martin Johnson film, "Cannibals of the South Seas," had been sold to First National Exchange the Robertson-Cole Company, which controls the world rights, has arranged for a trade showing in the ballroom of the Hotel Astor, New York, Tuesday evening, November 19.

The entire ten thousand feet of film selected from 50,000 feet of negative secured by Mr. Johnson on his famous trip through the Solomon and New Hebrides Islands will be shown, and a demonstration given as to how this attraction can be handled in a big way.

Some of the pictures were shown several weeks ago at the Rivoli Theatre, and proved a decided hit. Manager Rothapfel commended Mr. Johnson for his decision to issue these pictures as a feature instead of serially, and states that they should be welcomed by exhibitors as a break in the routine of dramatic and comedy features, and says, "The possibilities that lend themselves for both publicity and general interest have not been surpassed by any offering in the past year."

Mr. Johnson's lecture has been incorporated into the production as explanatory and humorous subtitles, and the film tells a complete story of the trip of Mr. and Mrs. Johnson from the time they left San Francisco to their escape from Chief Nagapate, after they very nearly lost their lives. After reaching the Solomon Islands adventure followed adventure in rapid succession. Many natives were found who are said to have never seen a white man before, including a tribe of pygmies.

At the showing there will be exhibited many curios secured on the trip, including strange idols, poisoned arrows, and arrow points made from human bones. The musical program will be under the personal supervision of George W. Beynon, one of the best known composers of music for pictures, who has arranged special music for this production.

Several Territories Sold on Latest Pioneer Film

PIONEER FILM CORPORATION announces that territory for "Wives of Men" is selling fast, and it looks as if this attraction, with Florence Reed starring in one of her greatest roles, will prove a sensation from the box office standpoint.

Herman Rifkin, of the Eastern Feature Film Company, of Boston, has not only purchased the New England rights for "Wives of Men," but for "The Still Alarm" as well; Maurice Less, of the Lyric Film and Supply Co., bought the Indiana rights, and Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, of Detroit, the Michigan rights for "Wives of Men," while the Strand Features, of Detroit, has purchased the rights to the same territory for "The Still Alarm."

"Wives of Men" is said to have been a big success wherever shown. During the past week it was presented on the Loew Circuit in New York City, repeating the business done when presented at the Casino Theatre, one of Broadway's largest playhouses.

The territory still open is being rapidly disposed of by the Pioneer Film Corporation, of 130 West 46th street, and Nathan Hirsh, president of that company, says that within a very short time he will have closed deals which will permit exhibitors all over the country to book this attraction.

New York Papers Praise Latest Tourneur Picture

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S second independent production, "Woman," which had its premiere during the past week at the New York Rivoli Theatre, was highly praised by the metropolitan newspapers. The Sun remarked that it is artistic and spirited, while the American states it is filled with beauty and poetry.

The Times says: "The ability of Maurice Tourneur to create pictures, not just single scenes without meaning or connection, but eloquent, beautiful pictures in motion that make a poetic story come true for the time being, has never revealed itself more fully than in 'Woman.' The applause of the spectators indicated that they had been caught by Mr. Tourneur's magic and held by his subtle spell." The Globe stated: "All of the episodes are steeped in poetry, and the haunting little story of Cyrene and the fisherman is perhaps the loveliest thing of its kind over done on the screen."

"The picture abounds in beautiful scenes," says the Evening Post. "In the novelty of its subject, the composition of its scenes, and the exquisite artistry with which the plot is unfolded, the picture promises to create much laudatory comment," says the Journal, while the Mail says: "It ought to be housed in a theatre where it could be shown continuously until every devotee of the screen drama has had the opportunity to see it."

"Woman" was presented at the Rivoli, and had special stage setting. The entire Rivoli program, except for the Creel Committee War Pictures, was devoted to "Woman," which is presented in a prologue, five episodes and an epilogue.

Manager Rothapfel stated: "It is not often that I permit myself to become enthusiastic to the extent of endorsing a film production, but the beauty and the novelty of Mr. Maurice Tourner's 'Woman' compel me to proclaim it one of the most remarkable motion pictures I have ever seen." The release of "Woman" and other Tourneur productions is in the hands of Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

"Little Women" Booked for Strand.

By an arrangement just effected, William A. Brady's picturization of "Little Women" will be presented for the first time on any screen at the Strand the week beginning Sunday, November 10.

Harley Knoles directed the production of this well-known Louisa M. Alcott story, which is said to be peculiarly adapted for successful presentation on the screen, as it is one of the most appealing stories ever written—rich in sentiment, humor and quaint charm, and possessing rare pictorial values. "Little Women" has for forty years been read and loved the world over.

Arrow Reissues "$20,000,000 Mystery."

After a quiet canvass among state rights exchanges the Arrow Film Corporation has determined to reissue in ten two-reel episodes "The Twenty Million Dollar Mystery."

The recutting and re-editing is in the hands of Jesse J. Goldburg, and it is expected that the work will be completed and the first episode ready for delivery about December.

The production will be state righted upon a basis which calls for the delivery of a minimum number of prints instead of a maximum number, the production being sold on the basis of payment for the rights instead of on a footage basis.

"Twilight" Is Next Doris Kenyon Film.

Doris Kenyon, who has just completed her latest picture, "Wild Honey," is awaiting the lifting of the influenza ban to start work on another production. Miss Kenyon and her company will go to Hendersonville, N. C., where exteriors will be made on "Twilight," by the same authors as "Wild Honey." Vingie E. Roe wrote the story, which originally appeared in the Metropolitan Magazine under the title of "The Alchemy of Love." The screen adaptation is the work of Louis Joseph Vance, writer of many well known books, plays and motion picture features.

Olga Petrova to Return to Screen.

Following the statement made some time ago by Petrova Pictures Company that Madame Olga Petrova would, after the presentation of her fifth picture, "The Panther Woman," return to the speaking stage, it is announced that during the early part of 1919 she will again appear in motion pictures.

The Fox Exchange staff is back on the job, after considerable illness from grip. Harry Campbell has reorganized his staff, and is now doing a great business throughout New England. Mr. Campbell's staff is as follows: C. H. Phillips, Western Massachusetts and Connecticut; M. L. Eberstein, Rhode Island and Southern Massachusetts; Maine, A. F. Walters; Harold Eskin, New Hampshire and Vermont; F. W. McKay, Boston; William De Wolf, feature productions; Charles Dempsey and William Taylor in advance of "Salome."

United Theatres Reports Many Sales.

The United Theatre Equipment Company reports a big business following the closing of the theatres during the grip epidemic. The closing of the houses caused many changes to be made and the installation of new equipment. The company has installed two Power's 6-B motor driven machines, a Power's dissolving stereopticon and a Gardiner velvet screen at the new Strand Theatre in Dorchester, which is to open soon. The Strand Theatre at Taunton, which opens this week, has two new Power's 6-B motor driven machines, with a Hallberg generator. The Opera House at Hudson, Mass., has a new Power's 6-A machine. Philips Academy has a new Power's machine and booth. The Shawmut Theatre in Roxbury has installed a Gardiner velvet screen. The Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston have installed new gold fibre velvet screens.

Star Takes Over the Empire Theatre.

Chelsea, Mass.—The Star Photo Company, of Boston, has bought the Empire moving picture theatre at Chelsea square, and has begun a complete reconstruction of the place, which has been closed for several months. It will be reopened about December 1 as a first class house. Benjamin H. Green, of East Boston, a member of the company, will become manager of the theatre, and will show only high class photoplays.

The auditorium is to be completely renovated and connected with the balcony, providing additional exits. The interior will be redecorated, and a new entrance built. The proscenium arch will be artistically ornamented, and a $10,000 organ installed, together with new lighting fixtures. The seating capacity of the house is 1,500.

Cleveland Trade Letter

Cleveland Theatres Net Big Bond Sales.

CLEVELAND picture theatres were instrumental in selling a big batch of Fourth Liberty Bonds, in spite of the fact that they were closed the last week of the loan campaign.

According to the reports of the committee, $30,900 worth of bonds were sold in the Metropolitan, Alhambra, Monarch, Knickerbocker and Liberty theatres, all neighborhood houses, while $50,850 worth were sold in the Stillman and Strand theatres, downtown.

Manager Kuhn, of the Stillman, claims, however, that in his house alone $62,000 worth were sold in four nights.

Manager Grossman, of the Standard Theatre, conducted the sale of bonds to film exchanges and employes and reports that about $75,000 worth were sold.

The Mall and Alhambra theatres each bought $5,000 worth of bonds, outside of the subscriptions of the owners and employes and in addition to the bonds sold to patrons.

Mooney Goes to Fox's Los Angeles Office.

Paul C. Mooney, for several years district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, with Cleveland as his headquarters, left, October 25, for Los Angeles, where he will be district manager for Fox, in charge of the Pacific Coast exchanges. Mr. Mooney was accompanied by his family and expects to make the West his future home.

Clayton Sheehan, brother of General Manager W. R. Sheehan, has arrived in Cleveland to assume Mr. Mooney's duties. His district has been split up, so that Mr. Sheehan has Cleveland, Detroit, Buffalo and Pittsburgh under his supervision, while Cincinnati, Indianapolis and St. Louis will be under the direction of J. R. Grainger, whose headquarters will be in Cincinnati or St. Louis.

Mr. Mooney was presented with handsome remembrances from the Fox office force in Cleveland, and also by his friends among the exhibitors and exchanges of that city.

Exchanges to Ship Films via Erie Express.

As a result of alleged poor service over the messenger route between Cleveland, Niles, Warren, Struthers, Girard, Hubbard, Lowelville and Youngstown, Cleveland film exchange managers have decided to abandon it, rearrange their bookings, and ship all films to these towns via the Erie Railroad express.

A representative of the Board of Motion Picture Exchange Managers of the Chamber of Commerce, in commenting on this action, said:

"Apparently no attention has been given to numerous complaints of the exchanges regarding return shipments of films, and consequently aggregate losses of thousands of dollars have been sustained by the exchanges. This course has been forced upon the exchanges, since ample opportunity has been given for bringing the service up to par."

Cleveland Exhibitors Make Comedies.

Cleveland exhibitors are spending their time now making a series of comedies, the stories of which would make any film man laugh. For instance, Dave Adler, of the Strand, was the chief actor in "How I Won Some Liberty Bonds." His wife played opposite him. Joe Deutsch appeared in a single reel, "My $1,800." Lou Gieger made a two-reeler, "Keeping the Wolf Away from Charlie," and Mark Greenbaum has a fine little half-reel to tell about called "A Charnas Bankroll." Herman Garfield appeared in "African Golf," and another clever comedy was Dave Schuman's "Too Many I. O. U.'s."

Franklin on the Closing Order.

HAROLD B. FRANKLIN, manager of Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo's palatial picture theatre, gave out an interesting interview on closing rule: "Personally, I believe that so far as the epidemic is concerned, people would be just as safe in a modern, first-class theatre building as they would be in their own homes. Certainly the ventilation is better than in the average home. Fresh air, coming in at the floor of our theatre, forces the stale air out through the openings in the roof and completely changes the air every three to four minutes. However, although our opinions have differed from those of the board of health, we have cheerfully complied with the closing order. In dealing with so serious a problem as the health of our neighbors and fellow citizens, we would much prefer to let the health authorities take the responsibility and follow their instructions implicitly."

Private Presentation of "My Cousin."

At a private presentation of Enrico Caruso's first Artcraft production, "My Cousin," recently presented at Shea's Hippodrome, Buffalo, Mr. Caruso appeared in person. The guests present were loud in their praise, for this production promises to be one of the successes of the year.

Walter P. Cook, chairman of the Buffalo Liberty Loan Committee, was loud in his praise for Mr. Caruso.

Governor Whitman, who also honored the guests with his presence, spoke enthusiastically of Mr. Caruso as a true patriot.

R. C. Fox, manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Buffalo, is to be congratulated for his untiring efforts. The appearance of Mr. Caruso was a huge success, the biggest of scoops in Buffalo's filmdom.

It is said the Buffalo Liberty Loan Committee intend presenting Mr. Caruso with a handsome gold match case showing their appreciation.

Mr. Caruso sang "Victory, Victory," composed by his wife, also "Over There" in English and Italian.

SUGGESTS REDUCTION IN THEATRE RENT

Manitoba Official Proposes That Owners Agree to a Fifty-fifty Rental Proposition During Ban Period

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

MANITOBA and Winnipeg officials were not long in offering their aid to both theatre and exchange employes who might become distressed during the enforced lay-off in Winnipeg, Brandon and Portage la Prairie, the three centres of Manitoba. Edward Brown, the provincial treasurer, also came out with a suggestion to the landlords of various theatres that they agree to accept a fifty-fifty proposition for their rent during the period that the houses are dark. He pointed out that a rather stiff rent is charged for theatres and that the theatre owners should be the first to grant a concession at this time. The heavy rent detail was one which would hasten the reopening of the theatres, he believed.

Controller Grey, of the City of Winnipeg, who is a candidate for the mayoralty, made himself a champion of the theatre and exchange employes. After calling a conference of interested representatives, he announced that the theatre closing would not be delayed longer than necessary. It is estimated that five hundred people have been thrown out of employment by the closing of Winnipeg theatres. In a number of cases, wood has been supplied from the municipal yards to heat the homes of theatre employes who have been hard hit.

Did Not Discharge a Single Employe.

L. Ernest Ouimet, president and general manager of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Montreal, and other cities of Canada, has announced that all employes of the six branches of his company were not placed on half salary, although other Canadian exchanges took the step. He also announces that he has not laid off or discharged one employe during the closing period.

In a general letter to the trade in Canada, Mr. Ouimet asks all moving picture managers and employes to make it their business to get out and hustle for the Fifth Victory Loan, the campaign for which was started on October 28. "Each one of my branch managers has been instructed to offer the services of his entire staff to the Government from October 28 to November 16," declared Mr. Ouimet, who controls the distribution in Canada of Pathe and official British Government releases. "If you and I cannot subscribe to this loan as liberally as we had planned on account of the upper-cut handed to us by the influenza epidemic, we can at least give our full support and co-operation."

Mr. Ouimet describes the plague as ten per cent. disease and ninety per cent. fear. The theatres and exchanges are closed, and the duties of employes are reduced to a minimum. "But this is no reason why you should remain idle," declares Mr. Ouimet. "Idleness breeds discontent."

Vaudeville License Necessary.

Magistrate Cohen, of the Toronto Police Court, has decided that the presentation of vaudeville in a moving picture theatre can only be done after a vaudeville license has been taken out at the City Licensc Department—in addition to the Provincial license. According to evidence in the police court, the difference in the cost of a license which gave the privilege of staging vaudeville is $50.

The question arose in connection with the prosecution of L. Feighien, manager of the Eclipse Theatre, 387 Parliament street, on the charge that he presented vaudeville at his theatre with only a moving picture theatre license, which allows only two short acts of vaudeville as a part of the regular picture program.

The offence in question occurred when a company of returned soldiers put on a whole performance for two evenings, and only a small percentage of the receipts went to the exhibitor, the remainder being used for patriotic purposes. When this was explained by Louis Heyd, K. C., counsel for the defence, Inspector McKinney, of the Police Department, announced that a fine was not wanted.

Mr. Feighien swore that he had nothing to do with the show, as the returned soldiers had conducted the whole performance themselves. The case was remanded until called on, which practically means an unregistered conviction.

"If this money did not go for patriotic purposes it is a serious offence," declared the magistrate.

Not Worried Over Stopping of Production.

Canadian exchange officials refused to do any worrying about the decision of many producing companies in the United States not to release any new photoplays for four weeks. Announcement was immediately made by a number of Canadian distributors that they had sufficient new stock on hand to supply all demands until new relcases could be obtained from the United States—regardless of whether any Canadian theatres were closed or not. Practically all houses in Canada were closed by the health officers, however, and the situation remained practically the same as before.

Exchange officials anticipated that Canadian theatres would be closed about two weeks on the average, and this would leave two wecks during which considerable of the excess new prints could be put to use before new releases would be arriving from the States.

Jack Holmes Lennon Killed.

Jack Holmes Lennon, aged seven years, only child of F. R. Lennon, was killed on Saturday afternoon, October 26, at Elizabeth and Albert streets, Toronto, when he dashed in front of an automobile. Mr. Lennon is vice-president of the Exhibitors' Distributing Corporation, of Toronto, and was Ontario manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company for many years. The driver of the automobile was detained after the accident, and an inquest was held on Monday evening, October 28.

Universal's Service Flag Has 21 Stars.

The honor roll of the Canadian Universal Film Company bears twenty-one names, of whom twelve were former employes of the head office at Toronto. Five enlisted in the Canadian Army from the Calgary branch, while three enlisted from the Vancouver office. The Montreal office supplied two men for the big fight.

Only one of the twenty-one former employes has been killed, this being Edward Morris, of the Toronto office.

Everything Ready for Reopening St. Denis.

During the closing period for all theatres in Montreal, arrangements were completed for the reopening of the St. Denis Theatre, controlled by N. L. Nathanson, of Toronto, which had been dark since last May. The big theatre, the largest one in Canada presenting pictures exclusively, is now on U. B. O. time, and the policy of the house will be to give a feature picture, two film comedies and five acts of vaudeville. The program will be presented on the continuous system from 1 p. m. to 11 p. m. daily, including Sundays. The general admission will be 25 cents.

The reopening of the theatre was brought about by Fred Crow, who was the general representative of the Canadian United Theatres in Montreal for six years. He will be the manager of the St. Denis for the present, but he intends to organize a circuit of theatres in Ontario and Quebec for U. B. O. booking. The opening of the St. Denis really means the birth of a new vaudeville-picture circuit in Eastern Canada. The theatre was scheduled to reopen its doors on October 28, but the opening was delayed because of the continued enforcement by the civic authorities of the health closing order.

Wolf Improves His Victoria Theatre.

EDGAR WOLF, manager of the Victoria Theatre, at Ninth and Market streets, displayed a considerable amount of tact as a leader among his employes so far as work was concerned. He not only set a good example by starting the various jobs about the house himself, but he secured the maximum amount of work that could be accomplished during the three weeks the theatre was closed and consequently was able to make all the necessary improvements to put his house in a first class condition.

Prince Returns to the Picture Field.

A. Prince, one of the pioneer film men of this city and former proprietor of the Prince Film Company, has returned in the field again after an absence of over two years, during which time he was engaged in another enterprise. He has made his headquarters with the Masterpiece Film Attractions.

Charles Segall of the Apollo Theatre has renovated his theatre and added many improvements.

Nashman Goldberg Dies.

NASHMAN GOLDBERG, 38 years old, a brother of Thomas D. Goldberg, manager of the Walbrook Theatre, 3100 West North avenue, died from pneumonia, following influenza, on Wednesday, October 23, at his home, 2551 Madison avenue.

Pelsweig Leaves Universal.

Simon Pelsweig, who for a year has been associated with the Universal Film Company as a salesman working out of the Baltimore exchange, of which P. Oletzky is the manager, has resigned. Mr. Pelsweig has been in the film business for some time. He also represented Universal in Philadelphia, to which city he is now going to join the forces of Armour & Company.

Piloting Victoria.

Charles Nirdlinger, an uncle of Fred G. Nixon-Nirdlinger, is now attending to the management of Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street. Abe Seligman, the former popular manager of this playhouse, is now in Uncle Sam's fighting forces.

Lose Four Operators.

During the influenza epidemic in Baltimore four operators of the Baltimore Local No. 181 died from various causes. They were John Reid, who was employed at the Red Moon before it closed, and after that at the Patterson Theatre in Highlandtown; Elmer Clark, of the Peabody; Frank Lewis, of Nixon's Victoria, all having been men with ten years' operating experience, and David Seaman, of the Walbrook Theatre, who had been in the business for five years. So far as can be learned the managers of moving picture theatres in Baltimore were very fortunate, as only a few were sick with the malady, and there were no casualties.

Schneider-Steil.

Edwin Schneider, son of George Schneider, the former manager of the Garden Theatre, Lexington street, near Park avenue, and now associated with Tom Moore in Washington, D. C., was married to Miss Marguerite Steil on Wednesday, October 16, at the Cardinal's residence by the Rev. Father O'Donovan.

WORLD MAN PAYS CHILLICOTHE A VISIT

Finds the People of That City Anxious for Amusement—Prominent Exhibitors Entertain Him

Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

WITH the theatres and other forms of amusement taboo in Dayton there was nothing of interest to take up one's time, and therefore the writer found himself one day last week at Chillicothe, Ohio.

Although the theatres were also closed in "Chilly," my arrival there was welcomed by Elmer Redelle and Martin G. Chandler, who saw to it that nothing was left undone to make my stay interesting. The Sherman Theatre opened recently with the Fox film, "Salome," to very good business. The Sherman also books in "legitimate" attractions when possible, for Chillicothe is hungry for amusement, and localities flock to any kind of entertainment. The Majestic Theatre presents a very inviting appearance, after having thousands of dollars spent on its remodeling. It had been opened only a few days, when the influenza epidemic spoiled all dreams of holding a performance for some time.

The Sherman a House of Beauty.

The writer spent some time with Elmer Redelle, of the Sherman, and that theatre is all that could be expected, and very beautiful to say the least. Elmer stated that business during the few days that the house was open was very good. Charley Smith has purchased a new four thousand dollar limousine. Charley manages the Star and Queen theatres (side by each), and is reaping in the "kale" without reserve.

Hears Intricacies of Soldier Life.

After having visited the city managers, Ollie Brooks, formerly with John Kunsky in Detroit, and who now manages the Liberty Theatre at Camp Sherman, entertained me in a very delightful manner, and explained the intricacies of soldier life in such a way that it seemed a simple feat to speak knowingly with terms military. Mr. Brooks—I mean Lieutenant Brooks—explained that he had managed a theatre in Auburn, New York, when Mark Gates, managing director of the Dayton Theatre at Dayton, was treasurer for the Shuberts. The Liberty Theatre opened October 26, with a big celebration marking the lifting of the camp quarantine. Lieutenant Brooks is to stay at the camp for the duration of the war.

All in all, Chillicothe, theatrically speaking, has improved, and the situation there is well taken care of.

Theatres Brighten Up During Closing Period.

DURING the enforced closing of all theatres and public gathering places as a result of the influenza epidemic, the managers of the Majestic Theatre at Evansville, Ind., are superintending a complete overhauling and redecorating of this popular motion picture and vaudeville house. The new decorations are of the most attractive and artistic character and furnish a beautiful setting for the stage. The carpets and curtains have been cleaned and the woodwork on the inside freshly painted and varnished. The work is progressing rapidly.

As a result of the temporary closing order of the state board of health, necessitating the discontinuance of all amusement enterprises, the management of the La Salle Theatre, at South Bend, Ind., has used the closing period as an opportunity to make the theatre more attractive than ever. Not only have excellent programs been booked for showing as soon as the ban is lifted but plans have been completed for the further beautifying of this cozy, ground-floor photoplay house. An elaborate system of floral decorations is being worked out, and in the near future handsome boxes and trellis effects with blooming flowers and entwined foliage will be installed on the side walls.

Clyde Williams, manager of the Paramount Theatre at Rochester, Ind., has taken advantage of the influenza closing order by having a number of improvements made in the front and interior of the theatre. The improvements will be completed before the closing order is rescinded, he said.

Atlanta News Letter

By Linton K. Starr, the Atlanta Journal, Atlanta, Ga.

Bourgeois Survives "Otranto" Disaster.

OXFORD KNOX BOURGEOIS, familiarly known to the local film fraternity as "O. K.," and one of the most popular young men in the game here previous to entering the military service, was named as one of the city's five survivors who escaped death when the transport "Otranto" sunk near the Scottish coast early in October after colliding with the steamship "Kashmir," according to an official announcement issued by the war department.

Mr. Bourgeois has been an active figure in the Atlanta exchange field for several years past. After long service as chief booking clerk with the United Film Company, an independent distributing organization headed by R. M. Savini, Mr. Bourgeois later organized an exchange of his own under the title of the Atlanta Film Company and as president and general manager successfully served exhibitors of the southeast for a year or more. Before donning Uncle Sam's uniform in July, he had held executive positions with the local World and Mutual offices.

Mr. Bourgeois is attached to a unit of the coast artillery corps and had trained at Fort Screven, Tenn. His wife, whom he married during the latter part of 1917, is at present connected with the Red Cross here. Mrs. Bourgeois has received cable advices from her husband stating that he has safely reached an English port.

Sam Denbow on the Job Again.

After successfully withstanding an attack of Spanish influenza, Sam Denbow, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Camp Gordon, is back at his desk again after several weeks spent at a cantonment hospital. Mr. Denbow formerly held the positions of manager of the World and Fox offices here.

Halifax Theatre Notes.

The Strand has been newly decorated throughout in a color scheme of French blue with touches of gold and pink shading to terra cotta.

The Imperial Theatre has also been done over, gold and terra cotta being used here with good effect.

At the Orpheus the decorations are being completed, the work of alteration not having been quite finished.

The Gaiety Theatre, which was formerly called the Empire, now under the management of M. Bernstein, is to be decorated in blue and pink. It is to have the largest stage in Halifax, the proscenium opening being 22x26. There are six modernly appointed dressing rooms and 100 new seats have been added. All new light fixtures have been installed. The proscenium is bricked to the stage level in accordance with the city fire regulations and is finished above with steel metal lathe and plaster.

TEXANS ARE NOW PICTURE HUNGRY

Exhibitors Preparing for Great Influx of Show Patronage When Quarantine Rules Are Lifted

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

THE public of Texas is absolutely film hungry owing to the three weeks' of influenza quarantine, and, with the lifting of the rules, which will probably be effective in all sections of the Southwest early in November, exhibitors are preparing for the greatest rush of show patronage in history.

Film exchanges, daily papers and theatre managers are besieged with requests as to when the quarantine will be lifted and as to details of releases which can be expected when the theatres open.

"I don't believe the closing of the theatres has done much harm," says Jimmy Kelly, of the General Film Company. "The public was getting blase. Films had to be just right or they would pass them up. It was like catering to a delicate appetite. Now they have been put back to the position of fifteen years ago, when there were no moving picture shows. They are clamoring for amusement. They want pictures of any sort, and they want them at once. They have found that the closing of the motion picture theatres created a sort of void in their existence.

"I predict that the unparalleled rush of business which is going to be enjoyed by exhibitors during the rest of the winter season will more than recompense them for losses sustained through the closing of the theatres."

Michalove Succeeds Owens at Paramount.

Harry W. Owens, for the past several years Dallas manager for Paramount, has resigned his position and severed his connection with the company. He has gone to Los Angeles, where his mother lives, and his future film connection will be announced from that city.

D. Michalove, formerly New York manager for Triangle, and for ten years connected with the S. A. Lynch Enterprises, has taken Mr. Owens' place. He is effecting a reorganization of Paramount business in this district.

Exhibitors Aid Federated Charities.

Although their theatres were closed under the quarantine, Dallas motion picture exhibitors took a leading part in a campaign to raise $85,000 for the Dallas Federated Charities during the last week in October.

The theatre owners lent the fronts of their buildings to the Federated Charities for advertising purposes. The electric advertising signs on the theatres were also used to boost the charitable cause. The aid given by the exhibitors had much to do with the success of the drive.

Kelly to Handle Sherry and Parex Service.

Smiling Jimmy Kelly, of the General, has taken over the business of the W. L. Sherry Film Service and the Parex Film Corporation. He will handle all the G. M. Anderson releases. The first picture which he will put out early in November will be Anderson as Broncho Billy in "Red Blood and Yellow."

Harris Dies of Shell Shock.

Henry H. Harris, brother-in-law of James Kelley, of General, died late in October at Perth Amboy, N. J., of shell shock following the munitions plant explosion there. Mrs. James Kelly was called to his bed side at Perth Amboy.

Caver in Officers' Training Camp.

C. J. Caver, of the Majestic Theatre, Stephenville, Texas, has gone to the Officers' Training Camp at Leon Springs, Texas. Thomas Donnell, from Brady, Texas, has taken over the management of the Stephenville Theatre.

Charitable Deed of Miss Maybelle Prince.

Miss Maybelle Prince, secretary to W. H. Hulsey, who owns theatres all over Texas, recently demonstrated the charitable disposition of Dallas film row and its employes.

Miss Prince read in the Dallas newspapers an account of the death of the four little children of Mr. and Mrs. J. Shultz, of Dallas, from Spanish influenza. She started out to raise a subscription to aid the grief-stricken family. Within two hours she returned to the First National offices, after visitin one or two film exchanges, with $102 in cash. This she turned over to the family, which was direly in need of such support.

Exhibitors Visiting Dallas.

The following Texas exhibitors were among those who visited Dallas film row during the last week in October: J. C. Chatmas, Orpheum Theatre, Marlin; Sam Heffler, Wonderland Theatre, Cameron; H. L. Bear, Dorothy Theatre, Henrietta; Henry Oscar, Queen Theatre, Calvert; Billy Batsell, Sherman.

Mr. Fleishbein stated that the forest fire destroyed the saving of a lifetime, but that he was thankful he and his family escaped with their lives. He will make his home here for the winter and expects to go to Illinois in the spring. Mr. Fleishbein was an accountant before entering the show business. He expects to return to his old profession. L. E. Blessner's Grand Theatre at Cloquet was also destroyed.

Movie Trade Papers Given Strong Boost.

Crockett Brown, proprietor of the Unique Theatre, Nashwauk, Minn., attributes much of his success to valuable tips and suggestions made by the various moving picture trade magazines. He is an enthusiastic reader of the Moving Picture World.

New Department Added.

The Theatre Equipment Company, of Minneapolis, has added a new department to its rapidly growing establishment. This department handles patriotic novelties made of plastic composition and includes busts of General Pershing, President Wilson, an assortment of patriotic dolls and a few novelty pieces, including an American eagle and the statue of Liberty. The Theatre Equipment Company is now comfortably established in its new quarters in the Builders' Exchange Building.

A. C. Gilruth, proprietor of the Foto Play Theatre, of Watertown, S. D., has made some big improvements in his house, including the installation of two new Power's projectors.

Koerpel Injured Working in Shipyard.

J. A. Koerpel, manager of the World Film Exchange, while working on a ship during his regular afternoon shift last week, fell three decks and had to be taken to a hospital, where first aid remedies were applied and his name was written in a service book which bore the legend at the top of the page, "Not all the wounds suffered in the service of one's country are received in the field of battle." So Mr. Koerpel is a much bandaged hero now who continues to conduct his film office in the morning, and will soon return to his duties at the shipyard.

Detroit News Letter

By Jacob Smith, 719 Free Press Building, Detroit, Mich.

Dailies Cut Down on Picture News.

NOT only the Detroit newspapers, but most of the daily papers throughout Michigan have published practically no motion picture news since the closing of the theatres, because of no advertising. Isn't this a fine way for the newspapers to reciprocate, after the thousands and thousands of dollars which the theatres spend annually with them? And wouldn't you think that a time like this—when people could not go to the movies—the newspapers would try to get out a better movie page than ever before to keep up the interest?

Delft Takes Over Strand Theatre.

The Delft Theatres, Inc., already operating theatres in Marquette, Escanaba and Munising, have taken over the Strand Theatre in Escanaba, which gives them two houses in that town. The change became effective October 20. This puts the Deft corporation in absolute control of the theatre situation in three towns of the upper peninsula. L. J. Jacobs, who now managers the Delft in Escanaba, will also look after the Strand.

H. S. Gallup, better known as "Doc," is general manager of the Delft corporation.

Dave Prince Goes to War.

Dave Prince, Detroit manager for Triangle, has gone to war, having left very suddenly. He enlisted in the ambulance corps of the American Red Cross several months ago, and got his call to report last week on two days' notice. He is stationed at Camp Scott, American Red Cross, Company C, Chicago, Ill.

Dave has been Triangle manager for about a year, previously having managed the Detroit office of the General, as well as the Dallas office of the General.

A remark made to him on the long distance phone by Mr. Freeman, general manager of Triangle, is worth repetition: "I am mighty sorry to lose you, but I'm glad you are going with the biggest corporation in the world—Uncle Sam. You have done fine for us in Michigan, and when you come back we will have a position ready for you. Good luck and success."

Sellars General's Assistant Manager.

J. C. Sellars, who has been covering the road for the General, has been appointed booker and assistant manager to Frank Stuart. He will also look after selling in Detroit.

Organizing Yellow Dog Club.

F. R. Cleaver, salesman for the Detroit Universal, is pulling a great stunt which is great propaganda for the United States war program, and at the same time a wonderful boost for "The Yellow Dog," which is one of the latest Universal special feature releases. Mr. Cleaver is using a booth at Woodward and Gratiot avenues, organizing members to the Anti-Yellow Dog Club, having enrolled 2,000 members already. There is no membership fee—every man or woman who signs an application receives a yellow button. Cleaver is after 30,000 members.

General Takes Over Sherry Service.

The Parex Film Exchange in Detroit has discontinued business, and the pictures under the brand of Sherry Service are now being distributed through the General Film Company, of which Frank Stuart is Detroit manager. Manager Stuart is now arranging to put on several salesmen who will devote their entire time to Sherry pictures.

Congratulations.

He's a proud papa—A. J. Reed, manager of the George Kleine Exchange. The reason—an eight-pound baby boy. It arrived Wednesday, October 23, at 12:05 p. m. It has been christened Alfred James Reed. A. J. has been passing cigars ever since. Mother and babe are doing nicely, and A. J. is some happy man.

WEEK'S FILM NEWS FROM SAN FRANCISCO

Picture Men Start "Drive" on Ducks—Edwards Made Superintendent of T. & D. Theatres—McDonough Dies

By T. A. Church, 1507 North Street, Berkeley, Cal.

French Cameraman Visits City.

C. LE GRANDE, from the Pathe studios in France, is a visitor here, accompanied by his wife and fifteen-year-old son, and plans to leave on the liner Shinyo Maru on November 6 en route to Japan, China and other countries of the Far East to secure scenics for Pathe. He spent many months at the front with the French army and states that the general public has an erroneous idea in regard to the life of a cameraman doing work in connection with the great war. He declared that frequently the cameraman and his assistants went over the top well in advance of the soldiers and took up their positions before the commencement of battle. On one occasion three of his assistants were buried alive by a great shell and he suffered from shell shock to such an extent that he was given his present assignment.

Film Men and Ducks and Bears and Deer.

The closing of theatres has given local film exchange managers and theatre men some splendid opportunities to get out into the open, and some marvelous tales are going the rounds of onslaughts on the ducks in the rice fields. E. H. Emmick, of the Peerless Film Service, recently took a party of film men to Colusa, where an attack was made upon the quackers. Those making the trip besides Mr. Emmick were E. B. Johnson, of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit; Ralph Quive, of Vitagraph; W. O. Edmonds, of the Hodkinson Service, and George Chamberlain, of the Independent Film Exchange. "Candy" Howard, of Oroville, was picked up on the way, and at Colusa they enjoyed the hospitality of C. C. Kaufmann, the pioneer exhibitor of that city. The first duck fell to the unerring aim of Bill Edmonds. Managing Director Eugene Roth, of the California Theatre, fired by the recital of doughty deeds on the part of exchange men, has also shouldered arms and marched off to the duck trenches, while Van B Clement, of the Portola Theatre, has hied himself to the mountains in search of deer, bears and other denizens of the forest.

Sam Y. Edwards Promoted.

Sam Y. Edwards has been made superintendent of T. & D. theatres, and some extensive changes are being planned to mark the reopening of this chain of houses. Mr. Edwards started work with this firm as publicity man at the Oakland house, and was later placed in charge of the theatre conducted at Berkeley. Of late he has been connected with the film exchange branch of the business of Turner & Dahnken as traveling sales representative, in which work he has met with much success.

Parex Exchange to Close.

The Parex Film Exchange will be closed at an early date owing to arrangements that have been made whereby the William L. Sherry productions will be released through the General Film Company. Charles I. Luntz, manager of the local Parex branch, is preparing to turn the business over to the General as soon as possible.

Film Exchanges Move.

The Sunset Film Corporation and the Western Feature Film Company, which recently took over quarters at 94 Golden Gate avenue, have given up these, and have taken space at 90 Golden Gate avenue with the Consolidated Film Corporation.

Working on Patriotic Picture.

The Liberty Moving Picture Company, 376 Sutter street, has commenced work on a patriotic production, the camera work being done by Raymond A. Duhem. This is the second picture to be made by this local concern.

Brief California Notes.

Tom McDonough, formerly in charge of the advertising department of the Turner & Dahnken Exchange at San Francisco, passed away recently, a victim of the influenza.

Under the direction of Frank S. Wythe, the University of California is making a series of war garden pictures. M. S. Moller is doing the camera work, while the developing and printing is being done by Raymond A. Duhem, of San Francisco.

The business formerly conducted by Claude C. Laval at Fresno, Cal., is now being conducted by Laval & Ninnis. This concern is making a propaganda picture for the California Peach Growers' Association, showing all the details of the peach industry.

The Pacific Coast Film Corporation, recently incorporated at San Francisco, has been granted a permit to issue three thousand shares of common stock to Marion H. Kohn in exchange for certain contracts and to sell other shares at par.

ALHAMBRA AND LUBIN MAY CONSOLIDATE

I. Frankel Principal Mover in Plan to Combine Two Big Cincinnati Picture Theatres

By Kenneth C. Crain, 307 First National Bank, Cincinnati, Ohio.

THE enforced idleness among Cincinnati exhibitors, as far as their regular run of work is concerned, caused by the influenza epidemic has by no means caused them to let the grass grow under their feet in other respects. One conspicuous proof of this fact is the recent transfer of the Alhambra Theatre to the Frankel interests, and, growing out of this, comes the plan for the consolidation of the Alhambra with the Lubin, which is separated from the former only by a narrow store building. I. Frankel is the principal mover in the plan, which, it is understood, has excellent prospects of going through, being held up only by the question of adjusting the lease on the store room referred to, including the possible payment of a bonus. It is also reported that the Colonial Theatre in the same block, east of the Alhambra and the Lubin, may come into the plans for one or more larger theatres in this block, but the more immediate plan is that first referred to. The block in question, lying between Race and Elm streets, has been extremely popular with exhibitors ever since moving pictures first came into prominence, and there is no question but what a much larger house than any now in that block would meet with the same success which has been accorded the several smaller houses.

To Have Palace Theatre Ready March 1.

According to the estimate of the Longacre Construction Company, the principal contractor on the Palace Theatre Building, Cincinnati, all work should be finished and the building completed ready for occupancy by March 1. It will be recalled that it was originally hoped to have the building finished in time for the current fall season, but labor troubles, difficulties with materials, and the influenza epidemic have caused delays from time to time.

Associated Film Exchanges Reorganized.

The Associated Film Exchanges of the Chamber of Commerce have been reorganized, with Beecher E. Hess as managing secretary, and with fifteen of the leading film distributors in this vicinity as members. The old organization had fallen to some extent into disuse, and, as the various subsidiary organizations of the Chamber of Commerce have adopted uniform by-laws, the time was thought propitious for the reorganization of the film men. The following exchanges are members: Fox Film Corporation, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, Metro, Pathe, Vitagraph, First National, Triangle, Select, George Kleine System, Mutual, Cincinnati Buckeye, Famous Players-Lasky, Jewel Productions, C. C. Hite Attractions, Standard Film Service, Masterpiece Attractions, World and General. The officers elected were A. C. Rich, president; George Wilson, vice-president; William Stewart, treasurer, and Beecher E. Hess, managing secretary. The organization will hold regular meetings hereafter, and will be sufficiently active to keep the interest of the members without difficulty.

The showing was attended by several of the prominent city exhibitors and one or two from the surrounding territory. The consensus of opinion seemed to be that it is one of the best pictures on the market, the photography and acting being equal to, if not better, than anything shown for some time.

"TOO MANY MILLIONS"

Wallace Reid the Lively Hero of Huppy-Go-Lueky Story Produced by Paramount.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

IT IS only fair to make the statement that "Too Many Millions" need not be taken seriously. Porter Emerson Browne, the author of the story, gave it the title of "Someone and Somebody," and took a chance of causing his hero heart failure by starting him off as a penniless book agent, and then, without the slightest warning, endowing him with a fortune of forty millions.

Wallace Reid, who plays the part of Walsingham Van Dorn in the Paramount production directed by James Cruse, recovers from the shock of being showered with wealth quickly and completely and starts in to spend his income with a reckless abandon that delights the circle of friends and harpies that lose no time in attaching themselves to him. So pleasing does he find his new occupation he objects to pausing long enough to sign business documents that are brought to him by his confidential manager and gives this obliging person the power of attorney.

A few mornings later Van wakes up, after a jolly evening with his pals and finds a young lady sitting at the side of his bed, gazing sternly at him. She introduces herself and explains her presence in his room. Her name is Desiree Lane, and the house where Van Dorn is now living was once her home. It was taken away from her father by Van Dorn's uncles, two thrifty souls who piled up millions by trickery and died before they could eut their nephew off with nothing but their blessing.

Desiree demands the return of her money. Van is agreeable, but finds that it is impossible. The confidential manager has used his power of attorney to convert all of Van's property into cash and has skipped with it. Desiree and the busted millionaire get married, learn how to be happy though poor, and then the absconding manager plays another mean trick on them: He returns the forty millions.

This happy-go-lucky story is told in a lively off-hand fashion by Wallace Reid and the supporting company, Ora Carewe as Desiree and Tully Marshall as Wilkins coming next to the star in prominence. Gardner Hunting made the scenario.

"THE SHERIFF"

Two-Part Paramount Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle Comedy Is Filled with Laughs and Stunts.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

ROSCOE may not be as handsome as Bill Hart nor as lithe and svelte-like as Doug Fairbanks, but when it comes to doing stunts he is more than willing to take ehance with either or both of them. In his latest picture, "The Sheriff," he shows that his confidence in himself is founded on something more substantial than conceit. Trick riding, steeple climbing, headlong dives out of windows, pistol play, hot-footing it down the pike, lovemaking—nothing is too swift or too daring for the heavyweight comedian.

The story, written by Roscoe, is a frank admission of the yearning ambition that has been eating at his heart in secret. He has longed to emulate the deeds of the two Apollos of the screen and fill the feminine breast with admiration for a new movie hero. His love scenes with a Mexican belle are models of fervent passion, and it is not his fault if any of the spectators choose to laugh at him. Later on he transfers his affections to a pretty schoolma'am and rescues her from a band of bad men with all the dash and bravery of his rivals, if not with all their grace. A little darkey, who supports the name of Snowball, and a willing and intelligent dog who answers to the name of Luke, do their best to fill Buster Keaton's place, and make a good showing by their efforts. Al St. John is as useful as ever.

"THE SQUAW MAN"

Cecil DeMille Reproduees Through Artcraft His First Lasky Pieture; Elliot Dexter in the Title Role.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT the methods of DeMille have improved seems to be clearly demonstrated by this reproduction of his first picture, but it is not shown to any marked degree until the pathetic crisis is reached, when the stoical little squaw, admirably interpreted by Ann Little, dwarfs all other characters by sacrificlng her life on the altar of supreme love. The story sadly needed this ending. Based on the illogical idea that a man will take upon himself and his possible descendants the stain of another man's contemptible crime, it is further weakened by the fact that the innocent sufferers are not thereby relieved, a sneaking fraud rather than an act of honor, truth and mobility, the only reason why a young Englishman of titled family hides on a Wyoming ranche. When his life is saved by an Indian girl, her reward is seduction. Not until she is with child does the honorable young Englishman of titled family do the right thing. He marries her and thus spares his son another shame than that of being descended from a self-confessed thief of the lowest order.

The squaw wife's position grows more and more pathetic after her child has developed into a fine little boy. She who created the little human flower is treated like a servant. Having given us the regulation theatrical sacrifice and the regulation falsely accused, the playwright could not omit the regulation dying confession of the villain, so the hero's name is cleared, but he now drags from the arms of his devoted wife the only joy she has in the world, her little son, and sends him to England. Of what particular interest this is to Americans cannot be imagined, but it serves as a crowning act of contemptible meanness on the part of the "Squaw Man" and gives an opportunity Mr. DeMille has admirably handled of powerfully illustrating the pathos of such a misalliance, all the nobility of character being concentrated in the humble little red mother.

"ILL SAY SO"

George Walsh Is Presented by William Fox in a Speedy Comedy-Druma.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE exhibitor who is favored with a large followlng for George Walsh subjects may safely promise their customers that they'll be satisfied beyond question with this latest production of the Fox-Walsh series. All that Walsh can do in the line of athletics, aerobatics, stunts and showy displays of agility has been crowded into five reels of dashing comedy, fast moving and entertaining to a degree.

Folks who have an obsession for George Walsh pictures will not expect much plot, much acting or much of anything beside daring deeds and liveliness on the part of the star. "I'll Say So" runs true to form in these respects. There is little, very little, of drama or plot—it's all for the exploitation of Walsh.

Of course there is a German spy plot and its frustration involved. Films without a touch of German spying are not being released these days to any great extent. Walsh does the frustrating, and does it acrobatically and well. Things move so fast that the "love lorn" will not get much "heart interest" out of the woman in the case, and will miss a lot of lovemaking that customarily weaves through film-plots. But there is a girl to serve as incentive, and in the last few feet Walsh catches up with her in time to have a "happy ending."

Once more must we boost for a raise in salary for a Fox title-writer. While not all of the titles are exceptional, there are many of them that add materially to the enjoyment, and all of them depart from the "Last Night," "Next Morning" and "Fate Decides" examples so prevalent in the general run of film-captioning.

"HIDDEN FIRES"

Entertaining Comedy Concealed in Five-Part Goldwyn Picture Starring Mae Marsh.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

JUST why the title, "Hidden Fires," was selected for the latest Goldwyn picture, featuring Mae Marsh, is not explained by the story. J. Clarkson Miller, who is credited with having written the scenario, has performed something very like a conjurer's trick in his manipulation of the plot, and neatly concealed an unsuspected comedy motive in the center of a story that starts off with almost tragic intensity. George Irving, the director of the picture, has taken advantage of every opening for developing the lighter moods of his material, and the picture ends in an atmosphere of light-hearted laughter and the joyous sight of three honeymoon couples setting sail on the same dayliner.

No time is wasted in plunging into the story at the start. Louise Parks, a young girl whose home is in Washington Square, New York, is shown as a student in Paris, and the possessor of more than her share of temper. She quarrels with her sweetheart, Stephen Underwood, and telegraphs her mother she is coming home. The ship mentioned in the telegram goes down. Doctor Granville, Mrs. Parke's physician, decides that the condition of his patient's health will not permit her to learn of her daughter's death. Peggy Murray, who is in charge of the newsstand at the doctor's hotel, looks enough like Louise to be her twin sister, and is persuaded to impersonate the heiress.

Mrs. Parke accepts Peggy without question as Louise, and so does Stephen Underwood, who is now on this side of the Atlantic. If the spectator is not of the same mind, the author has matter in store for him that will make him indifferent to this point anyway. Stephen starts in to patch up his quarrel with the supposed Louise, but Peggy isn't at all agreeable; she has found a young man of her own.

The situation is saved by having Louise still in the land of the living and coming home to take her proper place in the Parke household. Peggy goes back to the newsstand, strolls out one noon to do some shopping, discovers that her young man's father is the owner of the store and Landis junior as much in love with her as ever. They decide on a hasty wedding. And so also does Louise and her George; also the doctor and Mrs. Parke. Which explains the honeymoon trio.

To put it concisely, "Hidden Fires" is a triumph of direction over material. Mae Marsh plays both Louise and Peggy, and the doubling is managed with uncommon skill. Her Peggy is one of the best things she has done, the Marsh mannerisms being used in just the right proportion. The picture furnishes further proof that George Irving is a director without any art foibles or fads that are allowed to get in the way of telling a story in a straightforward manner.

"SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY"

J. Stuart Blackton Presents a Splendid Illustration of the "Work-or-Fight" Theme by Anthony Kelly.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THERE is true Blackton genius shown in the treatment of this story, some of his old-time skill in creating atmosphere that is convincing, of presenting situations through contrast until the pulse is quickened and the emotions stirred, and more than one characterization is due to his delicate appreciation of what constitutes a distinct personality. There is interpreted by Ruby de Remer a true type of American working girl, not the conventional one, and this delicate and charming figure has been well grasped by Mr. Blackton. He places in contrast to the effort made by this brave girl to escape from the power of circumstances the figure of a pampered and spoiled young son of wealth that she marries and quits when he becomes unendurable. This youth is the junior Craig, his brother at the front in France, his father a shipbuilder of great power, his coddling mother an idle woman of fashion. He spends his time in the cabarets; not vicious, simply a useless, and therefore, a decadent member of society. His young wife quits him in disgust, but she is unable to maintain herself, loses heart and is at the point of suicide when she is prevented from destroying herself by a confirmed hobo, played by Mitchell Lewis. This role, though it seems to be injected to give Mr. Lewis a part, is made humorous through his quaint philosophy and his association with a diminutive pal known as "Little Lefty."

The author has gathered together under difficult circumstances many examples of the slacker type and brought them into skilled conversion by putting the pampered society youth, the snobbish servant, the loafing hobo and others at work in Craig's shipyard. The purpose of the story is now developed with great power by both author and directing-producer. Blackton and Kelly now work in a rhythm that is very effective, handling the numerous characters with such skill that they are nicely rounded up for a stirring finish. Now arrives the inevitable, the one thing which seems to afflict the best screen writers and producers. There is a happy ending for all concerned, but it peters out weakly instead of finishing with snap and fire, or with some splendid symbol to set forth and clinch the splendid, timely and finely developed purpose. While "satisfactory," the conclusion lacks inspiration. A great vision has been unfolded to our view, one of life in our times, adhering to the truth in convincing fashion. It has grappled with reality in order to give the vision higher value, it is all artistry and it will shine, but the flame may fail to light other minds unless the end is greatly improved. This should be done, for the story is radiantly human and the noble theme gives it moral beauty, intellectual charm and vital truth.

TOO MANY MILLIONS (Paramount)—Porter Emerson Browne wrote the story from which this five-part picture was taken. It is an amusing lot of light-weight material, and is well played by Wallace Reid and the rest of the cast. A longer review is printed on another page of this issue.

UNDER THE GREENWOOD TREE (Artcraft).—Elsie Ferguson very sweet in a dull adaptation from an old English play.

THE SQUAW MAN (Artcraft).—A reproduction by Cecil DeMille of his first picture, Ann little in a powerful characterization as the syuaw, Elliott Dexter in the title role.

Fox Film Corporation.

I'LL SAY SO (Fox).—William Fox presents George Walsh in another typically George Walsh comedy without much plot or drama—as usual. "Stunts" there are and to an almost endless extreme. Walsh does a stunt very frequently when some of our best little stunt artists would do the same thing naturally. Everything Walsh can do is "flashed" or exemplified in extenso during "I'll Say So." Exhibitors who have a following for this young Fox athlete can safely go the limit on promises to their patrons. But don't say much about drama or plot or "heart interest"—go heavy on Walsh and his acrobatics.

Greater Vitagraph, Inc.

THE NOOSE (Vitagraph).—Episode No. 4 of the Vitagraph serial, "The Iron Test," introduces an entire change of scene from the circus atmosphere of the first three parts. Bert and Edith, after being saved from death during the trapeze accident, are not permitted to enjoy the quiet life between the afternoon and the night performance. Bert takes a motor boat to cross the bay, and is caught and bound by the "Red Mask" and thrown overboard. He manages to get to a deserted island, and has a difficult task to return to the circus in time for the next performance. How this is managed and the exciting finish to his riding act keeps the interest of the story at the proper tension. Antonio Moreno and Carol Holloway work with the same satisfactory results as in the opening episodes.

FRAUDS AND FRENZIES (Vitagraph).—Lawrence Semon supplies enough energy and nerve in this two-part rough-and-tumble farce to win the admiration of any spectator. He risks his neck continually, and repeats his familiar brand of burlesque with all his old deftness. Two escaped convicts are the heroes of the farce.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc.

WOMAN (Maurice Tourneur).—A notable production, one of the finest of the year, a tribute to modern womanhood through contrast with those of other days, but remarkable for wealth and beauty of treament, a contribution to the screen Hall of Fame. Reviewed in last week's issue.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 70 (Mutual).—In this issue of the Screen Telegram are some official Y. M. C. A. pictures showing its work with the troops near the battle line, also scenes in the tobacco fields of South Carolina and at Camp Scott. A busy corner in Chicago, and scenes in New York showing the Salvation Army collecting canned music for our boys in France and at the race track as the season comes to a close.

BLACK FEET AND FLAT HEADS (Rothacker).—In this picture which has been photographed in the native haunts of the Blackfeet Indians shows their customs, dances, religious ceremonies and contains various scenes of interest pertaining to this ancient tribe of red men.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

THE SILVER BOOK (Pathe).—Episode No. 12 of "Hands Up." This is full of action of the melodramatic sort and contains numerous incidents of importance to the story. One of these is the discovery of the "Books of Laws" in the cornerstone of the Inca temple. Later events center about an attempted theft of this book and the sun message; also there is an impersonation of the Phantom Rider by the rascally sheriff. The number carries the interest well.

WITH THE POLISH ARMY IN FRANCE (French Pictorial-Pathe).—This is an informing subject, which will be something of a revelation to people who have not been aware of the efforts being made to restore the ancient land of Poland. This subject shows the headquarters of Polish troops in France, a presentation of flags by President Poincaire and some interesting maneuvers of troops.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW, No. 19 (Pathe).—Many scenes along the battle-front, in Italy, France and Palestine, are shown in this installment. The Italian scenes lead, and glimpses are seen of the trained dogs of war in action. The ruined Abbey of Longmont is pictured in the French part, and the Palestine views include some unusual and informing scenes.

THE LITTLE OUTLAW (Western).—A two-reel story of the West, featuring Helen Gibson as a girl, known as "The Kid," who is raised with a band of outlaws. Her father, leader of the band, is shot and she reforms, afterward holding up a stage and saving some bags of gold from the bandits. The subject is not very strong dramatically, but contains some splendid atmospheric effects. There is a love affair between the girl and the sheriff.

TRAILS DIVIDED (Western).—A two-reel subject, with Helen Gibson and Edward Peale in the leading roles. The hero is elected sheriff of a Western town and the girl aids him in rounding up a gang of cattle rustlers. The dramatic structure of this subject is not strong; its chief appeal is in the pleasing Western settings.

THROUGH THE FLAMES (Pathe).—Episode No. 5 of "Wolves of Kultur." Leah Baird, as heroine of the story, occupies the center of interest in this installment. She makes a visit to the home of Zaremba, attired in a ball gown, and succeeds in making away with the secret code book. But she is pursued and after an automobile accident, escapes to a woods, still in the ball gown, which gives a picturesque turn to the situation. She is later captured and is about to be burned in a house by Zaremba's insane wife as the installment closes.

Cast.

George Orcutt.....Duncan McRae
Mrs. Orcutt.....Florence Reed

The Story: George Orcutt, a dissolute young New York millionaire, has forfeited his wife's affections by his notorious infidelities. Gail Orcutt, his wife, centres her attention on her young son, Vance, and withdraws from society with a sense of shame for her husband's misconduct. Orcutt, continuing his wild life, slays a friend in a quarrel over a young woman. With the fear of the law on him, he tells his wife all, and she, in an attempt to save him, starts for the office of her friend, District Attorney John Kent. On the way she comes upon the living double of her husband, a stranger, sitting on a park bench, his mind stunned by a terrific shock. She takes the unresisting man to her home, and, telling her husband to flee, substitutes the stranger for her husband to the district attorney. The man is committed to an asylum, from which later he is released, and goes to live at the Orcutt home. He cannot remember who he is, and takes it for granted he is George Orcutt. What he cannot understand is his "wife's" evident coldness toward him. Meanwhile, the real George Orcutt, returning home for money, is mis-

At least use this angle for the bulk of your advertising.

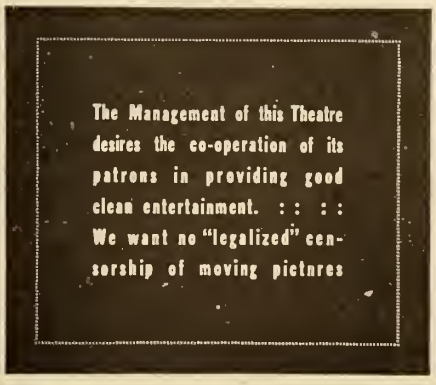
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment. : : : :
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

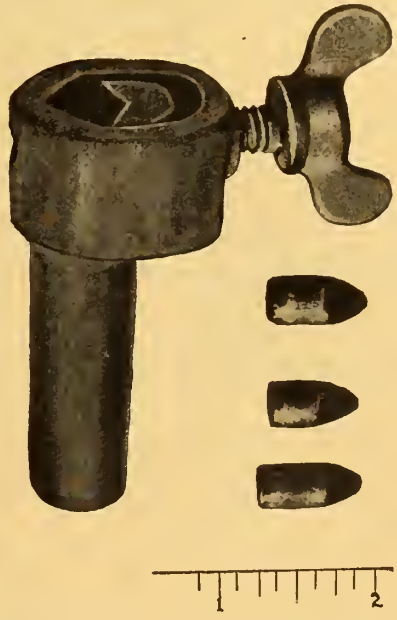
SILVERTIP

DIRECT CURRENT
MOTION PICTURE CARBONS

The Silvertip used with the Columbia upper gives a light source that fills the bill in every particular. The Silvertip is heavily plated, making it capable of carrying the heavy currents used in projection without harmful heating.

We wish to call special attention to the new copper adapter which was designed for use with our Silvertip negative carbon. This new adapter, shown in the illustration below, has several outstanding features; it is made in one piece and cannot get out of adjustment while the jaws form a positive clamp, giving a better contact on a smaller portion of the carbon.



The illustration also shows the extent to which the Silvertip can be burned with the aid of this new adapter. The ruggedness of construction together with the quality of the material from which it is made gives the adapter a life equal to that of the rest of the projection apparatus.

OFFICIAL WAR REVIEW

The war has reached into every home; it has affected every individual. Not alone because with the millions of men in khaki nearly every family has its representatives in the service, but because the food on the table, the clothing that is worn—every article that is bought or sold, has paid its tribute to War.

Thus there is a universal desire to be informed of the progress of that which has become the biggest part of our daily life. The newspapers and magazines can only tell a part. The motion picture supplements and makes clear. It shows things at the front as they really are!

Every exhibitor should show these official pictures, taken by the Governments of France, Great Britain, Italy and United States.

Thus he may satisfy a universal demand!

Unconditional Surrender

Back of everything is the Idea from which it sprung.

Back of Fox success is the Fox Idea—the plan of producing only the kind of motion pictures that the most people want to see.

Back of Fox success is an IDEA so big and broad and sound that it couldn't do anything else than succeed.

Any man is bound to win out, who is clever enough to know what the public wants—and wise enough not to haggle about the cost of producing it—for the public is more generous in its pay than the most generous philanthropist with his gifts.

The public will not only PAY for what it wants, but will pay liberally to the point of extravagance.

William Fox has succeeded for the very reason that he gave the public what it wanted—succeeded far beyond his own ambitious dreams of only a few years ago.

The public has surrendered to the Fox Idea.

Wouldn't it be good business for YOU to follow in their footsteps?

For nothing succeeds like success,

Is yours a neighborhood theatre?

Then make it a city theatre—a local institution that is as well known a mile—two miles—away as it is around the corner.

You'd like that, wouldn't you?—and it's so easy when you know how.

This is how—give the public the pictures it wants.

That's what William Fox has been doing—and you'll admit he is some success as a producer.

And since William Fox gives the public what it wants, your best bet is to give your public Fox pictures.

The Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, has been drawing patronage from all sections of the metropolis with "Salome."

Many theatres in New York, Chicago, St. Louis and other cities are making the same tremendous appeal in the same way—with William Fox productions.

THE PICTURE of the HOUR

"UNCONDITIONAL SURRENDER"

NOW that the cry "Kamerad!" has come from the Kaiser—

Now that the world is asking what fate is in store for the arch-foe of mankind—

Film buyers are offered this big, gripping, up-to-the-minute drama that shows the Kaiser punished as the public wants to see him punished; that tries the Hohenzollern before the court of World Justice, pronounces and carries out his fate.

It is the picture of the hour, but it is also a picture of permanent value. The beauty of its scenes, stretching back into the dawn of history; its thrilling panorama of present events; its spectacle of humanity triumphant over its would-be crucifier, make it a drama that will live and earn money for the exhibitor long after ordinary screen dramas are forgotten.

The man who acts quickly will draw big profits from this picture.

GERALDINE FARRAR in a modern society and mystery melodrama was just what you and the public wanted. "The Turn of the Wheel" made good and will continue to be a profit-making attraction throughout the year. Booked at The Strand, New York.

MABEL NORMAND returning to broad comedy in "Peck's Bad Girl" caused the screen public to cry "Hurray!" Exactly what they wanted—and a big success in theatres everywhere.

TOM MOORE an instant hit as a Goldwyn star in "Just For Tonight." Fast, speedy, romantic comedy—the kind of story that made audiences forget about the war.

MADGE KENNEDY'S most liked picture—"The Kingdom of Youth." Exhibitors were so enthusiastic about it that they conducted big personal advertising campaigns—and business was heavy. Booked at The Strand, New York.

REX BEACH'S "Laughing Bill Hyde" with Will Rogers introduced a brand new star to the American public and such notices as the critics gave him have rarely ever been equalled in screen history. Booked at The Rivoli, New York.

MAE MARSH in "Hidden Fires" has what dozens of exhibitors rank as her best picture since "Polly of the Circus" and "The Cinderella Man." Booked at The Rialto, New York.

All of these productions are brand new hits since September 1. Two thousand additional theatres, including yours, should book and begin playing them before Christmas. Maurice Tourneur Triumphantly Achieves Another Success

From the NEW YORK MAIL

One of the faults of the prevailing system of exhibiting photoplays is the restriction it places on the length of their "runs." Good, mediocre and bad pictures all come under the inelastic rule that limits their display from a minimum of one day to a maximum of one week, according to the custom of the theatres in which they are exhibited. It is when such a photoplay as Maurice Tourneur's "Woman" comes along that one realizes the injustice this rule sometimes visits upon the producer. "Woman," for instance, which Director Rothapfel is presenting at the Rivoli Theatre this week, cannot possibly exhaust, during an engagement of one week's duration, the patronage that is due it. It ought to be housed in a theatre where it could be shown continuously until every devotee of the screen drama has had the opportunity to see it. Perhaps the resourceful Mr. Rothapfel can devise a way for this to be done.

"Woman" adds another artistic accomplishment to its producer's credit.

From the NEW YORK EVENING JOURNAL

At the Rivoli Maurice Tourneur's super-production, "Woman," holds first place. In the novelty of its subject, the composition of its scenes and the exquisite artistry with which the plot is unfolded the picture promises to create much laudatory comment.

From EXHIBITOR'S TRADE REVIEW

Hats off to Maurice Tourneur! Once again he has made a picture that, for downright artistic value, has never been equalled. The picture ranks among the very finest that have ever been made. "Woman" should be a box-office attraction of the highest class.

From the MOTION PICTURE WORLD

"WOMAN"

Notable Production by Tourneur from Whittaker's Tribute to Modern Womanhood

Reviewed by LOUIS REEVES HARRISON

Remarkable contribution to the aesthetic movement in motion picture production, "Woman" is so entrancing to the eye and so beguiling to the thoughts and sentiments of the spectator that it lures him into a state of dreamy forgetfulness of himself and the little world in which he has been living. It can thus do without dramatic suspense, but that value is present, along with logical development, power of construction and, above all things, an atmosphere so convincing that events seem to take place instead of being presented in illustration of the final purpose.

It thus becomes one of the finest products of the year.

"Woman," more than a photoplay—a human document. Hailed as a triumph by Daily Press and Trade Press upon its Premiere at Rivoli Theatre, New York. Last week.

NOVELTY KEYNOTE OF "WOMAN" FILM

Maurice Tourneur's Latest Photoplay Is Presented at the Rivoli Theatre This Week

By FRANCES AGNEW

Novelty is the keynote of Maurice Tourneur's newest Photoplay, "Woman," which is attracting the attention and inviting the argumentative comment of patrons of the Rivoli Theatre this week.

The film is unlike any other production which has ever been unfolded on the silver sheet. Its title will convey to everyone a fair idea of its theme, but it could not even suggest the unique development accorded the subject by Charles Whittaker's scenario and Maurice Tourneur's direction.

In filming "Woman" the author and producer have disregarded the usual scenario form and, except for the revelations made in introductory subtitles concerning the source of their idea, have presented their theme by implication and suggestion rather than by a connected story.

From the NEW YORK GLOBE

"Woman," which is featured at the Rivoli this week, might better have been titled "Woman, Etc.," for the action involves almost everything from the Garden of Eden down to the present war.

It is a Tourneur picture, which means that the scenes have an imaginative quality that is created by no other director. All of the episodes are steeped in poetry, and the haunting little story of Cyrene and the fisherman is perhaps the loveliest thing of its kind ever done on the screen.

From the EVENING SUN

Maurice Tourneur's latest film production, entitled "Woman," is the featured photoplay at the Rivoli Theatre this week. It deals with woman's effect on history, and the idea is conveyed in a series of episodes in which Adam and Eve, Claudius and Messalina, Abelard and Heloise, a Civil War heroine, and the women war workers of the present day are the characters. The picture abounds in beautiful scenes and good acting by a large company.

From VARIETY

It's the kind of a super-picture people will talk about after they leave the theatre—and comment on most favorably. The production is not only massive, but artistic.

From the NEW YORK TIMES

EVE'S DAUGHTERS SEEN IN "WOMAN"

Maurice Tourneur's Film Play Eloquent of Emancipation for Those Serving in War

The ability of Maurice Tourneur to create pictures, not just single scenes without meaning or connection, but eloquent, beautiful pictures in motion that make a poetic story come true for the time being, has never revealed itself more fully than in "Woman," the principal offering at the Rivoli this week. The magical Mr. Tourneur has taken a series of episodes from history and traditon and brought them to life on a screen.

THE DOOR'S WIDE OPEN

AN EXHIBITOR should not be expected to hunt among a score of exchanges in each city to find a day's show. He could find it just as well among three or four exchanges. He could find it most easily at any General Film Company exchange, established since 1910.

Nor should manufacturers be expected to scatter their product among a score of exchanges to reach the same exhibitor in each city.

Furthermore, distributors should not be expected to build and maintain a separate exchange in each city. It multiplies their overhead expense and reduces service efficiency. It makes film cost more to the exhibitor.

However, the old situation is improving. The government has taken the nonsense out of railroad routing. And General Film Company is taking the nonsense out of motion picture distribution.

General Film Company long has advocated conservation and warred upon extravagance. It leads in practical conservation by presenting itself as a ready-to-use medium between any manufacturer or distributor and the exhibitor.

Why do thirty, and more, individual producers route their product through General Film Company exchanges? Because its exchange system, the oldest established and most splendidly equipped, was unreservedly open to them. No wonder that they adopted General Film in its completeness rather than the casual exchange here and there.

Why do the most experienced distributors, like George Kleine and Wm. L. Sherry, discard their own circuit of exchanges and adopt those of General Film Company? They have told you. Looked at calmly, an exchange is a plain, unadorned utility which can serve many interests at a saving. General Film exchanges can do it particularly well. And these men, standing on their own platform of conservation, have shown the strength of their convictions by applying them.

Progressive people see the absurdity of film distribution in the extravagant way, when it can be done better at a minimum of outlay. They naturally turn to such a smoothly-running, permanent service concern as General Film Company, which circulates their film while they retain full control of it.

For over a year General Film Company has been inviting progressive people to employ its facilities.

The invitation still holds good!

THE DOOR'S WIDE OPEN.

Booked It Immediately After Seeing

Immediately after seeing your latest serial, "The Iron Test," in your projection room, I booked it, and have good reason to believe that the business on it will be even greater than the record-breaking business of "The Fighting Trail," "Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web," and "A Fight For Millions."

You may also book me up for "A Man of Might," the new Duncan serial that I understand is to follow "The Iron Test."

"The Best One So Far!"

I have found that all Vitagraph serials, commencing with "The Fighting Trail," have meant crowded houses, but your newest one, "The Iron Test," was a most pleasant surprise to me. I found it the best one so far, with an attractive and different sort of story and strong episode endings, of the sort that will bring back serial fans.

I have booked it for my three theatres.

GLOBE

"The Better 'Ole" Couldn't Be Very Much Better.

"'Ullo!" It's more than a scream. It's a saturnalia of joy. If you miss it you'll miss the best show of its kind ever seen in New York. They call it "THE BETTER 'OLE."

If you think New York already has had so many war plays that it can't stand another, see this merry melange and you will find you're mighty mistaken. You also will discover that there are war plays and war plays. If your appetite for the theatre is jaded, go see "THE BETTER 'OLE." Go see it anyhow.

TIMES

BAIRNSFATHER PLAY DOWN IN GREENWICH

"The Better 'Ole" Adds Charm to the Most Humorous of All War Cartoons.

This "Bill" of the theatre is a work of the broadest sympathy, combined with the most delicate art. He is the Old Walrus of the cartoons, with his pendant mud-guard of a mustache, his impregnable ignorance, and his racy, basic humanity; but he is also Mr. Coburn's Bill, with a thousand indefinable touches of character and humor that mark an authentic creation. And the inspiration extends to his comrades, of the trio of Tommies—Bert, with his patent cigarette lighter that won't light, and ... his mania for giving ... cation tag to every ... All three are at their ... work together—that deserve to stay ... ons of Dumas ...

TRIBUNE

"The Better 'Ole" at the Greenwich Theatre Scores Hit

"THE BETTER 'OLE" has caught more authentic war spirit than any other play of the trenches and back areas which has come to town. It is concerned only with one phase of the life of a fighting man, and that a subordinate one, but the fact that within its scope of humorous interpretation it keeps constantly on the key puts it above the plays of the shattered school.

HERALD

BAIRNSFATHER CHARACTERS IN DELIGHTFUL WAR COMEDY

Three figures which have become classics in the lighter side of war's horrors stepped into real life Saturday night. They are Old Bill, he of the sonorous mustache; Alf and Bert, that trio of humorous characters in the trenches, sketches of Captain Bruce Bairnsfather, British Army, which have made the world laugh through its tears. They are the chief characters in a comedy-drama called "THE BETTER 'OLE," by Captain Bairnsfather and Captain Arthur Eliot.

OLD BILL, BERT AND ALF COME INTO REAL LIFE

Those three musketeers among the fighting Tommies of England, Old Bill, Bert and Alf, who have endeared themselves to hundreds of thousands of readers of The World in Capt. Bruce Bairnsfather's war cartoons, have at last appeared in the flesh. Their creator, with the aid of Capt. Arthur Eliot, has turned them into characters in a war play with the somewhat cryptic title, "THE BETTER 'OLE," which has all the persuasion and force, both for humor and pathos, of the famous pictures on which it is based.

When the box office speaks, the ears of managers are always listening. St. Joe Reports:

4,000 "SHOWN"!

When the St. Joseph (Mo.) Civic Festival Association featured "America's Answer" at the Auditorium, not long ago, they had 1,000 people at the matinee and 3,000 at the evening performance!

This is typical.

From all over the country come reports of packed houses, thrilled audiences and storms of applause bestowed on this marvelous war picture, which was filmed in France by the U. S. Signal Corps and sent to this country under the direction of General Pershing.

When you book "America's Answer," you do two things:

1. You sell out the house, automatically, for each showing of the film.

2. You render the Government a distinctly patriotic service by giving the people of your city an opportunity to visualize this nation's glorious part in the great war, through the medium of the People's Films.

If you have not yet booked "America's Answer," you had better do so right away. The rental has been figured on a basis that will permit of showing at regular admission prices.

FESTIVAL SHOW CROWD LAST NIGHT WAS 3,000

GREAT WAR PHOTOPLAY AWES CROWDS

Large crowds, twice as large as the first day, witnessed the showing of "America's Answer," the patriotic official American war picture in five reels, and the three vaudeville acts, the program offered by the St. Joseph Civic Festival association, at the Auditorium yesterday afternoon and last night. The crowd numberede 3,000 last night, and 1,000 at the matinee.

How Government Made Soldiers

"America's Answer," which shows the remarkable achievements of the United States government since taking up the fight against the Hun, was again well received. It shows how the government made soldiers of 1,-50,000 American boys and transported them to France to fight for liberty on French soil.

Considerable attention is devoted to the work of the various war work organizations among the men, the Salvation army, the Y. M. C. A., the American Red Cross, the Y. W. C. A., and the Knights of Columbus.

McNutt's Band Plays

The program of McNutt's band, which adds much to the show, was varied and appropriate to the occasion. The program was mainly patriotic with touches of the national anthems of the Allied nations.

AFFILIATED TAKES OVER MUTUAL FILM

Brink, Clark and Cornelius Acquire, on Behalf of Themselves and Associates, 51 Per Cent. of the Stock of the Latter Corporation—Sheldon Remains

ANNOUNCEMENT has been made by the Mutual Film Corporation that H. A. Brink, W. J. Clark and H. C. Cornelius, president, vice-president and secretary-treasurer respectively of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, acquired on behalf of themselves and a number of exhibitors of this country the financial and managing control of the Mutual Film Corporation on Wednesday, November 6, the papers being signed in Chicago on that date. Affiliated holds 51 per cent. of the stock of Mutual.

This new move means that certain exhibitors throughout the United States and Canada will be the dominating and controlling factor of the Mutual distributing organization.

Mutual has branch offices in twenty-nine of the principal cities of the United States and Canada.

Messrs. Clark, Brink and Cornelius are prominent exhibitors and capitalists of Grand Rapids, Mich., which is the headquarters of the Affiliated Distributors Corporation, and they have taken a commanding position in the industry since the formation of that organization last June.

The Affiliated Distributors Corporation is organized and operated upon a direct, from-producer-to-exhibitor co-operative booking plan, which expressly provides for the elimination of waste, speculation and unnecessary expenses in connection with the manufacturing, booking and distributing of motion pictures.

The booking of all pictures is handled by five unit corporations, exclusively owned and controlled by exhibitors, which corporations are organized to cover five sections of the United States, these sections being subdivided into nineteen zones, which correspond almost identically with the branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation.

By this new affiliation, the branch offices of the Mutual Film Corporation will co-operate with the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation in every section, and will, it is expected, eventually be operated as exhibitors' units.

This movement does not affect in any way the releasing of productions through Affiliated and in no wise changes its plans, but it guarantees an exhibitors controlled distribution through a corporation which is thoroughly equipped and which can render efficient distribution.

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation by this movement will benefit very materially from the advice and co-operation of James M. Sheldon, the former president of Mutual, who now holds the position of chairman of the board of directors of the Mutual Film Corporation.

A. S. Kirkpatrick, assistant general manager of Mutual, will retain that position under the new coalition, and will maintain control and supervision over all the exchange branches of Mutual.

The present efficient organization of Mutual will be maintained throughout and will be used as the nucleus around which the contemplated larger organization will be built.

The officers of the new organization are: President, William J. Clark; vice-president and general manager, H. A. Brink; chairman of the board of directors, James M. Sheldon; secretary, H. C. Cornelius; treasurer, Paul H. Davis; assistant general manager, A. S. Kirkpatrick; auditor, Hugh Davis, and C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel.

In addition to these officers, an advisory board of prominent exhibitors, representing every section corporation and zone in the United States and Canada, will be appointed. Each member of this board will be a substantial stockholder in the Mutual Film Corporation.

JAMES S. McQUADE.

Officially Indorse the Affiliated.

Officially indorsing the action of Messrs. Clark and Brink the following telegram was received by C. S. Pettijohn in New York from Frank Rembusch and others, exhibitors, who urge exhibitors to join the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation:

The Affiliated Distributors' Corporation recently organized by Messrs. H. A. Brink and William J. Clark, of Grand Rapids, to establish a plan of producer-to-exhibitor-direct, have to-day secured control of the Mutual Film Corporation and their system of branch offices through the United States for physical distribution of the combined product of Affiliated and Mutual companies. The undersigned exhibitors have thoroughly investigated the plan aid possibilities of this union of forces and we believe that every exhibitor and producer—in fact the entire industry—are now offered a great opportunity to bring about conservation, economy and business standards in the motion picture business.

We urge all exhibitors to join the Affiliated organization because it will give them absolute control of their product and eliminate speculation and juggling in the film market and bring about a great saving in film rentals through wholesale buying on the part of exhibitors on a co-operative plan.

The Passing of the Mutual.

In all probability the passing of the control of the Mutual Film Corporation to the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation means the closing of its career as a factor in the motion picture business. Prior to the time the papers in the transfer were signed at Chicago, the Mutual, which is a distributing company, had no product to offer exhibitors except the Screen Telegram, which is a news reel, and which was sold to Hearst's International Film Service. This situation, and in fact that the corporation was losing money at an alarming rate, induced the men who controlled its destinies to accept the proposition of Messrs. Clark and Brink.

It is too soon to state just what will be the policy of the new control of the Mutual Film Corporation with regard to their acquisition. C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel for the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation, has not seen Messrs. Clark and Brink since the purchase was made and has had no opportunity to discuss plans with them. It is intimated that some radical changes will be made.

Mutual Had Spectacular Career.

The Mutual Film Corpor ion was organized by Harry Aitken in 1912. It marked Mr. Aitken's first venture in big film business, he having prior to that time operated the Western Film Exchange at St. Louis. Its organization also marked the first considerable entry into the film business of Wall Street interests. Crawford Livingston was its first president, and Otto Kahn, representing Kuhn, Loeb & Co., was a director. The offices of the corporation was 60 Wall Street. Others in the directorate were John R. Freuler, the late C. J. Hite, S. S. Hutchinson and J. B. Ritchie. Subsequently the firm of Baumann & Kessel joined the combination.

In 1913 the Mutual took offices in the Masonic Building at the corner of Sixth Avenue and 23d Street, where two floors were occupied by the general offices and the New York exchange. Some of the best known men in the film business were employed and the Mutual loomed large on the motion picture horizon.

In December, 1913, D. W. Griffiths, who had shortly before closed a long engagement with the Biograph Company, was named director general of Mutual productions and began operations in a temporary studio at Sixteenth street and Union Square West.

A big newspaper, magazine and billboard campaign, the first time these mediums had ever been used extensively for film advertising, was started and the slogan "Mutual Movies Make Time Fly" could be seen most everywhere. Business continued along these lines with apparent success until 1914, when there began to be heard rumbles of dissention in the Mutual Camp. There developed an opposition to the management of the corporation as conducted by Mr. Aitken, and at the annual election held in June of that year he was elected by one vote—that of C. J. Hite, who had been counted to vote against him. During the year that followed the Mutual was a divided camp, but the high quality of the pictures being produced by Ince and Griffith more than carried the concern along in public favor.

Freuler Elected President.

At the annual election held in 1915 the anti-Aitken forces held the ascendency and Mr. Aitken stepped aside in favor of John R. Freuler, and a new regime was inaugurated. Mr. Freuler continued his management of Mutual until August, 1916, when he was obliged to step aside and the presidency fell to James M. Sheldon. During his management Mr. Freuler is said to have liquidated a large floating indebtedness standing against the corporation, but he lost the prestige of the Ince and Griffith productions which were taken over by Mr. Aitken to the Triangle Corporation which he formed when he left the Mutual. Mr. Freuler's best venture was the then spectacular deal with Charles Chaplin to whom he paid an unheard of salary of $670,000 in one year. His action in moving the general offices of the company to Chicago, August, 1916, did not prove so advantageous and upon his retirement it was brought back to New York.

During Mr. Freuler's administration most of the producing companies releasing through Mutual went out of business or stopped producing, until all that was left was the product of the American Film Company in which Mr. Freuler was interested, and the Screen Telegram, which was a news reel started during his administration. The American withdrew its product shortly after Mr. Freuler withdrew, and the Screen Telegram has been sold to Hearst, as before stated.

The development of the Affiliated with the Mutual exchanges to distribute its product will be a matter of considerable interest to picture men.

Publicity Department Removes to Chicago.

The publicity and advertising department of the Mutual Film Corporation, which moved from Chicago to the New York branch, July 1, has been moved back to the executive offices in Chicago under the merger with the Affiliated Distributors.

The removal was under the supervision of Colvin W. Brown, advertising manager of the Mutual, who became acting head of the department upon the resignation of Terry Ramsaye.

Mildred Harris Wife of Chas. Chaplin Since Oct. 23

THE several rumors, denials and rumors that have issued from Los Angeles concerning the private affairs of Mildred L. Harris and Charles Chaplin came to a definite termination late last week when admission was made by all concerned that Miss Harris and Mr. Chaplin had been man and wife since October 23.

Mildred Harris.

Miss Harris, who has been starring in Universal films for some time, desired that the marriage should be kept a secret and Mr. Chaplin seems to have been doing the best he could to fulfill his wife's wishes. But when, with the exercise of her just prerogative, Mrs. Chaplin changed her mind and wanted the fact recorded, announcement came with due confirmation and the fact may now be imparted that the drollest of screen comedians is now the husband of one of the prettiest girls ever filmed.

So many important items have tumbled into public attention that the future plans of bride and groom have not, as yet, come to the surface. It is presumably fair to presume that they will continue their several ways, as in the past, Mr. Chaplin to creat million dollar comedies for the First National Exhibitors Circuit, while Miss Harris will continue the heroine of emotional films produced by Universal.

Robertson-Cole to Issue New Billie Rhodes Features

THE Robertson - Cole Company, which lately has acquired a number of important features for world-wide distribution, is planning an exploitation campaign covering two hemispheres for Billie Rhodes, the new star of the National Film Corporation.

Robertson - Cole has immediately started outlining a big campaign across country and through other lands which bids fair to make Miss Rhodes one of the best known screen celebrities. One of the first steps will be a special New York presentation for the trade. At this de luxe premiere, Miss Rhodes will be officially introduced to the film world as a feature star.

The first Billie Rhodes picture is "The Girl of My Dreams," to be followed by a picturesque circus girl story. Miss Rhodes has completed the second production, and is now visiting in New York.

One city of the country, Los Angeles, has already seen "The Girl of My Dreams" at a pre-release showing. T. L. Tally, by special arrangement, presented Miss Rhodes' first big effort at his Los Angeles Theatre. Mr. Tally, as a result of that pre-view, has christened her "the screen's daintiest star." All of the Los Angeles motion picture critics are enthusiastic over Miss Rhodes' debut into the realm of feature stars.

GRIP OF INFLUENZA IS LOOSENING

Nearly All Sections of Country Open Doors of Theatres to Good Business—Northwest and San Francisco Still Closed—Crowds Acclaim Resumption in the Southwest

WITH few exceptions health authorities in the United States have lifted the ban imposed on motion picture theatres by reason of the inroads of influenza. San Francisco is to remain closed until December 1. Seattle and the northwest generally have extended the embargo on theatres. In North Carolina Charlotte, Winston-Salem and Raleigh were closed at the latest writing, although the remainder of the State is open to picturegoers. Dayton has opened its theatre doors to all but the children. The situation in Illinois shows marked improvement.

Houses in the Southwest have resumed business to the hearty satisfaction of throngs of picture patrons. Towns situated near cantonments especially have felt the boom. Pennsylvania, where the epidemic was very heavy, has thrown open its doors. The national capital, too, has permitted theatre men to entertain their patrons.

The coming of peace, together with the opening of the screen houses, marks a dramatic shift in the business situation facing motion picture men a month ago. There is every indication of a big winter for motion picture theatres.

November 11 Tentative Date for Minneapolis Opening

PICTURE men of Minneapolis considered as a joke the proposal of Dr. H. M. Guilford, city health commissioner, to reopen all theatres if proprietors would compel patrons and attendants to wear influenza masks. Dr. Guilford declared that Minneapolis theatres could open at once if this precaution was taken, but none of the houses took advantage of the opportunity. November 11 has been fixed by the health commissioner as the tentative date for the reopening of theatres should conditions permit.

"I'd just as soon hang out a smallpox sign," said I. H. Ruben, president of the Ruben & Finkelstein chain of ten Minneapolis and six St. Paul theatres, commenting on the chance to resume business with a masked audience and orchestra. "The idea is too absurd to give it serious consideration."

Mr. Ruben declared that his Minneapolis theatres were losing $30,000 worth of business weekly on account of the ban. It is estimated that the loss in business to all Minneapolis exchanges will run close to $100,000 a week.

"The only thing the exhibitors can do now is to wait until the all clear signal is given publicly and driven home by the health authorities and the press," he said. "The public is thoroughly alarmed, and it would be folly to reopen before that time. The idea to require patrons to wear influenza masks is a joke."

St. Paul Gets a Scare.

While Minneapolis was preparing for the reopening of theatres, exhibitors of St. Paul, which has staunchly remained wide open in the face of the influenza epidemic, were given a scare last week, when an attempt was made to close the town.

A citizens' committee was appointed in St. Paul by the City Council to cope with the epidemic situation. Following the report that the hospital facilities in St. Paul were not sufficient to check a serious outbreak, Dr. B. F. Simon, health commissioner of that city, added that at least 100 St. Paul persons suffering from influenza would probably be removed to hospitals if space was available.

A resolution asking the city health authorities to close up the city was introduced at a meeting of the emergency committee, but the health authorities decided that there was yet no cause for issuing closing orders.

Fewer deaths from influenza occurred in St. Paul, where theatres, schools and churches remained open, than in Minneapolis, where they were closed, for the week ending October 26.

This is the information contained in a bulletin received at the health offices in Minneapolis from the Federal Bureau of Vital Statistics. For the week ending October 19 there were 64 deaths in St. Paul and 89 in Minneapolis. For the week ending October 26 there were 47 deaths in St. Paul to 128 in Minneapolis. Dr. Guilford said comparisons are unfair, as the epidemic has not attained the proportions in St. Paul that it has in Minneapolis.

Many Towns Open.

The influenza situation in Minneapolis continues to show a steady improvement, and many small towns in this territory have reopened during the past few days, after having been closed for a short time.

Some of the towns which have reopened are as follows: Minnesota—Canby, Ironton, International Falls, Willmar, Glenwood, St. Charles, Winthrop, Bemidji, Slayton, Clara City, Delano, Mabel, St. Peter, Raymond, Fairmont, Marshall, Baudette, Crookston, Northfield, Owatonna, Spirit Lake, Winona, Mora, Karlstad, Chatfield, Comfrey, Crosby, Jackson, Redwood Falls, Blue Earth, Faribault, Glencoe.

North Dakota—Grand Forks, Dickinson, Bismarck, Leeds, Portland, Wahpeton, Fargo and Mohall.

South Dakota—Sioux Falls, Mount Vernon, Redfield.

Wisconsin—Green Bay and Spencer.

Montana—Plentywood.

All of Michigan Is Now Free of Influenza Ban

THE moving picture theatres in Detroit were formally reopened on Wednesday, November 6, by consent of Governor Albert E. Sleeper, and through the efforts of Dr. James W. Inches, Detroit health officer. When the governor was in Detroit on Saturday, November 2, he told the local representative of the Moving Picture World that there was no possible chance of the ban being lifted before Friday, November 8, possibly the 7th. He said he had talked with Dr. Olin, of the State Board of Health, who assured him that it would be a serious mistake to open before the epidemic had been completely banished from the state, and that, furthermore, he was acting upon the advice of members of state boards in other sections. After all it did put the governor in a rather peculiar and sensitive position.

Ban Not a Political Move.

The governor to the World correspondent absolutely denied that the ban on theatres and public gatherings was a political move, declaring that it was done entirely in the interests of the health of Michigan. "I wish I could lift the ban—I wish conditions justified doing so," said the governor. "But see the position I am placed in. I have had made protests against reopening by people of prominence in almost every section, while on the other hand the protests were comparative few against closing, among them being some of the theatre owners and ministers. Personally, I would rather see no ban at all, and only acted in accordance with the recommendations of the State Board of Health, whose mission and function it is to safeguard public health."

Governor Consents to Opening.

Dr. Inches notified theatres they could open starting Wednesday, as a result of a conversation he had with the governor at his home on November 4. The governor denied this, saying that he had given Detroit special permission to hold a Christian Science meeting on Wednesday night, and refusing to lift the ban. Dr. Inches again got the governor on the telephone, and, after assuring him that Detroit was normal as far as sickness was concerned, succeeded in finally persauding the governor to say, "Well, as long as you misunderstood me and the theatres are ready to open, I won't stand in their way."

However, the ban on the rest of Michigan was not lifted until Friday, November 8.

Louisville Opened November 10.

The State Board of Health of Kentucky, at a meeting in Louisville, November 6, partially lifted the ban, with the result that picture theatres in Louisville will continue operations starting Sunday, November 10. The ban was also lifted at Mayfield and Bowling Green. The State Board of Health refused to lift the ban in other cities and counties, leaving it to the local boards of such counties to investigate and report their findings to the state board before any lifting is done. It was reported at the meeting that there had been 175,000 influenza cases in the state, and 3,636 deaths, irrespective of deaths at Camp Taylor. The ban on racing at Latonia was left to the authorities of Kenton County to report to the state board.

Buffalo Lifts Influenza Ban.

By proclamation of Mayor Buck, of Buffalo, the quarantine laid on this city on account of the Spanish influenza has been lifted. The disease played havoc with the health of several in the film business, but fortunately no local deaths in the game were reported. The opening of all theatres, schools and various other places since the checking of the plague have helped to put the picture business here on a prosperous basis. The rush promises to continue right through the fall and winter.

All Theatres in South Carolina Open.

Theatres throughout South Carolina opened simultaneously on Monday, November 4, the closing order having been lifted by order of the State Board of Health on Saturday, November 2. In the cities where cantonments are located in the state, business is reported at capacity since opening, but in other towns there is a feeling that it will require three to six weeks to overcome the effects of the closed period. Theatres in Columbia were prepared for the opening with tentative bookings, and opened with exceptional attractions, which drew capacity crowds.

Charlotte Still Closed Tight.

While almost the entire State of North Carolina has now reopened, the majority of the cities lifting the ban effective November 4, Charlotte is still closed tight, with likelihood of reopening not earlier than the middle of November, if then. Conditions here have not improved as rapidly as the health authorities had hoped, and much opposition has developed to reopening until all danger of a recurrence has passed.

Winston-Salem Keeps Ban on Theatres.

The ban on church gatherings in Winston-Salem, N. C., was lifted, effective November 3. Soda fountains were reopened the following day, but nothing has been said regarding a tentative opening date for the theatres. Much opposition to a reopening thus early even of the churches has developed, and it is doubtful whether they will remain open. The theatres had expected to reopen on November 4, coincident with the lifting of the ban on soda fountains, and much surprise was exhibited when the Board of Health failed to name theatres in their opening order. Managers had booked attractions on a tentative arrangement, which were hurriedly canceled Saturday night.

Conditions Still Bad in Raleigh.

Epidemic conditions in Raleigh, N. C., have not improved sufficiently to yet warrant a reopening of the theatres and other places of assembly, according to Dr. Charles W. Stiles, in charge of the entire epidemic situation in North Carolina. While other cities in the vicinity, including Greensboro and Durham, opened on November 4, Raleigh will likely have two additional weeks of inactivity, if the health board's opinion is not changed materially.

Business Poor in Wilmington.

Wilmington, N. C.—Picture theatres are finding conditions materially changed since the theatres were allowed to reopen on October 21, and fear a dull season at least for the next two or three months. Attendance at the local picture houses has been away below par since reopening, not even keeping up to the hot weather records for attendance. The epidemic is entirely wiped out here, and the only cause to which poor business can be attributed is the fact that many have found that they can enjoy their own fireside of evenings, and have become more or less detached from their habit of attending the movies by the closed period, which extended over four weeks' time.

Heavy newspaper advertising failed to bring the crowds upon the reopening, and, after three weeks of poor business, the managers are looking around for a solution to the problem. Pictures of higher than ordinary quality have been offered in an effort to tempt the stay-at-homes back again with but poor results.

Kansas and Missouri Resume Full Operations

THE Kansas State ban on gatherings was raised, effective midnight, November 2; put into force at that time in order that church services might be held Sunday. In some cities there are Sunday moving picture exhibitions, and these were consequently relieved of the state interdiction. However, each locality continued to operate independently with reference to influenza restrictions, and in more than half the cities and towns theatrical exhibitions, and in most cases other gatherings also, were kept closed another week.

The lifting of the ban in Kansas was anticipated, and during the previous week scores of exhibitors sent tentative instructions on resuming service to the Kansas City exchanges. In many instances, the local bans were not finally lifted and the exhibitors had to send word to exchanges that they could not start yet.

Wires canceling shipping orders came into Kansas City thick and fast on Saturday, November 2. Usually the "paper" had been forwarded, but the films had been retained until certainty of reopening of theatres was established.

In Missouri there has been no general state restriction on gatherings, though nearly every community has followed suit of large cities with respect to prohibition of gatherings. Very few Missouri towns are reopening the week of November 4.

Exhibitors and Exchanges Co-operate.

"Exhibitors and exchanges seem to be entering the approaching period of small annoyances over bookings with the best of co-operative spirit," said L. B. Douglad, manager of the Universal Film and Supply Company branch at Kansas City. "It's going to take a little time to work out the minor problems—and everybody seems inclined to give and take, to bear a little. Naturally, the exchanges are going to do the best they can to help the exhibitors get what they want and to avoid disappointments."

It is apparent from the comments of exhibitors on the situation that they realize the losses of producers and exchanges during this period. Whatever complaints have been made have been against local health authorities which do not seem to have applied restrictions with reference to local conditions, but have fallen into line with the action of other communities. In some towns the restrictions have been even more which have had no cases of influenza severe than those in towns where the epidemic has been most serious.

The harmony existing between the exhibitors and exchanges at the present stage of the situation is unfortunately not extended to the relations of the exhibitors with each other—reports have reached Kansas City of lack of co-operation among the exhibitors of certain localities, which has embarrassed those picture men who have tried to take a firm hold on the epidemic complications. Especial regret is felt that the annual convention of the Kansas association could not be held at the time the epidemic was starting in the state, as harmonious action throughout the state by exhibitors might have been effected.

Feared to Open Before Election.

An interesting coincidence connected with the reopening of Kansas City theaters is that the lifting of the ban was postponed until after election—and this was the chronological order a year ago when a serious strike was settled. The epidemic seemed on Sunday, November 3, to be so far in hand that the restrictions might well have been removed. But Election Day, November 5, was a factor—no official wanted to take any action prior to that day that might react against him.

It will be remembered that the ban was imposed first in Kansas City on a Tuesday, October 8; gatherings were prohibited for one week—churches being closed the following Sunday—and the ban was lifted Monday, October 14. Restrictions went on again, in severer form, October 17. Some exhibitors urged that the ban be lifted November 6, the day following election, but others were inclined to hope that they would not have to open their theatres to possible small and unprofitable business until Saturday.

Restrictions Extended in Northwestern Section

BEGINNING Saturday, November 2, the theatres of Seattle will not be alone in suffering the absolute shutting off of business because of the influenza epidemic. The mayor and the health commissioner announce that all retail and wholesale stores and all office buildings would be closed after 3 o'clock, October 31, would be open from 10 to 3 only November 4, and that Saturday all would remain closed. How long this order will be in effect will be determined by the extent to which the disease is checked.

This step was taken, as was the closing of the theatres, to prevent such heavy mortalities as occurred in the eastern cities. There were 492 new cases reported within the last twenty-four hours preceding the issue of the order and sixteen deaths. This is an increase in the number of new cases, but a decided decrease in the number of deaths for the last few days.

Influenza Receding in Ohio.

Reports from all over Ohio, and especially from the health authorities of Cincinnati, are to the effect that the influenza epidemic is noticeably on the wane, and that, with due care, it is probably due to disappear in a short time. Both the number of deaths and the number of new cases are much smaller than at any time during the past month, giving reason to believe that the disease will continue to diminish and will finally die out. In a few cities through the state theatres and other places have already been permitted to open, although as a rule the order forbidding all gatherings continues in effect. The State Health Department lodges full discretion in this respect in local authorities, and within a few days it is believed the Cincinnati Board of Health will relax the closing orders now in force.

Butte Opened November 9.

Butte, Mont., Nov. 5.

Theatres will reopen here Saturday, November 9, according to health officials.

Louisiana Expects to Open Again About November 17

IT IS CLAIMED that the city of New Orleans and Louisiana territory have suffered more from the restrictions laid upon the theatres because of the prevalence of Spanish influenza than any other part of the country. The officials were somewhat tardy in closing places of amusement and the disease had a good start before drastic measures were adopted. The theatres readily acquiesced in all restrictions placed upon them and closed their doors willingly. The malady ran its course and the people returned to their normal habits of life, but were denied the motion picture shows and other forms of amusement. Some of the exhibitors began to grow restless under the restraint. They could see no good reason for the continued enforced closing of the theatres. The patrons deluged them with demands as to when the theatres were to open. The health authorities would give no intimation of when affairs should be allowed to resume their usual trend, and the canvass of the situation began. There were three heads of departments concerned in the determination of the date upon which places of amusement were to be allowed to resume operations.

On Sunday, November 3, the churches were allowed to open, and the clamor for the opening of the picture shows became the more insistent. But, unfortunately, some of the exhibitors set up a howl for immediate opening, with the result that the newspapers took up the discussion and other exhibitors were powerless to make their silence effective. However, a meeting was held, and November 17 was tentatively selected as the opening date of the theatres in this state, and it is expected that it will not be long until things are running in their accustomed fashion. Meanwhile the people have come into a full appreciation of the pleasure they derive from the daily attendance at the picture shows.

Big Influx of Business in Opened Southwest District

ALMOST as suddenly as it appeared the influenza has vanished from the major portion of the southwestern territory, and quarantine has been raised in almost every city of importance in Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Exhibitors are doing a business which has never been equaled in the past, and film exchanges are again working full staffs amid bustling activity. Managers are finding that complete rebooking and revising of schedules following the general closing is no mean task. Most of them are taking occasion to correct and improve their former routing plans so as to afford the most efficient service possible to exhibitors who are clamoring for film.

From all parts of Texas come reports that the business of exhibitors is wonderful. It was at first feared the public would be slow to patronize the playhouses. Instead of this, amusement-hungry Texans waited in line to get seats at the theatres in most of the large cities.

Soldier Patronage Heavy.

In Fort Worth the theatres were closed only ten days. On Saturday, November 2, theatre managers were astonished by a sudden rush of khaki. Soldiers swarmed to the picture shows. Theatre managers called up army officials and were informed that the quarantine was off at Camp Bowie, the great cantonment just outside Fort Worth, and the soldiers for the first time in a month had the privilege of seeking their own amusement in the town. The exhibitors had to turn hundreds away during the afternoon and evening, and similar conditions prevailed over Sunday, November 3.

The lid came off in Dallas Saturday, November 2. It was at first proposed not to open the theatres until November 9 or 10, but the city health authorities, finding a sudden drop in influenza cases and deaths, advanced the opening a week.

Dallas Theatres Played to Capacity.

Every theatre from the big downtown shows to the little suburban playhouses were jammed to the aisles during Saturday and Sunday. Managers brushed the dust from their Standing Room Only signs and brought them into play. Dallas exhibitors are more than optimistic. They declare the public has been brought to realize that the amusement afforded by their theatres plays a very real part in the lives of Dallas folks. They are confident that losses sustained through the three weeks' quarantine will be more than made up during the coming winter season.

Epidemic in Illinois Shows Improved Condition

AT the time of writing, Saturday, November 9, epidemic conditions in Chicago have greatly improved. New cases of influenza and pneumonia in Chicago showed a steady and continuous decline for the week.

The new cases of influenza for Friday, November 8, were only 150 as against 179 for the preceding day, and the death rate from this ailment was 58 on Friday as compared with Thursday's report of 66.

The number of new pneumonia cases for Friday was 38, with 28 deaths on that day from this cause, whereas Thursday showed 35 new cases and 35 deaths. Beginning Monday, November 4, all theatres in Chicago were permitted to run full time.

State Director of Health Dr. Drake's office in the Hotel Sherman, furnished the following particulars concerning conditions in Illinois generally, on Friday afternoon, November 8.

In the northern section of the State the following cities and towns are still under quarantine: Galena, St. Charles, Sterling, Kewanee, Rock Island, Moline, Monmouth and Aberdeen.

In the central section, quarantine still holds in Canton, Macomb, Havana, Pekin, Lincoln, Jacksonville, Quincy, Taylorville and Danville.

In the southern section all communities are still under quarantine, with the sole exception of Murphysboro. However, the situation is at a standstill with the indications pointing towards betterment in this section.

Last Bans Are Lifted on Baltimore Theatres

AS the health conditions in Baltimomore continued to become steadily better, Health Commissioner John D. Blake, of that city, decided November 1 that the partial bans still affecting the theatres should be entirely lifted at noon on Saturday, November 2. The bans as they affected all other business enterprises, schools and sports were lifted on Monday, November 4, with the exception of the order not allowing goods to be sent out from stores on approval and returned and this remained in effect, this last restriction being lifted on November 7.

According to the figures which have been made public by the City Health Department and the State Bureau of Communicable Diseases, a total of 47,106 cases of influenza were reported by physicians in the State, this number including 26,714 in the counties and 20,392 in Baltimore.

During the month of October there were 3,414 deaths in Baltimore caused by the epidemic of influenza and pneumonia.

The health bans have been lifted also in the following cities: Petersburg, Va., November 4, excepting the schools; Hagerstown, Md., November 6, with schools scheduled to open Monday, November 11; Cumberland, Md., November 4.

At Frederick, Md., all the bans were practically lifted on Monday, November 4, and orders were given that moving picture theaters had to be well ventilated before opening, between performances, and had to be given an airing for fifteen minutes between shows if a double performance was given at night.

A peculiar thing happened at Federalsburg, Md., when, after the bans had been lifted Sunday, October 27, by the board of health of that city, they again clamped down tight on Monday evening, October 28, when diphtheria made its appearance and was confined to one family.

Pennsylvania Theatres Now Running Full Tilt

AUTHENTIC information received from reliable source show that 90 per cent. of the theatres in Eastern Pennsylvania were operating on Monday, November 9, and 100 per cent. by Wednesday, November 1. The epidemic ban which is now being gradually removed by the authorities in nearly every district throughout this state, is expected to become a thing of the past by Wednesday, at the very latest.

G. Segel, booker of the Paramount and Artcraft exchange, is now accepting dates on shows for both Monday and Wednesday of the above mentioned days. Business in Philadelphia is gradually resuming its normal condition, although immediately following the reopening of the theatres, it was apparent that neighborhood houses had only regained 50 per cent. of their regular patronage, while the centrally located houses had restored only 70 per cent. of their clientele.

Conditions in this city, however, have shown a decided improvement and since Thursday, November 3, many exhibitors have remarked that they were doing a capacity business. Ninety per cent. of the theatres in Philadelphia are

November 10 the Date for Iowa Reopenings

THE lid is gradually being pried off in Iowa and theatrical conditions are becoming normal. While comparatively few theatres are open at this writing, the majority of them will resume operations the coming week and before November 10 the entire state, unless the unexpected should happen, will be doing business as usual.

Local film exchanges are sending men out the coming week for the first time since the ban went into effect. Contrary to expectations, there was not turnaway business locally for either the picture theatres or the others on resuming activities. The public seemed a little timorous about chancing large gatherings, although business continued to improve throughout the week.

The ban has not been lifted for soldiers from Camp Dodge on attending theatres. A military policeman stands on guard at each theatre entrance and stops any prospective soldier customers. The rule applies to officers as well as men. It is understood this phase of the ban will be lifted within the next few days, and with 25,000 soldiers at camp and more scheduled to come in during the month things should boom at the picture houses again.

San Francisco Managers to Celebrate Reopening

THE epidemic of influenza is abating in northern California, and it is anticipated that theatres will be reopened at a comparatively early date. In some communities in the interior tentative plans were made for reopening November 10. There is little probability, at this writing, that San Francisco houses may also be allowed to open their doors again on that date. Some exhibitors express the opinion, however, that it would be the part of wisdom to defer the opening date until every assurance can be given that all danger is passed.

On November 1 the leading theatre managers of the city, together with film exchange men, met at a luncheon at Tait's and discussed the proposition of holding a grand downtown celebration the night before the reopening to give thanks for the final return to health of San Francisco. It was suggested that the Board of Supervisors, the Down Town Association, the Chamber of Commerce, the various unions connected with the theatrical business and the newspapers be urged to aid the festival in every way possible, so that the event would not only be participated in by the million residents of Greater San Francisco but by out-of-town residents as well. Definite plans for the celebration will depend upon the selection of the opening date by the local Board of Health. This may be as late as December 1.

Washington Opens to Big Business.

Big business greeted every theatre in Washington, D. C., when the ban on public amusements was lifted November 4, and since that date most of the houses have been hanging out "S. R. O." signs every night.

Local exhibitors lean toward the impression that the closed period, although it entailed a loss of many thousands of dollars to the industry in this city, was in a way a good thing for the game. "For some time prior to the first of October," said on exhibitor, "I noticed a little falling-off of interest in motion pictures. True, we continued to do capacity business as before, but the people did not come in bunches but in a stream and the audience fell off a little earlier than it had been doing. The city was so full of strangers with few friends and, therefore, many evenings with nothing to do, that we were assured of capacity business, but still the impression prevailed that people were fed-up with the films. Now, however, the crowds are big and we cannot accommodate all who would like to see the show. The rest gave them a chance to digest the pictures they had seen, and to get hungry for more, while undoubtedly thousands of people found time to hang heavy on their hands with no motion picture shows at which to spend the evening."

Toronto Opened November 4.

When the health authorities of Toronto raised the ban on theatrical performances on Monday, November 4, a restriction was continued in that the admission of all children under the age of seventeen years to theatres was absolutely prohibited under any and all circumstances. This order was a hard one to swallow because the Toronto schools continued closed for a week after theatres reopened because of the epidemic and the children had no place to go.

Toronto exhibitors showed confidence in the situation, however, by booking the best pictures on the market for their reopenings. A few raised prices for special attractions and a few conducted special matinee performances on the reopening Monday in order to make up for some of the lost ground.

Generally speaking, the closing of Toronto theatres for the two weeks resulted in a state of affairs that could not have been obtained under any other circumstances. It was literally a "clean-up period" for all theatres and the theatres were never in better shape, from a physical standpoint, than they were when they reopened on November 4.

Dayton Opens with Ban on Children.

Dayton theatre and public amusements were allowed to open Saturday, November 2. Only one limitation was placed on the operation of the local theatres, this being that children under sixteen were not to be allowed to enter the theatres until further notice was given by the health board. Local managers and theatre people in general were pleased with the opening, Dayton having been closed for the last four weeks. It is thought the ban on children under sixteen will be lifted within the next week, thus making the opening complete.

The Dayton Theatre opened with Geraldine Farrar in "The Turn of the Wheel," with special music by the Dayton Symphony orchestra, under the direction of Dennis Ahern. Dewit H. Thomas, musical director of the Dayton, whose wife passed away several weeks ago, is ill at his father's home in Indianapolis, but a long distance call brought the news that Mr. Thomas will be able to resume duties at an early date. The Strand opened with the Paramount-Artcraft special, "The Hun Within," and according to reports business at that house was not up to the usual standard.

The neighborhood houses are suffering more than the downtown houses, however, and at the Alhambra, a five-hundred-seat house, on Sunday, November 3, the matinee, which is usually good, brought out not over one hundred all afternoon. Other suburban houses are suffering in proportion, and all are eagerly waiting for the ban to be lifted on the children under sixteen.

Ban Still On in Portland.

Everything is still quiet in Portland, Ore., motion picture circles. Several of the smaller cities in the territory have allowed the picture houses to reopen. There is no prospect of the lifting of the the ban in the large cities for at least another week, if then.

Cape Breton Opens; St. John Closed.

The cases of influenza in St. John, N. B., are decreasing, but it is not at all likely that the theatres will be opened this coming week. The health authorities are determined to stamp out the epidemic. The picture houses and theatres all through Cape Breton have been reopened and the people are enjoying once more the opportunity of going to picture shows.

Film Clearing House Buys Kleine Exchanges

CLOSELY following the announcement that a number of prominent New York business men had taken advantage of the opportunity offered by the temporary closing of theatres and the consequent readjustment of the different branches of the motion picture industry to work out a new and distinct plan of distribution which would be put into operation immediately on a permanent basis under the name of Film Clearing House, Inc., comes the statement that the new company has bought outright all of the George Kleine exchanges and will have them remodeled for immediate operation under the Film Clearing House plan.

Frank G. Hall as Supervising Director.

Among the well-known film men who have joined forces are Lynn S. Card, who is acting as general manager of exchanges; Arthur Werner, Jerome Lewis and Frank H. Gilman. Mr. Lewis has now reached Atlanta on a trip through the South, while Mr. Gilman is visiting Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland, Cincinnati and Pittsburgh. D. J. Chatkin, who also has allied himself with Film Clearing House, Inc., is now on his way to the coast, and after supervising the opening of offices in several cities en route will be stationed permanently west of the Rockies.

Managers of exchanges already engaged include Philip E. Meyer, New York; Frank C. Burhans, Pittsburgh; A. Lincoln Ehrgott, Boston; Frank J. Flaherty, Chicago; C. P. Saunders, St. Louis; Carl De Seay, Atlanta, and W. A. Haynes, Detroit.

With the opening date of all branches of Film Clearing House, Inc., definitely set as December 1 and their readiness for complete operation on that date now a certainty, interesting announcements regarding producers who will take immediate advantage of the new outlet for their pictures are promised in the near future.

THEATRICAL MEN BACK WAR DRIVE

Moving Picture Interests Active In Raising Liberal Share of the Immense Sum Needed to Comfort Our Soldiers on Foreign Soil as Well as In Home Camps

THE Allied Theatrical, Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Committee of the United War Work Campaign, of which William Fox is chairman and George M. Cohan associate chairman, completed their organization to raise the amount of money allotted to them by the Executive Committee in charge of the National drive which is on in full swing until November 18. Mr. Fox opened his campaign headquarters at 110 West 42d street, where huge floor space has been taken, and hundreds of workers installed. Under Mr. Fox's leadership, there has been mapped out an elaborate series of entertainments, which it is hoped will realize more than one-half the amount to be collected.

The members of the Allied team are: William Fox, chairman; George M. Cohan, associate chairman; B. S. Moss, E. F. Albee, A. L. Erlanger, Marcus Loew, Sam A. Scribner, Adolph Zukor, Lee Shubert and Sam H. Harris.

On November 10 E. F .Albee presented a monster vaudeville bill at the Hippodrome, the proceeds of which were donated to the United War Work Campaign Funds. A War Relics Exposition will be held at the First Field Artillery Armory, Sixty-eighth Street and Broadway, and at the Twenty-third Armory, Bedford and Atlantic Avenues, Brooklyn, under the auspices of the Allied Theatrical and Motion Picture Team, for eight days, having started Monday November 11. War trophies gathered on the battlefields of Europe by the Allied Armies for the U. S. Committee on Public Information, will be shown. These entertainments are being staged by W. F. Hamilton of the U. S. Committee on Public Information.

On Tuesday, November 12, at the Metropolitan Opera House, a concert was held at which John McCormack, Maggie Teyte and Jacque Thibaud, appeared

On Saturday afternoon, November 16, there will be a football game at the Polo Grounds, between Princeton and Harvard, the proceeds to be donated to the fund. Saturday night Charles Harvey will present an all star fistic and athletic tournament at Madison Square Garden. The crowning event of the day will be the great Victory Ball, to be held at the Hotel Astor. It is expected that every one who's who in filmdom and the stage will be there.

Sunday night, November 17, the Friar's Club will give a Friar's Frolic at the Metropolitan Opera House, staged and directed by George M. Cohan. The proceeds are to be donated to the Campaign Fund.

Motion Picture Interests Co-operate in War Drive

BASED on the experience obtained in the Red Cross Drive of last Spring, in which the Industrial Division of the Allied Theatrical Motion Picture, Music and Entertainments Committee rolled up a total subscription of $80,000, a higher total by several thousands than that obtained by the Industrial Division of any other industry in Greater New York, has perfected its organization and its campaign is under way.

As in the Red Cross Drive, William Fox has placed the chairmanship of the Industrial Division in charge of Frederick H. Elliott, Executive Secretary of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry. As soon as he received the official notification of his appointment, Mr. Elliott appointed the following divisional directors to act on the committee with him:

Adolph Zukor, representing the motion picture producers; Walter W. Irwin, representing the motion picture distributors; Jules Brulatour, representing the supply and equipment dealers; Paul Cromelin, representing the motion picture exporters; J. A. Golden, representing the motion picture laboratories; Emanuel Bernstein, representing the motion picture exchanges; Geo. H. Atkinson, representing the Klaw & Erlanger interests; J. W. Jacobs, representing the Shubert's interests; Charles Bird, representing the Elliott, Comstock and Gest's interests; Nicholas Schenk, representing the Marcus Loew interests; Chas. S. Levin, representing the Wm. Fox Circuit of Theatres; Ben Moss, representing the Moss interests; E. F. Albee, representing the B. F. Keith Circuit; John J. Maloney, representing the United Booking Office interests; Henry Chesterfield, representing the National Vaudeville Artists; J. Herbert Mack, representing the Burlesque interests; Jules Whitmark, representing the music publishers; E. Ziegler, representing the Metropolitan Opera House; and A. C. Glucker, representing the wig and costume makers.

A new plan of organization has been worked out for this drive which increases its scope and magnitude to an enormous degree. Divisional Directors will be appointed for every concern directly or indirectly connected with the motion picture or theatrical industries.

Mr. Elliott received his appointment on Friday last and that same night letters went out to the committeemen listed above requesting their assistance. On Saturday letters were sent to all the executive heads of the motion picture distributing concerns requesting them to act as divisional directors for their companies. They were requested to appoint captains of the home office, exchange, studios, laboratories, players, factory and a captain for each branch office. In this way the entire subscription for each company will be kept intact and will not be divided as in the Red Cross Drive.

Washington Wondering as to Future of Division of Films

MOTION picture men are wondering what will happen to the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information when the war ends. George Creel, chairman of the committee, has declared that when peace is signed the activities of his bureau, with the exception of those relating to foreign countries, will cease. Whether this means that the pictures division will at once discontinue its work or will keep it up until the pictures now out and those in preparation have been circulated throughout the country is not stated.

The Division of Films, through its several official motion pictures, has done a great deal to give the people of the country an inside look at the war. It has been pointed out that a great deal of educational work can be done with these pictures, but whether it will be decided that there is no further need of them cannot yet be said.

The question has also arisen as to what will be done with the propaganda pictures portraying the Hun in all his fiendishness. If the Government decides to extend a friendly hand to the new Germany which must arise if peace is to be declared, the dissemination of these pictures will be deterrent to the creation of a friendly feeling between the nations. On the other hand, if Germany is to pay in the future by ostracism, these pictures would be just the thing to keep that idea in the mind of the public.

Gaumont News Service Ready for Post-Bellum

DURING the entire four years of the great cataclysm the Gaumont News Service has furnished screen patrons with the best photographic news of war happenings in every country affected by Germany's mad ambition to rule the world. This, notwithstanding the fact that many Gaumont branches in Germany, Austria, and other parts of Europe and Asia controlled by the Huns, were seized by the enemy.

The Gaumont Company is already planning to improve its cinematographic news service as soon as peace is arranged. All of its offices will be reestablished, and its staff of cameramen which covers the news of the entire world will be increased. Every nook and corner of both hemispheres where news is liable to "break" will be covered. Gaumont news patrons will be assured of the first authentic news pictures of every important event, and it is safe to guarantee that the Gaumont reputation for photographic news "scoops" will be as great in the future as in the past.

In France, the Gaumont news service is released under the name "Gaumont Actualities"; in England, as the "Gaumont Graphic." In this country the service is released semi-weekly, the Tuesday issues being named "Gaumont News" and the Friday issues, "Gaumont Graphic." The "News" and "Graphic" will continue to be released throughout the United States and Canada by states-right exchanges, as at present. For the present, the semi-weekly schedule will be maintained, but it is not at all improbable that at times extras may be published or even daily issues.

FIRST NATIONAL SIGNS MARY PICKFORD

Initial Work of Actress as an Independent Producer Will Be "Daddy Long Legs"—Also Buys Screen Rights of "Pollyanna" —Open Booking to Prevail on New Subjects

MARY PICKFORD has joined the ranks of independent screen stars who are the heads of their own producing companies, in a contract signed November 9 providing for the distribution of her future releases through First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

Miss Pickford acted as her own agent and representative both during the preliminary negotiations and in signing the contract. Mr. Harry Schwalbe, secretary-treasurer, and J. D. Williams, manager, respectively, of the First National, represented that organization. The star, her mother and her attorney and the two officials of the exhibitor-distributing concern were the only persons present at the time the epoch-making agreement was executed.

The sum involved was not made public by officials of First National, but they admitted that it is the greatest amount ever paid any feminine star, either in the total for the contract, or in the price for each production.

Miss Pickford left on Sunday for Los Angeles, where, as an independent producer, she will complete arrangements for beginning work on "Daddy Longlegs," her first release through First National exchanges.

The signing of the contract is the finale to months of varied and active speculation and rumor.

Three Months to Each Picture.

It is explained by officials of First National that Miss Pickford's contract does not provide for any specific release dates on any of her productions. She told them that an average of three months would be required for each release to allow ample time for the effort she proposed putting into each subject to insure the high quality she is determined to attain. The terms and conditions of the contract are said to be such that Miss Pickford can take any length of time she feels is necessary, without interference or requests for haste which would sacrifice merit to time.

The contract, it is said, makes Miss Pickford personally responsible for every release she makes through First National. She is now the head of her own producing company, on exactly the same basis that Mr. Chaplin makes his comedies for the exhibitor-directed distributing concern.

"We feel exactly the same as our franchise holders do about the contract with Miss Pickford," said an official of First National. "Pre-eminent among feminine screen stars, with a popularity that is phenomenal, she has given the weight of her name, her prestige and her box-office value to the exhibitor-created policy on which First National is founded—quality production through specialization, personal responsibility for the merits of her work, and her releases to exhibitors free from conditions or restrictions of any character. That fact, to First National members, is just as important in its promises for the future as is the fact that Pickford-selected, Pickford-made productions will be distributed by First National exchanges.

"We do not hesitate to predict that Miss Pickford's release through our exchanges will be superior in every respect to anything that she has ever done as a salaried or percentage star. In the language of labor, she is her own boss. There is no point of contact between Miss Pickford as a producer and First National as a distributing company until she has completed each negative and it is ready for the market. She is now a specialist in production. We retain our status as specialists in distribution.

Open Booking for Pickfords.

"Exhibitors will be able to book her new productions through First National exchanges without being obliged to contract for any of the other subjects we are marketing. Pickford pictures will be handled, so far as the booking contracts are concerned, as though they were the only releases we have to offer. That fact is the biggest part of the reason for our ability to pay Miss Pickford a price that measures up to her actual worth from a box-office standpoint."

Miss Pickford's first release through First National will be a motion picture adaptation of "Daddy Longlegs." Shortly before she came to New York from Los Angeles to conclude negotiations for her future productions, she purchased the screen rights to "Daddy Longlegs" and "Pollyanna," for a total of $80,000.

The star's mother, who remains in New York temporarily at least, declared that the contract signed on Saturday was the result of months of study and investigation by her daughter, herself and their attorney. An unusual and somewhat radical feature of the agreement was that the star acted as her own agent and representative, and was present at all of the final conferences in which the exact details of the contract were determined upon.

"Mary has given months of deliberation to the future method of marketing her productions," declared Mrs. Pickford. "She has studied the question of distribution from every angle, considered every possibility and eventuality which could be conceived, considering always the present trend of affairs both in production and distribution. Her purchase of the screen rights to 'Daddy Longlegs' and 'Pollyanna' recently was an indication of what her final conclusions might be."

Chaplin Sues to Protect His Inimitable Antics

CHARLES CHAPLIN has again invoked the aid of the courts to protect his inimitable antics, and if the comedian is successful in has latest suit he will be enriched to the extent of $50,000 at the expense of Julius Potash and Isadore Peskov.

In his present action, filed in the United States District Court, through his counsel, Nathan Burkan, the comedian admits that he created a sensation in the motion picture industry some years ago through the presentation of a new character of his own original conception and creation which he first exhibited in "Mabel's Predicament."

"This character, which was very grotesque and comical, was invested by the plaintiff with certain mannerisms, eccentricities, and distinctive peculiarites (which no one will deny), calculated to provoke mirth and cause great laughter," recites the comedian in his complaint. To describe the character we will let Charlie speak for himself:

"His ill-fitting, much too large and loose and baggy trousers; the large shoes, his shuffling, awkward flatfooted walk; the small hat, the cane, the little mustache, together with the mannerisms, eccentricities, gesticulations, gestures and facial expressions present a most unique, extraordinary and distinctive personality," quoth Charlie in his complaint.

And now some "low comedian" attempts to imitate him, Charlie complains, in a moving picture production styled "Charlie in the Trenches"—loose and baggy trousers, large shoes, shuffling walk, mustache and all to the damage of his reputation, avers the originator of the character.

Citing his income of over a million dollars from the First National Exhibitors' Circuit for producing eight pictures the plaintiff asserts he has been incalculably damaged and he demands no less than $50,000, although the alleged infringing picture was only exhibited a few times.

Quinn's Regulation Plan Indorsed by Theatre Men

Los Angeles, November 12.

A PLAN originated by J. A. Quinn, manager of the Rialto Theatre, to regulate the production of films has been indorsed by the Theatre Owners' Association of this city. The plan is to regulate production along all lines through the co-operation of producers and exhibitors, and has for its ultimate object the reduction of inflated rentals and the stabilizing of conditions for producers.

Mr. Quinn says all exhibitors will be lined up and that support is promised by some leading producers and is expected from all. GIEBLER.

A. M. P. A. to Honor Soldier Members.

At the regular weekly meeting of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., held Thursday, November 7, at Rector's, the first steps were taken toward a fitting celebration of the return of those members now in the military and naval srvice of the country, several of whom have been participating in the fighting on the Western Front. To that end, a committee was appointed by President P. A. Parsons, consisting of Paul Lazarus, Bert Adler and Julian Solomon.

The weekly addresses, which proved such an enjoyable and instructive feature of last winter's session, will shortly be resumed, and at Thursday's meeting Arthur James, Julian Solomon and Nat Rothstein were named as the Speakers' Committee for the ensuing year.

The sympathy of the association was extended by resolution to Phillip K. Mindil, whose only son has just been reported killed in action in France. Mr. Mindil was connected with the film industry for many years and numbers many of the members of the association among his friends.

LEAGUE PROTESTS INCREASED TAXES

New York State Exhibitors' League Files Argument With Senate Finance Committee Against Additional Impost on Theatre Men, Saying It Will Particularly Injure Humbler Showmen

IN a lengthy protest prepared for the Finance Committee of the United States Senate by the Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of the State of New York against the proposed increase in taxes to be levied upon the motion picture theatre owner, it is claimed that an additional impost upon the industry would be the means of putting a large number of theatres out of business and that the purpose of the new tax would, therefore, be defeated.

The protest which goes into details and which is signed by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York League, is as follows:

The New York State League of Motion Picture Exhibitors, representing approximately fifteen hundred owners of motion picture houses, begs to submit for your serious consideration their solemn protest against the contemplated increase in taxes to be imposed upon the already overburdened owners of these theatres.

That this step is not taken in a spirit of shirking or slacking toward our country in its hour of need is evident from what these same men have done in the past in carrying their share of the increased financial burdens of the Government and in throwing themselves heart and soul and with all their resources into every win-the-war movement, never with a thought of profit—and often with a direct loss to themselves.

Our protest is based on these two main facts:

1. The proposed new tax is oppressive, discriminative and confiscatory.
2. The proposed new tax will fail of its purpose to increase Government revenue.

The Taxes as Now in Force.

The new law against which we protest proposes to double and in some cases more than double the taxes now in force. These three taxes are:

1. The Seating Tax.
2. The Admission Tax.
3. The Film Tax.

1. The seating tax established under the law of 1914 is a tax for revenue levied from the exhibitors (owners of motion picture houses) and was intended to make up for losses in revenue from import duties and other sources owning to the outbreak of the war. It is a flat tax based upon the seating capacity of each house. It is fair as it now stands, representing the contribution on the part of these owners to the demand of the Government for increased revenue. As a matter of fact, we wouldn't think of protesting against the doubling of this tax. To pay it we deem a privilege and a patriotic duty.

2. The admission tax of 10 per cent. under the law of 1917 is a tax laid directly upon the theatregoing public. On the face of it, this tax is borne by the public which is paying it at the box office. But, and this is very important, indirectly it has become a burden on the exhibitor (owner of the theatre) because immediately after going into effect the increased admission price reduced the attendance at the smaller houses by 25 to 30 per cent. and resulted in the closing of about 20 per cent. of the smaller motion picture theatres in the United States.

3. The film tax under the law of 1917 placed a tax of one-quarter of a cent per foot on all negative film and one-half cent per foot on all positive film. The revenue from this tax was estimated at $2,300,000. This tax was of course intended to tap the manufacturers' profits. Instead of doing so it was promptly passed on by the manufacturers and distributors to the exhibitors in an aggravated form, the exhibitors being charged a flat rate of fifteen cents per reel per day. It is a fact, and it has been admitted by some of the manufacturers and distributors that this charge of fifteen cents per reel yielded them a handsome profit over and above the film tax they had to pay. (It is but just to say that a few of the manufacturers and distributors have refrained from following this pernicious practice.) The exhibitor was absolutely helpless against this extortion. He had no redress in law and he had no way of unloading on the public, because the prices for admission, particularly in the small houses, have reached that limit beyond which they may not be raised without running the danger of playing to empty houses. The film tax in its present form, allowing the manufacturer to pass it on to the exhibitor, is therefore a gross miscarriage of the principle of equity in taxation.

How New Taxes Will Affect Exhibitors.

We submit the doubling of these taxes is oppressive, particularly so to the majority of the exhibitors who are men of small means and are, as matters stand now, often struggling for mere existence. The times, when every little motion picture house was considered a veritable gold mine are of the past. The ever-increasing cost of production and distribution of the pictures—limitless salaries to the stars, riotous extravagance in staging, rapacity of the producers and manufacturers, financial jockeying by the big interests—have driven the prices which the exhibitors must pay for the leasing of film to almost prohibitive figures. Add to this the increase in overhead expenses, such as rent, wages, salaries, light and heat and advertising, and it becomes apparent that the owner of a small house with, let us say, a seating capacity of four hundred to six hundred, is struggling under a burden close to the breaking point. Permit us to quote from the report of the joint legislative committee to investigate the motion picture industry, transmitted to the Legislature of the State of New York on March 15, 1917. On page nine, center of second paragraph, we find:

"The committee is satisfied from its investigation that as a rule the proprietor or owner of the small motion picture theatre, wherever located, is making an exceedingly small profit from his business, and in many cases none whatever, and that it would be an injustice to him to attempt to impost any substantial additional burden. The cost of production of motion pictures in the last two or three years, particularly the so-called special feature pictures, has increased enormously, due to the ridiculously high salaries of the so-called "star" actors and actresses who are engaged in the production of these pictures; to the exceedingly large salaries of the directors of productions of such pictures; of the officers of the various producing corporations, and to the large amounts being paid in the way of royalties to the writers of the plays." . . .

Say Present Taxes are Discriminative.

We further submit that the taxes as they now stand are discriminative, and that instead of increasing them measures should be taken for their distribution on a basis of equity. The seating tax and the film tax fall exclusively and directly on the exhibitor. The admission tax falls indirectly on his shoulders by lowering the attendance at the performances. When looking around for new sources of revenue it was but natural that the Government should turn its eye upon the motion picture industry with its staggering figures of capital invested and profits derived.

And at first glace it looks as if the legislative forces in creating the now existing taxes had in mind to evenly tax producer, exhibitor and the public. As a matter of fact, developments have shown that the exhibitor has, unintentionally we admit, been made the goat for the entire amount of all three taxes.

We further submit that if the taxes as they now stand are doubled and trebled they will become confiscatory as far as the small exhibitor is concerned. To pay double the amount of a seating tax, to pay a flat 10 per cent. on rentals which would approximately treble the present tax, and to see in addition to this a falling off in attendance which may amount to anywhere from 40 to 50 per cent., owing to the doubling of the admission tax, is more than he can possibly stand. The larger houses will survive. They would possibly find a way of passing some of the increased burden on to their public, which is financially in a position to pay higher prices for their amusements. But the small house depending for its patronage on its immediate neighborhood and catering to the families of wage earners could under no circumstances raise the price of admission over and above what it is now. For the small owner it would be a case of shutting down and losing his all.

Futility of Tax as Revenue Maker.

The proposed new tax carries within itself the germ of defeating its own ends. It will fail of its purpose to increase the Government's revenue, because while raising the amount of the taxes in dollars and cents it is bound to lower the number of tax payers.

Eighty per cent. of the sixteen thousand motion picture houses throughout the United States have a seating capacity of only six hundred or less. These 80 per cent. are the backbone of the exhibiting end of the motion picture industry. As demonstrated on the foregoing pages, the owners of the smaller houses can positively not stand any greater burdens than what they are carrying now. The proposed new tax will legislate a majority of them out of existence. It will kill the birds that lay the golden eggs. And the egg basket of the Government will be that much emptier in revenue.

But aside from the question of revenue, there is the broader question of war-time policies which should be taken into consideration. If it is true that amusement and relaxation for the masses is essential in these times of war stress and durance—and the Government has so declared—if it is furthermore true that the motion picture screen and the motion picture houses have afforded the Government heretofore unknown means on an unprecedented scale for propaganda in behalf of the strenuous prosecution of the war and in behalf of measures related thereto such as the saving and conservation of food, appeals for help to the Red Cross, appeals for help to uplift movements—and the Government has so declared—would it then and there be a wise policy to cut the number of these motion picture houses down by 50 per cent. and possibly more?

Conclusions.

Drawing our conclusions from the foregoing statements and taking a survey of the entire question of taxing the motion picture industry, we find ourselves confronted by what we would like to call a serious misconception as to the component parts of the motion picture industry in general and as to their taxability in particular.

Being the latest comer among the new industries, and having had a more rapid development and a quicker growth than any of the old industries, it is perhaps natural that the relative values of the different parts of the industry have as yet not been fully recognized nor correctly appreciated in their true proportions. The investment of fabulous sums of money in the creative and manufacturing end of the motion picture industry has surrounded this part of the industry with a glamor and a golden halo, dazzling to the outsider. It has resulted in designating this part of the industry as the substantial and essential interests and it has given to these in the eye of the general public a preponderance and standing which, to say the least, is exaggerated if not wholly unwarranted.

As a matter of fact, this worship of the golden calf has put into the background the other end of the industry represented in the person of the exhibitor. It has almost put the stamp of negligible measurement upon the part which the exhibitor plays in the industry, a part which is as vital to the success of the entire industry as anything else. Without the exhibitors who have invested their capital and their efforts in presenting the pictures to the masses of motion picture audiences the entire industry would not and could not exist. It should not be forgotten that these men who build, or rent, and equip a moving picture showhouse are the indispensable link between the creator and manufacturer of film and the great public that pays its dimes and quarters to see the film.

Small Exhibitor Has Been Neglected.

In other words we have called out the brass bands and bedecked our buildings with flags and banners and have strewn flowers upon the path of that great wonderful motion picture industry as represented by the millions and millions of dollars invested in the creating and manufacturing end. But we have not given a thought to the thousands and thousands of little fellows, the exhibitors who with their all invested are bringing up the rear of the industry.

What would we say if the people would reserve their homage and their reverence for the generals of our glorious army, for the powerful guns and for our fleets of airplanes, and would allow the humble doughboy, the regiments of foot soldiers, to pass by in silence? Don't we know that in the last analysis it is this humble doughboy who is carrying our message in the barrel of his rifle and on the point of his bayonet to the enemy?

And just so does the humble exhibitor, the doughboy of the motion picture industry, carry the message of the silent drama on his screen to the great public of the United States. Who then will deny that the thousands and thousands of small owners are not just as essential and just as substantial a part of the motion picture industry as the big interests who have until now claimed this position for themselves?

Resume.

We have tried to show and believe we have proved:

1. That the owner of the small motion picture theatre is overburdened by the taxes on the motion picture industry as they now stand.
2. That any increase in these taxes (excepting the seating tax) would spell ruin for thousands of the smaller exhibitors.
3. That in the proposed new legislation stringent measures should be provided to prevent the manufacturers and distributors from passing any taxes imposed upon them on to the exhibitors.

There is no doubt in the mind of this committee that the legislative bodies of the Government in their deliberations and decisions affecting the taxation of the motion picture industry have been guided by the desire and thought of distributing the burden of such taxation equitably and justly among the different interests concerned. But we must repeat and emphasize that the result of this taxation such as we find it today is far removed and utterly at variance with the original intent of the law. The big interests engaged in the creative and manufacturing end of the industry, the self-styled substantial parts of the industry, have so far not paid one single cent, directly or indirectly, of the taxes imposed upon the industry. On the other hand, the exhibitor, the comparatively poor owner of the small motion picture house, has not only cheerfully carried the burden imposed on him by law, but has in addition been forced to carry the rest of the taxation which he was never supposed to carry.

It is with a feeling of absolute confidence in the sense of justice of our lawmakers that we men of the backbone of this industry are looking toward you for remedy and relief, and that we ask you to receive this memorandum and the protest it contains in the spirit which prompted us to submit it to you.

It is up to you gentlemen of the Finance Committee to say the word which will mean to thousands of moving picture house owners and their families either the continuation of a modest existence or utter financial ruin.

TURNER OF SAN FRANCISCO IS DEAD

Prominent Theatre Man and Associate of First National Exhibitors Succumbs to Pneumonia

A TELEGRAM received in New York on Monday told of the death at his home on Frederick street, San Francisco, of J. T. Turner, one of the motion picture industry's oldest members in years of activity, member of the firm of Turner & Dahnken, one of the largest and strongest of the Western film enterprises owning and operating threatre circuits and exchanges and owners of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for Northern California, Nevada and Hawaii, and majority holders of that organization's New York State franchise.

The Late J. T. Turner.

According to the message received by his New York associates, Mr. Turner died of pneumonia. Whether it was developed following illness with Spanish influenza is not known in the East.

Mr. Turner's sudden death terminates a partnership with Mr. Dahnken, which has existed since the motion picture industry was properly "in its infancy." It began with a prospecting trip to the Klondike when both were little more than youths, with a mutual ambition to achieve. The gold regions beckoned a promise of sudden riches, and from it, side by side, they wrested the 'pokes' of yellow nuggets which made their entry into the realms of the amusement world auspicious. Beginning with penny arcades, they enlarged their offerings of wares to the public by using the first films to be made for commercial use in the United States. Unable to obtain the necessary supply of film as exhibitors, they opened a small exchange on Ellis street, San Francisco, and became purchasers and exhibitors.

The enterprise grew with the industry. In a comparatively short time they moved their Ellis street exchange to new and larger quarters on Eddy street. This was the office which was purchased by the General Film Company as its main Western branch.

Meantime their exhibiting activities had demanded an enlarged field, and under the same firm name (Turner & Dahnken) that their exchange was operated, they gradually built up a circuit of theatres and increased their influence and scope.

Today, as in the periods preceding the present, Turner & Dahnken are known throughout the amusement world as one of its strongest and most powerful sectional factors.

Mr. Turner is survived by his widow and six children, the youngest a son five years old.

In the death of Mr. Turner First National Exhibitors' Circuit suffers the first loss among its original organizers and franchise holders. The news of the passing of this splendid representative of the motion picture business will be read with deep regret by a host of friends all over the country.

Lieut. Guy Brandt Is Dead in Washington

ONE of the sad happenings of the week in Washington was the death of Lieutenant Guy Brandt, followed on the day of his burial by the death of his mother. The young man was one of the most popular of the members of the film industry, in which he had been employed for twelve years or more. He started in the business in Baltimore in the employ of Pearce & Scheck. When General Film opened its office in the Capitol city he was its first booker and remained with the company until 1913, when he went with Abe Bresner as assistant manager of the Pittsburgh office of Warner's Features.

After a year in the Smoky City Mr. Brandt returned to Washington, rejoining General Film. When the K-E-S-E exchange was established he became assistant to Manager Berger, remaining with that concern until he was drafted into the National Army. It is greatly to his credit when his whole career is reviewed that he started in at the very foot of the military ladder and worked his way up. He became a corporal, then a sergeant and back again to buck private because of some trivial infraction of the rules. Then he started up again and won a commission.

Just before registration day on June 4, 1917, he was married. When he received his commission he was sent to the Foundation Shipbuilding Corporation yards for duty with the military police.

Lieutenant Brandt was buried with full military honors in Arlington Cemetery. The funeral was attended by a number of his friends of the film days, sorry to part with so good a pal. He was twenty-seven years old.

Fairbanks May Fly Again.

There is a possibility Douglas Fairbanks will duplicate his flying stunt of from New York to Canada to assist in the Dominion's Fifth Victory Loan campaign, which has just opened. This will be done, provided an airplane and competent pilot can be obtained.

At the request of J. J. and Jules Allen, members of the executive committee of the Fifth Victory Loan, Fairbanks will autograph one of his photographs for every subscriber who takes a bond in any one of the ten biggest theatres in Canada. The Artcraft star also made a special Victory Loan film for the committee, entitled "The Maple Leaf Forever," which will be shown in all the Canadian film houses to help the loan over the top.

News of Los Angeles and Vicinity

By A. H. GIEBLER

Los Angeles Landlords Rebate Rent.

THE city authorities of Los Angeles have waived license fees, and about 95 per cent. of the owners of theatre property have agreed to allow lessees a rebate on rents for the period of the close down occasioned by the influenza epidemic, and the other five per cent. are expected to follow suit at an early date.

At a meeting of the Theatre Owners' Association, held in the offices of W. H. Clune on November 1, a resolution was passed calling attention to the property owners who, in keeping with the spirit of patriotism and public service, have voluntarily agreed to rebate the amount due on leases, and requesting those who have not done so to align themselves on the side of generous landlords; and at the same time warning them that unless such action is taken the Theatre Owners' Association will at its own expense protect the lessees of any such landlords by submitting the question as to liability under such lease to the proper courts.

The solution was signed by F. A. McDonald, president of the association; Glenn Harper, secretary; W. H. Clune, T. L. Tally, H. P. Caulfield, Emil Kehrlein, Jr., Chris Glimm, Nat Holt, M. Gore, J. A. Quinn, F. R. Alexander, O. H. Anderson, Ray Pagenkopf, L. I. King, A. L. Gore, B. C. Steele and Matthew Bridge.

"Ray's Garden Theatre."

The Miller Theatre at the junction of Main, Spring and Ninth streets will be known in the future—after the "flu" ban is lifted—as "Ray's Garden Theatre," which name has been given the house by the manager, Carl Ray. His decision to rename the house was arrived at after Ray had had the place thoroughly renovated and refurnished, and he observed that the new name would look well in new signs and electrical display.

Work Rushed on California Theatre.

The decorators now at work on the California Theatre are finishing up the lobby and foyer of the mezzanine floor, and the art tile workers are laying the tile, into which a magnificent Oriental rug is to be inlaid. Every part of the house is being completed on schedule time, and the management confidently expects to open the new theatre to the public about Thanksgiving.

Film Row Hikes.

Exchange managers of Los Angeles and their assistants deserted Film Row during the last week in October to take a five days' hike to the near-by mountains. These film men made their headquarters at a cabin six miles up the Hogee trail, and for the time being forgot both "flu" and films. In the party were Dave Bershon and L. S. Thuerkoff, of Universal; Tom Hancock and Tom Merritt, from World Film Exchange; T. H. Harvey, of Goldwyn; Guy Gunderson, from the Kleine; Sam Loper, of Select; B. C. Steele, of the Symphony Theatre; Howard McBride, and a cameraman from Universal City. Moving pictures were made of the principal events that took place during the hike, and they will be shown at the projection rooms of the exchanges.

House Cleaning at Alhambra.

The Alhambra Theatre, one of the downtown houses that specializes in United States and Allied War films for its programs, is being thoroughly cleaned and overhauled against the reopening of the amusement houses when the Health Department gives the word. Besides the painting and decorating that has been done, a new system of lighting has been installed, and Manager Bosley, instead of taking a vacation, has been on the job all the time to see that the work was progressing as per specifications.

Emil Kehrlein, Jr., of the Kinema Theatre, is seeing the sights of Southern California in his car during his enforced vacation from movie exhibiting.

Suit for Breach of Contract.

Clara Horton has brought suit against the Triangle Film Corporation for breach of contract as a result of having been discharged on the 12th of October along with a number of other players on account of the influenza closing ban imposed by the Los Angeles Health Department.

Miss Horton claims that her contract still had a year to run. Local lawyers state that there is no precedent for a case of this kind, and the suit is regarded as of importance in the film industry, as there are many similar cases which hang on the same point of law.

Directors' Ball Postponed.

The ball that had been planned for Thanksgiving by the Motion Picture Directors' Association, has been postponed until the Christmas holidays. The influenza epidemic and the cessation of production at nearly all the West Coast studios caused the association to postpone the event. The change of date will allow more time for preparations to make the ball the most gorgeous entertainment ever given by any branch of the film industry in Southern California.

Club Honors Member.

The Cinema Cameramen's Club, of California, met on November 1 to adopt resolutions on the death of B. C. Hayward, one of the oldest members of the club, who died of influenza on October 30.

Resumes Interrupted Business.

Mrs. Charlotte Pickford left for New York on October 30 to take up the interrupted business of her daughter Mary's new film contract. Lottie Pickford, whose recent illness necessitated sending for her mother and sister from the East, is well on the way to recovery, and Mrs. Pickford hopes to have little Mary's new film affiliations settled before she returns to Los Angeles.

Grauman's New Organ.

The big Hope-Jones organ that will be a part of the Grauman equipment for future picture attractions has arrived in Los Angeles, and is being installed in the Grauman Theatre. The huge organ was purchased at a cost of $50,000, and is about ten times the size of the organ that has been in use until now. Mack Weil, formerly of Indianapolis, has been engaged by Sid Grauman to conduct the augmented orchestra of the Grauman when the house reopens, which will be as soon as the "flu" ban is lifted.

Leaves for Training Camp.

Bert Lytell, one of the Metro stars on the West Coast, has received his appointment to join a class of officers in training at Camp McArthur, near Waco, Texas. Lytell will leave Los Angeles about November 15. Mrs. Lytell, who was known as Evelyn Vaughan on the stage, will remain on the Lytell ranch at Napa, and will carry on the work of the farm while her husband is away.

May Produce Independently.

Fannie Ward, whose contract with Pathe expires within a couple of weeks, will go to New York, when her final picture under the present management is completed, to make new arrangements for future film productions. Miss Ward has not announced whether she will affiliate herself with any organization, or whether she will produce independently, but it is said that she rather favors the latter method of working.

Directed by Vibration.

George Foster Platt, Helen Keller's director, has devised a method of tapping with his foot in directing the deaf and blind star in her film production. The director taps once for a certain movement, twice for another; and his star knows just what each tap means in cayying out her action before the camera. Miss Keller's sense of vibration is so acute that she can immediately recognize her director's footsteps in all of the noise and bustle of the studio. Rehearsals are conducted with the aid of Miss Keller's companions, Annie Sullivan Macy and Polly Thompson, by means of the language of the finger tips, but usually one rehearsal of a scene is sufficient for the star, and when the camera is grinding the directions are given by means of the taps of the director's foot.

Studio Shorts

IRVIN WILLAT, a director at the Ince plant, has been summoned to appear at Camp Kearney for army training.

Edward Sloman, director at the American studios, in Santa Barbara, spent his vacation during the flu shut-down in visiting all the nearby popular resorts in his new limousine. Mrs. Sloman and the baby accompanied him.

Arvid E. Gilstrom has arrived to direct Jane and Katherine Lee in their first picture to be made in the West.

Myrtle Gonzales, who died of heart trouble recently, left an estate of $3,700, consisting of a house and lot, an automobile, clothing and jewelry. As the actress left no will her husband, Allen Watt, has filed a petition as administrator. Watt and a son by a former marriage, James Jones, are the only heirs.

Mae Marsh has secured a house in the famous Wilshire district of Los Angeles.

Mabel Condon, film booking agent, has deserted Laurel Canyon and is again living nearer the center of movie activities, in Hollywood.

Willis Robards, one of the pioneer picture directors, and at one time of Universal City, has come back to the Los Angeles film colony after an extended absence.

Elinor Fried, of the New York offices of Universal, is now at U City collaborating with Frank Lawrence, film editor, on the cutting and titling of Universal and Bluebird productions.

Helen Eddy, who was for three months a "Voluntary Player" with Raymond Wells' stock company at Camp Kearney, is playing the heroine of King Vidor's story, "The Turn in the Road," for the Brentwood Film Corporation.

Gladys Brockwell amused herself by cleaning her house from garret to cellar during her flu vacation.

Elizabeth McGaffey, of the Lasky Research Department, has made application to go to Siberia in the interests of the United States Government.

Gerald Duffy, who accompanied William S. Hart on his Liberty Loan tour in the east, has returned to Los Angeles. Mr. Hart and his manager, E. H. Allen, are expected within a week.

Cecil B. De Mille has been confined to his home with just a cold—positively not the flu.

Clarence Badger, Madge Kennedy's director, has arrived and is looking around for a house in Hollywood, in which he hopes to be settled before his star arrives, so that production may begin at once at the new Goldwyn quarters at Culver City.

The first gold star has been placed in the Universal service flag in memory of Larry Peyton, who was killed recently in action in France. Peyton enlisted shortly after the United States entered the war and had been promoted to the rank of sergeant before he died.

Hoot Gibson, film cowboy, visited his home folks in Los Angeles during a recent furlough granted him from the training camp at Gettysburg, Pa.

Juanita Hansen, Douglas Gerrard, Winifred Westover, Adda Gleason and the mother of Virginia Lee Corbin have all had light attacks of the flu.

Lottie Pickford, who is rapidly recovering from her recent illness, left the Sisters' Hospital on October 31 for the Pickford family home on Fremont place.

William Lord Wright, former publicity manager for Selig, and now business representative in the west of the United Picture Theatres of America, is making his headquarters at the Brunton studios and looking after the interests of Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon, two United Picture stars.

Edwin Carewe, director for the late Harold Lockwood, has returned to Metro's West Coast studios.

Mme. Yorska, who usually speaks French before the camera because that is her native tongue, is fast learning American studio slang. She now knows what is meant by her "lamps photographing well" and that all action is not "stunts" in a moving picture.

Bothwell Browne, female impersonator of the Mack Sennett studios, was one of the movie entertainers of Prince Axel of Denmark during his recent visit to Los Angeles.

We thought this was coming—Priscilla Dean declares she is not engaged to Eddie Rickenbacker, the high flier in France who recently brought down his twenty-third enemy plane.

Charlie Ray has invested in a small farm near Los Angeles, where he will spend the time between pictures and really do the things he has pretended to do in his numerous farmer boy roles.

Jane Lee has had her first California spanking. She pushed Katherine into the studio fountain at the Fox plant and then got all wet herself, and—well, the spanking followed.

Schools to Get Official War Review.

Arrangements have been completed by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information whereby schools, colleges and other educational institutions throughout the United States may secure the Official War Review at a minimum charge from any Pathe exchange. The arrangement is in response to a large number of letters from educators and superintendents of schools, calling attention to the need of stimulating patriotism and a comprehension of the real meaning of the world war among their pupils, especially those of foreign birth. The Official War Review is considered an excellent medium for the purpose.

To Issue Million Copies of Poster.

One million of the new and inspiring one sheets of the Official War Review, distributed by Pathe, will be given the most thorough posting of any announcement in the history of the country. It will carry its message to the remotest hamlet, and it will be a familiar symbol in the great, crowded haunts of men. It will be displayed in the 40,000 post offices of the United States and its possessions, in every public building, city, state and federal, and in railroad stations.

It is planned that every American in touch with civilized communities shall see it and heed its invitation to behold how the great war is being fought by the United States and the Allies. The spirit and design of the poster has evoked praise from high authority, and is a distinct contribution to the art side of the great struggle.

Along the Trail.

A. C. Wykoff, formerly auditor of the Vitagraph exchanges, is now controller of the William Fox enterprises.

Agnes Johnson, the scenario writer, has returned from Cambridge, Mass., where she has been attending a special course in playwriting at Harvard.

James R. Stiles, Boston representative of the Pathe Exchange, is now in New York negotiating for an affiliation with another concern.

William Fait, Jr., of Utica, N. Y., who gave up his theatrical connections in that city to take charge of the Liberty Theatre at Camp Sherman, Chillicothe, Ohio, has resigned from the Government service, and again will interest himself in the film industry.

Third Official Picture to Show in Seven Cities

OFFICIAL showings of "Under Four Flags," the third Official War Picture, issued by the Division of Films Committee on Public Information, are announced for seven cities outside of New York, where the latest Government war film will be made known at the Rialto and Rivoli during the week opening November 17. All the official bookings are for a week.

In Washington "Under Four Flags" will be the initial attraction at Harry M. Crandall's new Metropolitan Theatre, which opens its doors Saturday evening, November 23. The Metropolitan will be one of the handsomest cinema houses in the United States.

Indianapolis will see the new picture at the Circle Theatre during the week beginning November 24. The Walnut Theatre, Cincinnati, will have the official showing during the week of December 1. Three cities will see "Under Four Flags" during the week of December 8. In Kansas City it will be shown at the Liberty Theatre, a new house; in Dayton it will be seen at the Strand Theatre, and in St. Louis at the Odeon. The latter is not a motion picture house, but the success of "Pershing's Crusaders" and "America's Answer" at this popular hall, as well as its great seating capacity, has made its use desirable. St. Louis exhibitors also favor the Odeon on account of the exploitation the picture will receive before being released for the regular picture houses, and are co-operating to make the engagement a success.

The official showing in Philadelphia will be at the Stanley, which has booked the picture for the week of December 16.

Duncan Back in Hollywood.

William Duncan, director and star of Vitagraph serials, is back at the Hollywood Studio, after a short trip to New York, where he visited relatives and met the officials of the Vitagraph Company. The day following Mr. Duncan's arrival he went to the studio to resume the work of directing and starring in "The Man of Might," his next serial.

RUBBERNECKING IN FILMLAND

Los Angeles Correspondent Personally Conducts Our Readers Through the West Coast Studios

By Giebler

THE epidemic situation has not improved much. Many of us who have suspected all along that Spanish influenza was none other than our ancient enemy, La Grippe, sailing under a new name, are now convinced that such is the case.

But unmasking the "Flu" has not allowed those of us who have been wearing masks to unmask ourselves.

We are still watching and spraying. Aunty Septic is on guard everywhere. It is impossible to get into any studio in the film colony without first checking your germs at the gate.

In addition to the general disinfecting that goes on at every studio, many of the players carry their own private germ exterminators. Get in nasal distance of almost any bunch of actors and you'll think you are approaching a delegation from a retail drug clerks' convention.

Wednesday, I went out to the Brunton plant. After explaining to the Red Cross nurse with the atomizer and the firm manner that, since I had already been sprinkled and sprayed with Chlorotone, Dobell's Mixture and Alkaline Antiseptic Solution to such an extent that no germ of the coccus family could find a boarding place anywhere inside or outside of my physical premises, and that there was no use in using her anti-flu dope, I submitted to the spray and went in.

After a brief pause in the office of J. D. Chapman, who, with the exception of Bert Lennon, is the tallest press agent on the Coast, I bent my steps in search of William Lord Wright, who has just come out to look after the activities of Dustin Farnum and Kitty Gordon.

How Giebler Shuts Out the "Flu."

Passing down a hallway I heard a loud and resonant sneeze! I paused a moment to cross my fingers and murmur:

The rose is red,
The violet's blue,
If you don't get scared
You won't get "Flu," an incantation I have found to be very efficacious as a comforter to the nerves. After this I changed my buckeye from the right-hand pocket to the left-hand pocket and, seeking for a convenient place to complete the rite by knocking on wood, I used a door on my right, and heard a silvery voice exclaim, "Come right in."

I did so, and found myself in the presence of he whom I sought.

"You'd better do something for that sneeze," I said. "How long have you been out here? How long are you going to stay? Have the real estate people found you yet? Have you been to the beach? How do you like California?"

Mr. Wright emerged from the interior of his desk with a pale blue bottle of anti-flu, took a sniff and said:

"Two weeks—all winter—not yet—don't care much for beaches—bully!" And "That was just my regular morning sneeze."

How Not to Spoil a Pleasant Dream.

After this we had a little conversation, and Mr. Wright was so enthusiastic about our climate, so full of praise for the friendliness of the people and everything, that I allowed him to recite his panegyric and left without warning him of the rainy season, fogs, the difference between yard eggs, ranch eggs and just eggs, real estate agents, loquats, summer squash and half-ripe olives.

Brunton's is getting to be a whale of a place, and a regular movie bee-hive. Madame Yorksa was putting the finishing touches to her first film, "The Infernal Net." Bessie Barriscale and Lewis Cody were making scenes on a big outdoor stage. Wallace Worsley was getting ready to use four hundred extras for Kitty Gordon's new play, "The Nurse's Story," and about three hundred and ninety-nine were already on the lot. The Helen Keller company were all set and waiting for Miss Keller to arrive.

Howard Hickman was running around the lot bareheaded, with the wind whiffling through his hair. Sherwood McDonald was superintending the erection of a big set for a Gloria Joy play. Director Worthington and Sessue Hayakawa were doping out situations for their latest drama.

Dustin Farnum, who had just finished a twenty-four hour stretch of work the evening before, was getting ready to go to Big Bear Lake for mountain and rough outdoor stuff, instead of still being in the hay, where he should have been after that long absence from the tents of Morpheus.

Robert Brunton, the king bee of the big hive, was making his morning inspection trip around the studio, and he told me of still more companies that will be coming to Brunton very shortly, not counting the C. R. Macauley people, who are almost ready to begin on their twelve-reel production.

Putting the "Flew" in Influenza.

I found them still wearing masks at the Ince plant. Ince is the only completely masked studio in the colony so far, but since Dr. Woods Hutchinson has arrived in our fair but "flu"-ridden city and told us that masks are the only sure-fire method of putting the "flew" in influenza, it may turn out that they were only just a little ahead of the general adoption of the gauze protectors at Ince.

Enid Bennett was making an Arizona atmosphere picture with Fred Niblo directing, Casson Ferguson as leading man, John P. Lockney in a fine Desert Rat characterization, and Robert McKim doing the heavy.

Jerome Storm, who was working Charlie Ray and Wanda Hawley in "Greased Lightning," had just left with the company for location.

Victor Schertzinger, who has written another song, was doping out a rich man's home and the doings of high and extravagant society, featuring Dorothy Dalton. Charles Clary, Philo McCullough, Donald McDonald and J. Barney Sherry, who came over to Ince when Triangle shut down, were in the cast.

After Ince I meandered over to the Sunset works, and had a most pleasant surprise by finding Allan Dwan at work again.

Allan has been taking a four weeks' layoff since his contract expired at Fairbanks', which he spent on the flat of his back with a doctor in attendance and a trained nurse in the offing to see that he took what the Doc ordered.

No, Allan did not have the "Flu"; just a trifling indisposition superinduced by nine years of steady work and no play—sort of a nervous breakdown.

Dwan Making "Cheating Cheaters."

Dwan was looking "kinda peak-ed," as we say back in Missouri, but he was glad to be at work, and was chortling over a cast he had just got together for the screen adaptation of "Cheating Cheaters," which he was getting ready to film.

"Listen to this list," he said. And I sat in awed silence while he pronounced the names of Clara Kimball Young, Jack Holt and Frank Campeau; cocked my ear in admiration over the syllables that made up Edwin Stephens, Joseph Singleton and Mayme Kelso; gasped with wonder at the sound of Frederick Burton, Nicholas Dunaew and Elinor Hancock; was filled with pleased surprise as the cognomens W. A. Carroll, Tully Marshall and Anna Q. Nilsson fell from his lips.

"Where," I asked, "and how did you get 'em all?"

"'Flu'," said Dwan. "Many of the studios are closed, and as all of the players would rather work than not, I had the pick of a big flock."

Verily, it is an ill wind that blows nobody good, but just the same, I'd hate to foot the pay roll of "Cheating Cheaters." All of the actors Dwan picked would rather work than not, but none of them will work for small salaries—decidedly not—"Flu" or no "Flu."

Leaving Dwan, I met one H. A. Lichtig, casting director for the Harry Garson enterprises, and he took me back on the stages to see Marshall Neilan direct Blanche Sweet, Matt Moore and Wallace Beery in a scene of "The Unpardonable Sin," which is nearing its finish.

Richelavle Strong on Technique.

Lichtig then introduced me to an interesting chap named George Richelavle, who was brought all the way from New York to take care of the technical points of the above-mentioned drama.

George is strong on technique, and he showed me two German railroad cars he had just made—the kind the Huns use to transport prisoners in—and they were the most complete pieces of property I ever saw, complete even down to the Hun hieroglyphics chalked on the sides of them. No movie fan who works in the railroad yards in Rock Island, Ill., will be able to write a postal card to the studio and claim that he recognized an M. K. & T. cattle car in that play.

The scene Marshall Neilan was making was only a small one. Beery, who was doing heavy stuff, and Miss Sweet, were working on a stairway, but small as the scene was, it was full of drama, and Matt Moore, who was not in the action, looked dramatic as he consumed a cigarette on the side lines.

WALTHALL SIGNS WITH NATIONAL FILM

Popular Player Contracts to Appear in Eight Big Dramatic Pictures During the Coming Year

THE National Film Corporation of America has signed a contract with Henry B. Walthall for the exclusive services of the famous star for an extended period. The definite signing of Mr. Walthall follows close upon the deal by which the Robertson-Cole Company takes over the National Film Corporation interests, handling for the entire world the eight Billie Rhodes pictures, as well as the forthcoming series of Walthall dramas.

According to present plans Mr. Walthall will make eight big dramatic pictures during the next twelve months. William Parsons, general manager and treasurer of the National Film Corporation, announces that Mr. Walthall will receive the highest salary of any individual male star in the motion picture world. Several stars may receive greater remuneration through the fact that they own their own producing organizations, but Mr. Walthall will take first place among salaried stars, declares Mr. Parsons.

Mr. Walthall has just scored a personal hit in the spoken drama, "The Awakening," at the Criterion Theatre in New York. Mr. Walthall will return immediately to the National Coast studios to begin work on his first feature of the series.

Probably no star in the screen world is better known or has a greater following than Henry B. Walthall. He came to the front in the famous old Biograph days when David Griffith was laying the foundations of the modern photoplay. He scored one of his first big hits in "Judith of Bethulia," and he followed it with his famous depiction of the little colonel in "The Birth of a Nation."

No portrayal before or since has so endeared a player to the American public. Walthall's Colonel Cameron still stands as one of the best loved characterizations in the realm of the silent drama. After leaving Griffith, Walthall joined the Essanay forces, and later starred with Paralta. Only recently he returned temporarily to the Griffith fold, appearing in "The Great Love." Then he came East to rejoin his first love, the spoken drama.

The Robertson-Cole Company, which will handle the Walthall series, already has a Walthall drama ready for release. This feature, "And a Still Small Voice," was produced independently before the star came East to appear behind the footlights.

Walthall Signing Contract With National Film.

Broadway Run Planned for "The Unpardonable Sin"

A LONG Broadway run is planned for Harry Garson and Marshall Neilan's production of "The Unpardonable Sin," starring Blanche Sweet. Word has just arrived from the West Coast that the trio will leave Los Angeles immediately, and that the production is completed. According to announced schedule, it is planned to give a special performance of the production before Government officials at Washington.

After the Washington showing it is believed a private showing will be promoted in New York City, where the newspaper men and other critics will be invited. From the enthusiasm already recorded as displayed by Messrs. Garson and Neilan, nothing will be overlooked to give this production the promoting and exploitation which they believe it deserves.

It is declared that several of the finest New York theatres have already been offered for first run, and the sponsors expect the first run to be a long and a successful one.

Distributing arrangements are not announced as yet, but upon the arrival of the trio from the West Coast it is expected something definite will be made known as regards the distributing arrangements of "The Unpardonable Sin."

Sheldon Announces Changes in Mutual Exchange Forces

W. A. V. MACK, manager of the Buffalo branch of the Mutual Film Corporation, has been appointed manager of the New York Exchange of Mutual by President James M. Sheldon, succeeding Fred. G. Sliter, who has accepted a position with the Government. Mr. Mack assumed charge of the office November 1. Edward J. Hayes succeeds Mr. Mack as manager of the Buffalo Exchange of Mutual.

The new Mutual manager for New York has had an interesting business career. He came into the film industry through engineering lines. He was for many years office and sales manager at New Orleans, for the Columbia Mills, Incorporated, of New York. Subsequently, he was manager of the Syracuse Arena, Syracuse; managed the Crescent Theatre of Syracuse, and was president of the Peerless Feature Film Company, Syracuse. He was made manager of the Syracuse office of the Picture Playhouse Film Company and later succeeded D. J. Savage as manager of General Film Company, Buffalo, from which he came to Mutual as manager of the Buffalo Exchange, succeeding G. H. Christoffer.

The promotion of Mr. Mack was merited by his successfull career with Mutual, and his appointment is in accord with President Sheldon's policy of selecting men within the organization for higher places.

Mr. Hayes has been connected with the General Film Company, Buffalo, as branch manager, and has also had charge of several big theatres, among them the Colonial of Elmira, N. Y., and the International Theatre of Niagara Falls. He has been a branch manager for the Metro Pictures Corporation, where he made a splendid record. His wide acquaintance and intimate knowledge of conditions in the trade and the needs of the exhibitor should carry him far in the ranks of Mutual.

President Sheldon also announces the appointment of Edward L. McShane as manager of Mutual's Washington (D. C.) branch, succeeding H. R. Mason, who resigned on account of ill health.

Mr. McShane comes to Mutual from the sales forces of Select, for whom he traveled out of Washington. Prior to his connection with Select he was short subject manager for Paramount's Washington office.

Mr. McShane is known to every exhibitor in the Washington territory, to whom he is known as a man of energy and initiative.

Greiver Distributing Corporation.

THE Greiver Distributing Corporation has opened executive offices in suite 909, Mallers Bldg., Chicago. This organization is distributing the Ford Educational Weekly nationally, through its twenty-two agencies. All recommendations from exhibitors should be mailed to the Chicago office, where they will receive prompt attention. Various letters received, which comment on the contents of this Weekly, have been very gratifying to the company. Among these is a communication from the Rialto Theatre, New York. The Ford Weekly is released every week to all exhibitors gratis. The only expense incurred is the payment of express charges.

Lubliner & Trinz Opened Tenth House.

Wednesday evening, November 6, Lubliner & Trinz opened the tenth house on their Chicago circuit of picture theatres. This theatre bears the name of the commander-in-chief of the American armies in France the Pershing, and it is located at Lincoln and Wilson avenues, in the midst of a prosperous community.

The opening success of the Pantheon, which took place several weeks ago, was repeated at the Pershing, and the house was filled to capacity at the two shows given during the evening. "The Forbidden City," a Select feature, in which Norma Talmadge is the star, was the chief attraction of the program, which was unusually well received.

The music was played by a well selected orchestra of twelve pieces, under the capable direction of Charles Schoening. The Pershing is the creation of Architect Walter W. Ahlschlaeger, who also designed the plans of the more showy Pantheon, on Sheridan Road, near Wilson avenue. Dan Lubliner is manager.

Within a few weeks Messrs. Lubliner & Trinz will open two more new picture houses—the Wilson, at Madison street and Western avenue, and the Devon, at Clark street and Devon avenue. This will round out a circuit of an even dozen in Chicago, all of large capacity and modern construction.

Enrico Caruso in "My Cousin."

Kitty Kelly, in the Herald-Examiner, bears this testimony to Caruso, the great tenor, in Artcraft's "My Cousin":

"Mr. Caruso—it's so Americanish to call the singer 'mister'—is an actor of parts as well as a tenor of tones, and he performs cleverly and entertainingly for the silent drama.

"He is not a collar advertisement model nor yet a B. V. D. hero, but you quite forget that he isn't, as you observe, his skillful, colorful playing of himself as the humble artist, and his suave, poised performance of himself as the great tenor of opera.

"For, of course, Mr. Caruso has the two roles to perform, the story being all about how he found his cousin, in the face of fames' obstacles, with an Italianized New York setting carried out with convincingness.

"Nor is Caruso alone in accomplishing. Carolina White, who makes her film debut, is a beautiful and expressive subject for the celluloid."

"Lafayette, We Come" Wins Mid-West.

The special screening of "Lafayette, We Come" in Chicago, which was originally announced to be given Tuesday, November 5, at the Morrison Hotel, took place Wednesday, November 6, in the Louis XVI Room, Hotel Sherman, after an informal and complimentary luncheon given by the Exhibitors' Booking Corporation, of the central western States. Seventy-five covers were laid and every seat was occupied. Louis B. Stephens, of St. Louis, a national director of the organization, was present, also H. A. Brink, of Grand Rapids, president of the Affiliated Distributors' Corporation. Another showing of the feature was given Wednesday morning in the private projecting room of Universal. Everyone present at both showings was enthusiastic over the merits of the picture. Orchestral accompaniments was furnished at each presentation.

"The Yellow Dog" at Ziegfeld.

"The Yellow Dog" (Jewel) showed at the Ziegfeld all last week to good business. This feature deals with an organization known as The Boy Detectives of America, and its members raise many laughs among the spectators by their humorous and surprising antics. This Jewel feature holds the spectator intensely interested throughout, and it raises many laughs by its frequent comedy appeals.

"America's Answer" Repeats Successes.

"America's Answer," the second official war picture, was shown at the Orpheum Theatre for three days last week and for five days at McVickers and the Rialto. All these houses are owned by Jones, Linick & Schaefer. The attendance was unusually large during the respective runs, notwithstanding the protracted and successful showing of this picture at Orchestra Hall several weeks ago.

Embryo Scenaroists See Films at Broadway House

FORTY-FIVE scenario writers possessing knowledge gained from books and from the collective experience of ten thousand forerunners in their craft, attended the showing last Friday at the Broadway Theatre in New York. It was the first of what will be a series of such excursions, the object of which will be the uplift of the screen art.

M. Kashin, manager of the theatre, originated the idea and obtained the co-operation of J. C. Brownell, scenario editor of the Universal. His purpose was to have skilled writers of screen plays pass criticism upon the films of all companies that are shown at the theatre, and if possible devise suggestions for the betterment of films in the future.

The scenario writers invited were members of the class in Scenario Composition, of Columbia University, and of the Cinema Composers' Club, who have graduated from the class. Mrs. Frances Taylor Patterson, instructor of the class, was in charge of the party. Others in the group were Miss R. C. Sminck, who wrote many stories for Clara Kimball Young, and Dr. Ralston Reed, author of many well known films.

Federal Trade Commission Acts Against Distributors

THE labeling and sale of old pictures featuring well known stars in such a way as to mislead exhibitors and the general public in the belief that they are new features, is the subject of a formal complaint just issued by the Federal Trade Commission against certain motion picture concerns. The commission states that it has reason to believe the Royal Cinema Corporation, The Mothers of Liberty Pictures Company, the Monopole Pictures Company [illegible] W. H. Productions Company, all of New York City, are engaged in unfair and misleading practices in the motion picture field, detrimental to the best interests of the industry and the public, and has accordingly issued formal complaints against each of the companies named.

The complaint against the W. H. Productions Company alleges misrepresentations in the labeling and sale of old pictures featuring William S. Hart, produced and shown prior to July, 1917, and charges they are made with the intent and purpose of leading exhibitors and the public into believing they are new pictures made since that date by the William S. Hart Productions, Inc., which are sold under the trade name of Artcraft Pictures.

Use of the name "W. H. Productions Company" and of the term "The Artcraft Star" in connection with these previously shown pictures are declared by the commission to deceive and defraud exhibitors and the public.

The concern also is charged with selling old pictures featuring Hart and Charlie Chaplin under new title, "without notifying or apprising exhibitors and the general public that they were such."

The complaint against the three other companies alleges plagarism of material in a copyrighted picture known as "The Ordeal," produced in 1914 and widely exhibited throughout the country. The Commission alleges the motion picture, "Mothers of Liberty," produced and sold by the three concerns, was made up "almost entirely" of "The Ordeal."

The three concerns also were charged with making false and defamatory acors refusing to exhibit "Mothers of Liberty," charging them with being German sympathizers and disloyal to the United States.

The W. H. Productions was cited to appear before the Commission in Washington December 23 and the other three concerns December 20.

Many Are Called; Few Are Chosen

THE volume of stories that are being written by ambitious authors who have designs on screen success passes all belief. It was ascertained some years ago when the legitimate stage was experiencing the top wave of popularity that some five thousand plays were written every year, and out of this enormous number less than five per cent. were produced. A conservative estimate of the number of photoplays submitted to the producing companies in the United States is in excess of five thousand a month. Eighty per cent. of picture plays produced from original scripts are submitted by authors who have had training and experience in this line of work.

World Pictures is put to an expense running into thousand of dollars handling scripts from budding authors residing in all quarters of the world. Stories come in from bankers, clergymen, lawyers, doctors, and, in fact, every profession and trade is represented in this avalanche of what is hoped to be material for the camera. Each one of these stories must be read, as one can never tell where a new idea will be found, and it is the hope of discovering some new treatment of picture material that prompts and warants the troubledios to and delving through this mass of manuscripts. It was thus that World Pictures found "The Latch String," which Tefft Johnson directed for Madge Evans, and which is expected to be a big success, not alone for the producer and the star, but also for the exhibitor.

School of Pantomime for Screen Aspirants Planned

A TRAINING college for the development of motion picture actresses and actors from inexperienced material is planned by Albert E. Smith, president of the Vitagraph, to be opened after the first of the year. One condition of matriculation will be that the candidate has never appeared on the speaking stage, as Mr. Smith considers the dependency on the voice for dramatic effect a distinct handicap for the moving picture actor. There will be no charge for tuition, and practical experience will be afforded the students as "extras" in the big Vitagraph features.

The idea developed with Mr. Smith from consideration of the history of numerous present day stars who began their careers under his direction at the Vitagraph studios. He has turned out so many stars "from the rough," as the trade puts it, that Mr. Smith has gained a high reputation as a judge of personalities who will lend themselves to the super-pantomimic art of the cinema.

Among the best known graduates of the Vitagraph studios are: Anita Stewart, Edith Storey, Norma Talmadge, Constance Talmadge, Lillian Walker, Jean Page and Walter McGrain. These prominent stars all began as "extras" with Mr. Smith's company.

"The pantomimic art of the cinema is higher than that of the dramatic speaking stage," said Mr. Smith yesterday, "and justifies the establishment of a thorough educational institution for its development. The film-story without interrupting, explanatory caption slides, is the perfect cinema we must develop. The principal element in obtaining this is the perfection of the pantomimic acting. That should tell the story alone. Explanations on slides are weaknesses and break the interest.

West Coast Picture Folk Pile Up Big Loan Totals

A TOTAL of $4,860,450 was subscribed to the Fourth Liberty Loan through the efforts of the people of the Film Industry of Los Angeles. A considerable amount of this sum was paid in by the heads, players and employes of the various studios, but large sales were made to outsiders by means of an intensive campaign conducted with the three tanks, Victory, Liberty and Democracy, and an organized effort in theatres and exchanges, until the influenza closing order stopped all public meetings and put an end to this part of the work.

Tank Victory, which was stationed in Central Park, Los Angeles, and in charge of the players of a different studio each night, produced a total of $1,679,750.

Liberty Tank, under the leadership of Mary Miles Minter, which traveled to San Jacinto, Long Beach, Pomona, Santa Ana, Huntington, Fullerton, Whittier and other nearby towns, secured a total of $1,271,700.

Tank Democracy, managed by Roy Stewart, who was assisted by Josie Sedgwick, made a list of towns including Redlands, San Bernardino, Santa Monica, Sawtelle, Glendale, Burbank and others, and reached a total of $162,550.

The largest individual subscription was made by Charles Chaplin for $60,000. Other large subscriptions were as follows: Frank Keenan, $40,000; Douglas Fairbanks, $35,000; Lois Weber, $30,000; D. W. Griffith, $30,000; Wm. S. Hart, $30,000; William Parsons, $25,000; Ethel Clayton, $25,000. Mary Pickford, Fannie Ward and Mary Miles Minter, $20,000 each. Thos. H. Ince and Lillian Gish, $15,000 each. C. B. De Mille, $12,000; and $10,000 each for Jesse L. Lasky, Mack Sennett, Sessue Hayakawa, Henry Lehrman and William Duncan.

W. D. Parkinson ,a citizen of Glendale, got the souvenir receipt book and album of autographed pictures of stars that was offered for the biggest single subscription, by signing up for $110,000 in bonds.

Helen Keller sold in the neighborhood of $200,000 in bonds by writing and wiring to friends throughout the country. These subscriptions were all credited to the Los Angeles moving picture drive.

The amounts subscribed for by the heads, players and employes of the different studios are as follows:

Astra, $31,150; Chaplin, $63,950; Brunton, $117,500; Christie, $16,250; Brentwood $350; Fairbanks, $36,700; Eltinge, $4,000; Famous Players-Lasky $134,150; Francis Ford, $1,500; Fox, $24,000; Griffith, $89,400; Hampton $12,050; Hart, $38,500; Hayakawa, $27,850; Ince, $52,600; Morosco, $27,800; L-Ko, $14,750; Metro, $36,400; National, $47,850; Rolin $11,300; Romayne Super Films, Inc., $1,000; Sunshine Comedies, $27,600; Sennett Studios, $38,650; Lois Weber, $43,750; Universal, $122,600; Triangle $12,450; Vitagraph, $50,950; Clara Kimball Young, $8000; Laboratories, $18,000; Theatres and Exchanges, $97,000.

The order prohibiting all public meetings and closing the theatres, which came just as the drive was in full swing, materially affected totals, but in spite of this the showing is splendid, and all the members of the Los Angeles colony showed fine patriotism by the unselfish manner in which they threw themselves into the campaign and bent all their energies to make the loan drive a success.

Woody Is to Be Select's General Sales Manager

J. S. WOODY, former field manager for Select Pictures Corporation has been appointed by General Manager Arthur S. Kane to the position of general sales manager. Mr. Woody is a Seattle man and is known to exhibitors and producers all over the country. having enjoyed a long and successful career as a distributor.

New York exhibitors will easily recall Mr. Woody as sales manager of the New York Triangle branch, while the Chicago trade will also remember him for the efficient manner in which he managed the Triangle branch in that city.

Out on the Pacific Coast, which is Mr. Woody's old stamping ground, he is, perhaps, better known than in any other place. In 1912 he started with the General Film Company, where he worked in varying capacities from salesman to district manager, changing later to Mutual, where he held the same office, that of district manager. It was while he was working with Triangle that General Manager Kane appointed him Pacific Northwest general manager for Select. Shortly afterward he was made field manager.

Mr. Woody broke into the motion picture business in 1911, under the direction of Mr. Kane, when the latter was special representative for the General Film Company in Seattle.

Mr. Woody's present field of endeavor will carry him to every Select Branch in the country, although six months of the year he will be at his desk in the Home Office. The remainder of his time will be divided equally among the different branches.

Ramsaye Joins Rothapfel.

Terry Ramsaye, publicity manager for the Mutual Film Corporation for the past three years, has resigned and become press representative for the Rialto and Rivoli Theatres under the direction of S. L. Rothapfel. Mr. Ramsaye took charge of his new job on Monday, November 11. He was succeeded at the Mutual by Colvin W. Brown.

Leonard C. McChesney Dead.

Leonard C. McChesney, for sixteen years advertising manager of the Thomas A. Edison, Inc., died on Sunday, November 10, of heart disease at his home in Orange, N. J. The deceased was fifty-nine years of age and leaves a widow, two daughters and a son, Leonard W. McChesney, also for many years prominently connected with the Edison company.

Senate Finance Committee Has Substitute Rental Tax

THE Senate Finance Committee will recommend to the Senate shortly after the reconvening of Congress that it disagrees with the House of Representatives with respect to the so-called motion picture rental tax. In the new war revenue measure which the Senate Finance Committee is considering, the House of Representatives adopted a provision reading:

"Sec. 900. * * * There shall be levied, assessed, collected and paid, in lieu of the taxes imposed by Section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917 (in this case the so-called film footage taxes) upon * * * positive moving picture films containing a picture ready for projection, 10 per centum."

As the House adopted the measure, it would be up to the exhibitor upon renting a picture to stand the 10 per cent. tax. The way the Finance Committee has the matter framed up the burden is placed upon the lessor of the films. It will be upon the latter that the tax will be assessed. A clause in the proposed new section, however, will give the lessors some little time during which only 5 per cent. of the rentals will be assessed against them. The object of this is to protect the taxpayers on films which they have already leased where the contract does not permit adding the whole of the tax provided for.

Sec. 907. That on and after the 1st day of ....., 1919, any person engaged in the business of leasing or licensing for exhibition positive motion picture films containing pictures ready for projection shall pay monthly an excise tax in respect to carrying on such business equal to 10 per centum of the total rentals earned from each such lease or license during the preceding month. If a person owning such a film exhibits it for profit he shall pay a tax equivalent to 10 per centum of the fair rental or license value of such film at the time and place where and for the period during which exhibited. Until the 1st day of ....., 1919, the tax imposed by this section shall be at the rate of 5 per centum instead of 10 per centum. If any such person has, prior to ....., 191.., made a bona fide contract with any person for the lease or licensing, after the tax imposed by this section takes effect, of such a film for exhibition for profit, and if such contract does not permit the adding of the whole of the tax imposed by this section to the amount to be paid under such contract, then the lessee or licensee shall, in lieu of the lessor or licensor, pay so much of such tax as is not so permitted to be added to the contract price. The tax imposed by this section shall be in lieu of the tax imposed by subdivisions (c) and (d) of Section 600 of the Revenue Act of 1917.

Bronx Exhibitors Dance.

The Cinema Exhibitors' Association of the Borough of the Bronx, New York City, held its sixth annual entertainment and ball at Hunts Point Pavilion, on Monday evening, November 4. The entertainment comprised Fox, Sunshine and Twede Dan comedies; Houdini, the master of mystery; Andy Rice, monologist; Billy Gleason, songs; Ruth Stonehouse and Marguerite Marsh, entertainers, and McCarthy and Fisher, in a spasm of songs. Marion Davies, George Walsh and Houdini were the moving picture stars introduced from the stage.

At midnight the grand march was led by Marion Davies and George Walsh, followed by the officers of the association with their partners and the many guests in attendance. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Picker, Charles Steiner, Abraham Suchman, John J. Wittman, Nathan Vinegard, Henry Cole, William Hart, Samuel Spanier, Edward Falter, Isidore Rothman and Sam Spedon.

While there were not as many moving picture celebrities present as at previous occasions, this did not deter between two and three thousand persons crowding the pavilion and testing its dancing capacity to the utmost.

Winnipeg Exhibitors to Get Rebate on Theatre License

THE City of Winnipeg has decided to make a rebate on moving picture theatre licenses for six months of the present year to enable local exhibitors to make partial reimbursement to their employes for loss of wages through the closing of theatres because of the epidemic.

At a meeting of the Board of Control of Winnipeg, Alderman Sparling, chairman of the market, license and relief committee, and Controller Cockburn were appointed a committee to interview the Manitoba Government officials with a view to securing a rebate of the Provincial license fee for the theatres for the same purpose.

Data showing the number of theatre employes out of work, the number needing immediate assistance, number of dependents and other details has been asked for by the city to be used as a basis for special relief. A public grant was suggested by F. J. Sharpe, legal representative of the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association, and R. Kershaw, president of the association, who headed a deputation of exhibitors and theatre employes.

It was pointed out that the exhibitors did not want compensation, but that the exhibitors wanted their employes protected in some way. The theatres pay an aggregate of $9,000 per year in license fees to the city, and in addition pay a large amount to the Provincial Government. Theatre rents amount to more than $8,000 per month for some twenty-five Winnipeg theatres, and the investment in Winnipeg theatres amounts to $400,000, it was declared.

"When employes of concerns are sacrificed for the benefit of the community, they should be reimbursed by the community," said Controller A. W. Puttee, in supporting the proposal to rebate fees for six months of the year. Winnipeg theatres have been closed since October 12.

Norma Talmadge to Return East.

A message received at the Norma Talmadge studios, at 318 East 48th street, this week stated that Miss Talmadge, her director, Sidney A. Franklin; Thomas Meighan, Gladden James and other members of her company would start for New York on November 12, having finished "The Heart of Wetona." Miss Talmadge intends to stop off at the Grand Canyon a day or two to get one or two location scenes for "The Probation Wife."

Miss Talmadge will produce in the East for the winter, and following "The Probation Wife" will do a series of original stories by Eugene Walter.

Kentucky Judge Decides For and Against Central

A DECISION made by Judge Field of the Circuit Court of Jefferson County, Kentucky, in a case of the Central Film Service, of Indianapolis, Ind., may result in the matter going to the Court of Appeals. This case is an interesting one from several points.

The Central Film Service Company was an Indiana corporation, and is now a part of the Universal Company, it being operated as the Universal Film Exchanges, Inc. The old Central Company maintained a booking office in Louisville, which delivered films and secured business, but all contracts were accepted in Indianapolis, the local office merely acting for the company, and not having the power to make final contracts.

Under the Kentucky statutes a concern doing business in the state must file with the secretary of state and clerk of Jefferson County a statement showing ownership of the concern and agent upon whom action can be taken. This was not done in the case of the Central Company, as the Louisville branch was a booking office, and handling the same work as a salesman. However, under the statutes a contract cannot be upheld if the ownership or agent is not filed.

Judge Field, in his decision, held that on the ground that the Central Company was not authorized to do business in Kentucky between August 1, 1915, and December 31, 1915, because it had not complied with the statutes relative to filing papers as explained above, the plaintiff was not entitled to recover $300 from the Fourth Avenue Amusement Company for the rental of two moving picture films during that period of time. Judgment was given, however, for $150 against the defendant for the rental of one film in January, 1916, after the corporation had complied with the law in regard to filing its statement.

The company claimed its contract was not made in Louisville, but in Indianapolis, where the order or contract was accepted, and that therefore it was entitled to recover. Therefore this decision of Judge Field's is almost certain to be carried to a higher tribunal.

Henry D. Berger in New York.

Henry Diamant Berger, director of a big French film trade paper in France, Le Film, has just arrived in this country. He has come here with the object of establishing in Paris a central distributors agency for all films in order to defeat the efforts of the German film industry to capture the film trade in neutral countries.

Mr. Berger has made his offices with Adolphe Osso, 1457 Broadway.

Ruth Roland Portrays Bit of Daring.

Ruth Roland, as the heroine of the Pathe Western serial, "Hands Up," reached the zenith of her unusual daring in the fourteenth episode, released the week of November 17, when she is thrown into a den of mountain lions and battles her way out. There was swift peril that might have turned to tragedy at any moment. Miss Roland emerged from this scene almost a nervous wreck.

FACTS AND COMMENTS

"WELL, that's finished," as the old lady exclaimed as she wound up the last ball of carpet rags for the new rug on the sittin' room floor. Yes; we mean the war. You've heard that it's over and that we win and that the Hun Kaiser has beat it along with his brood of kaiserlings to await whatever fate a thoroughly incensed world may have in store for him and his defeated war lords. Terms of armistice handed to what was left of the once powerful German Government are such as to preclude any renewal of hostilities by that Government or whoever it's successors may be. There remains only the final cleaning up of the terrible mess which has been left by the worst war the world has ever experienced. That will be a job for the diplomats, and we believe that it will be well and properly done.

But in the meantime we have a duty to perform that is just as important and just as insistent as anything we have yet been called upon to do: meet each call that will be made upon us to maintain the men who have performed so brave and efficient a part in bringing about the only right conclusion of this great conflict against the peace and security of the world. In the brief space of a year we have brought into being the greatest war machine the world ever saw and have manned it with millions of men. It will take longer to disassemble that machine and to return those men to peaceful and creative occupations. The taking apart will not be as expensive as was the building up, but much money will be required. We are now being asked to give to that end and our giving should be cheerful and liberal. Remember, our boys faced death with a smile; let us bring them back with that smile still on their faces. How much will you GIVE?

THERE are other problems facing us as the result of war's termination. They concern the conduct of our respective businesses during the period of readjustment that must follow. Under the unnatural stimulus of war there has been an inflation of prices of almost everything we eat, wear or require in business. Wages have risen to unnatural heights in many industries. In the period of readjustment all these things must be corrected; prices and wages must return to their proper level, but the task will be no easy one. Fortunately the motion picture business has not been materially affected by this wartime inflation. War taxes it has been called upon to pay, but not in a greater proportion than has been levied upon other industries. In the matter of wages operators' unions only have demanded more money. Employes in all other branches of the trade are receiving about the same wages they did when the war began. In the matter of raw material the advance has been comparatively slight, so that the deflation process will not be so great a problem within the trade. What will affect us will be the consequences of deflation in other industries and that will be considerable. To meet these conditions will call for careful financing and the husbanding of such resources as are now in hand. Every effort to prevent overproduction should be made, for the home market is hardly in condition to absorb a greater product than it now takes.

Too much hope should not be put in the foreign market at this time. It will require more than a year to straighten out business conditions abroad. In Germany, Austria, Russia and the entire Balkan region only chaos exists. When reason and regularity may be restored is problematic. Until that time comes the exportation of pictures to those countries will be impossible. It is true that embargoes that have restrained shipments to neutral countries will be, in a measure, raised, but there will still be limitations because of the great need there will be for the shipment of supplies needed for the rebuilding of Europe and the maintenance of our men who will remain there to help with that work. Hence it is well not to be too optimistic on the matter of immediate trade expansion. The war is over. Yes, but there remain many adjustments to be made before trade can safely follow the flag.

THE WORLD IS NEW-BORN

By Louis Reeves Harrison.

NOT that the end has come, but that the truth has come. This world of ours was not created for destruction, not the plaything of Kings to be overturned by them at will, for we have rid ourselves of those gaunt spectres of the Middle Ages handed down to us by a serfdom which could not be rooted out of the hearts of people except through the dread instrumentality of war. We are through with kings, but we still have to face the ignorance they fostered. Out of the wrack and wreck of attempt to stifle progress and corrupt all mankind has risen an immortal idea of enlightenment that will shine eternally, the light perpetuated in our hearts by noble sacrifices on every hand and by those who gave their lives to establish the world's finest principles.

Our resentment of wrongs done gave us the impulse.

Our determination to right those wrongs built up a fine sentiment.

Then sentiment became united with clear-headed reason, and we fought.

No broad form of philanthropy, no magnificent system of world-wide charity, not the deepest laid schemes ever dreamed of in our humanitarianism, ever compared with this United American effort to alleviate suffering across the seas, its ultimate aim to create democratic and intelligent conditions of government under which no such suffering can exist within the limits of present vision.

We sacrificed our present happiness for all.

We sacrificed it for the future of all.

Now the question arises how to make future happiness assured.

Is it possible to prevent this fearful waste of vital energy?

Can all this misery and woe be avoided in the years to come?

Not by any optimistic political scheme, nor even by the scientists — they fail to stop pestilence and famine—not by policing the nations as planned, not even by benevolent forms of government. Our happiness in the future does not depend so much upon government as on our understanding as a united people. The right course of action for this nation, and for all other nations, to pursue for the best interests of those on whom freedom has just downed.

Most of them were ignorant of their best interests.

Otherwise those interests could not have been usurped.

They were educated from childhood to believe in kings.

A kingdom is a good deal like some of our big business organizations, run in the interest of the officers, not in that of the stockholders, and we have grown accustomed to the big business organization, the combination which puts up the price of vital necessities, privateering under a flag of Government loyalty. The smaller a man's holding, the less chance he has of finding out how he is being robbed by the kings of commerce.

What could be grander than our Liberty Crusade?

We have overcome those who would have withered human freedom.

We have cleared the field for progressive elements abroad.

Not let us turn our attention to the big crooks at home.

While we were giving up the little joys of life and handing over all we could rake and scrape together for the sake of our boys at the front, a lot of financial and mercantile kings and kaisers on this side of the Atlantic filled their pockets by overcharging us wherever we were compelled to go for the bare necessities of life, making famine and pestilence possible in our midst. It is all very well for us to ameliorate conditions abroad, which we are willing to do, but we have in the SCREEN a powerful instrumentality for arousing a new sentiment about those parasites here who produce nothing of value to the world, who really add nothing to its wealth, who contribute nothing to its progress. We will have no striking proof that this old world of ours is born anew until we make war on THEM.

Let us strike for a new freedom at home, using the screen in place of the sword, against the enemy within, against the parasite, the profiteer, and build a better art for our grander nation.

THE GREATNESS OF WOMAN

By Edward Weitzel.

THE claim has been made by a number of reviewers and persons interested in the exploitation of moving pictures that "Woman," Maurice Tourneur's latest production, is one of the finest achievements of the screen. Such a claim calls for careful and truthful investigation of the picture in all its phases. The first question to be considered is the ethical status of the work. No moving picture of a serious nature can escape such examination; an alleged screen masterpiece with the comprehensive and responsible title of "Woman" demands the closest kind of scrutiny on this head. It can have but one moral purpose—to do justice to its subject and impress upon the mind of every spectator that the evidence for and against the mothers of men has been presented with the strictest honesty and that the conclusion reached is overwhelming in favor of woman. Any other verdict is also an artistic error.

Charles Whittaker, the author of the scenario of "Woman," acknowledged that the inspiration for his share of the work came from the writing of the English realist, George Moore. It is doubtful if a more untrustworthy source could have been found. The author of "Esther Waters" has always dealt with woman in her lowest mental and physical aspect, and the quotation "The legitimate occupation of man's mind is woman," which is published as the inspiration of the Whittaker scenario, is from a book that is not circulated by the public libraries of the country, a distinction shared with Arnold Bennett's latest story, "The Pretty Lady."

The arguments against woman are presented in the picture in five episodes that take up four-fifths of the story, and the characters chosen are Eve, Messalina, Heloise and two fictitious persons whose acts are as little to any woman's credit as are the disobedience of Eve, the lust of Messalina or the sensuality of Heloise. In what is termed an epilogue, brief incidents are shown of woman's efforts in the present and her share in helping to win the Great War. An insert states that woman has always stood by the side of man throughout the ages and helped him in his struggle toward the light. This attempt at compromise comes too late, and does not restore either the moral or the artistic balance. Each physical Jezebel or moral harpy should have been neutralized by the introduction of some noble and uplifting woman of the same historical period. As it stands now, the overabundance of evil in the picture leaves an aftertaste that is not removed by the antidote in the epilogue.

Granting George Moore his contention that "The legitimate occupation of man's mind is woman," there is assuredly something higher for him to study in his female companions than what Granville Barker calls "that barnyard world of sex." In the play, "The Madras House," one of Barker's characters remarks: "I don't see why we men and women should not find all happiness—and beauty, too—in sober purposes. . . . I want an art and a culture that shan't be just a veneer on savagery."

Maurice Tourneur's share of the work leaves much to praise. All his skill has not sufficed to blend the several episodes into an artistic whole, because the original proposition lacks logic and sincerity and one of the episodes is in bad taste, to say the least. The first error in sacred history is traced to Adam and Eve, and also in "Woman." This screen version of the Garden of Eden story is a bewildering and unlovely scrambling of the Book of Genesis and Darwin's theory of evolution. Adam is shown as still in the ape state, a repulsive and mentally deficient creature, who could have had no more understanding of a divine command than could the dinosaurian have comprehended a traffic regulation or a sign reading "Keep Off the Grass." Eve, on the contrary, is introduced as a physically and mentally perfect being, with all a modern woman's graces and sexual wiles. The contrast between the two robs the episode of all dignity and brings it perilously near to burlesque.

The Messalina episode, considered separately, is an artistic gem. All the Tourneur ability in the handling of lights, grouping and authentic atmosphere is used at its best. It is a fascinating revelation of the higher walks and the unbridled licentiousness of life in ancient Rome. Flore Revalles, as the wife of Claudius, gives the finest performance of the entire cast. The Heloise-Abelard and the Cyrene-Fisherman episodes are both well nigh impossible. The fifth episode, where the young Southern girl betrays an escaping Union soldier for the sake of a watch, is so false to the character of the women of that period it becomes a distinct blot on the general scheme of the picture.

To compare "Woman" to the screen version of "The Blue Bird," directed by Maurice Tourneur, is to regret that the subject matter of the Whittaker scenario has not the beautiful logical and moral balance that gives the Maeterlinck story its chief value. The sooner the screen recognizes the importance of this factor in its advancement, the faster and firmer will be its progress.

Making Old Stills Serve a Most Worthy Purpose

QUITE the most practical idea in scrap books for the entertainment of wounded American soldiers and sailors has been worked out by the World Film Corporation and the Stage Womens' War Relief. This is the Hospital Film Book—all pictures and no text to tax tired eyes and brains.

The first dozen scrap books of this new type were made at the suggestion of Anna Steese Richardson, magazine writer and lecturer, who had been asked by the Stage Women's War Relief to assist in entertaining 500 or more convalescent soldiers in the Red Cross House of a nearby hospital. When Mrs. Richardson learned that many patients would miss the program because they were still too ill to leave the wards, she conceived the idea of taking moving picture scrap books to the sick men. The World Film Corporation did the rest.

"Stills" from popular film dramas introducing World Film stars were grouped under military titles, bound to appeal to the soldier-patients.

About twelve "stills" were used for each book, and they were tied inside glazed cardboard covers with red, white and blue ribbon, like loose-leaf memorandum books. The covers were lettered and decorated with patriotic pastcrs, flags, shields, army and navy insignia and figures of Columbia and Uncle Sam. Pastcd on a corner of each picturc where it would not interfere with the scene was a typcwritten caption, just cnough to explain the photograph and identify the player.

The Hospital Film Books made an instantaneous hit with the wounded mcn, and were passed from bed to bed by nurses who pronounced them the most practical scrap books so far supplied.

The charming actrcsses in thc work rooms of the Stage Womcn's War Relief, 366 Fifth avenue, are making up the books as fast as covers, ribbons, pasters and typewritten captions can be secured.

Here is a new and valuable use for what once represented considerable waste and loss in the picture producing business. It is patriotic service for fighting men now laid low, for every soldier knows and loves the "movies."

Funeral of Harold Edel.

Christy Walker Dies of Influenza.

Thc funeral of Miss Christy Walker, wcll known in the motion picture profession as an actress of ability and promise, who died Tuesday from influenza, was held Friday from her homc, 601 West 137th street.

Born in Birmingham, Ala., twenty years ago, Miss Walker, by her beauty and talent, had attained a prominent position in the profcssion. She was ill only a few days.

Besides her husband, Captain H. N. Walker, of the Chemical Warfare Service, stationed at the American University, Washington, and her two-year-old son, Carter Walker. Miss Walker is survived by her mother, who came on from Birmingham to attend the funeral.

Approach of Peace Already Boosting Theatre Receipts

IMMEDIATELY on receipt of the glorious news that Turkey had collapsed and that Austria was pleading for a cessation of hostilities, World Pictures took steps to observe the attitude of the public toward the theatres in New York City. The officials of the company felt that here would be found an indication of how soon the motion picture producers as well as the exhibitors might expect the full tide of prosperity for amusement enterprises that it was felt would come with the termination of the world-wide struggle. World Pictures learned that notwithstanding the deterrent influence of the influenza epidemic the theatres in New York recorded an increase in box office takings of an average of 400 per cent. over the week previous. One ticket agency said their business reached on Friday $3,000 on the day, whereas a week ago they did less than $200 on the day. Some of the theatres—in fact 70 per cent. of the theatres on Saturday night—had their standing room only signs out for the first time in many months. If this is the experience of theatres with the elimination of Turkey and Austria from the war, what will be the effect when Germany will be compelled to surrender unconditionally? Experienced showmen who have been connected with the theatre for many years are unanimous in the belief that we will have for the next three or four ycars the greatcst era of prosperity for amusements ever known in the history of the world.

ACTIVITIES IN THE EDUCATIONAL FIELD

Naturalization Bureau's Efforts for the Schools Included with Military and Zoological Subjects

IN WHAT seems to be the most inactive period in the production of educational film it is interesting to note the rumblings of a much more intensive effort to make use of available material than ever before. The use to which the moving picture film has been put in general propaganda work and the vast and unlimited benefits seen to have accrued from the use of the film as a recreational and instructional medium, as well as in the great work of helping to maintain the spirit and morale of our fighting forces, has served as strong suggestions of greater use to be made of the strictly educational film. The cry of the schools for aid in the matter of visual education is going to be met more squarely, there is going to be a new use for shelved material of the kind that never grows old—the producer is going to find a market for some of the "old stuff." He is going to find it to his interest to look the situation over and haul out the stuff that the exchange man used to hand out as a premium with the feature production, and discover that after all it has real value in dollars and cents.

One of the most significant signs of the times is the move being made by the Bureau of Naturalization of the United States Department of Labor to promote the use of films in schools as an aid to Americanization.

David K. Niles, Chief of the Motion Picture Section of the Bureau of Naturalization, has handed us the following letter which is being sent to schools throughout the country in an effort to establish an interest in the visual side of the work, and to gain information regarding the facilities and disposition of the various districts toward the enterprise:

Dear Sir:

You have heretofore indicated your active interest in the work of the Bureau of Naturalization of the United States Department of Labor by organizing citizenship classes for the instruction of applicants for naturalization.

Educational motion picture films, as selected and edited by the Motion Picture Section and the Bureau of Naturalization of the Department of Labor, will visualize the activities of the Federal Government described in the "Student's Textbook," compiled by Mr. Raymond F. Crist, Deputy Commissioner of Naturalization, and are intended as an aid to the public school teacher in the preparation of candidates for the responsibilities of citizenship.

While motion pictures can be used successfully in school work to supplement the work of the school teacher and textbook, they cannot be used to supplant either.

This attempt to develop the educational possibilities of the motion picture in class-room work is under the supervision of your Government. Too long has this valuable aid in the field of Americanization been neglected. The motion picture industry is ready. The next step is up to you. Will you, therefore, please answer the enclosed questions?

Cordially yours,
DAVID K. NILES,
Chief, Motion Picture Section.

QUESTIONS.

1. Have you an appropriation for motion pictures?
2. Has your school department motion picture projectors?
3. Give name and age of projector.
4. How long have you been showing motion pictures in your schools?
5. How soon could you begin using the films of this Department?
6. How many hours a week will you devote to this purpose?
7. Can you pay anything toward the cost of handling motion pictures for your schools?
8. Name some motion picture theatres near the schools in which you believe it would be desirable to show motion pictures, if you have no motion picture projector and have no immediate appropriation for the purchase of one, and whether you would be willing and able to make some arrangement with such theatres to present educational motion pictures. This co-operation would mean, probably, that you would use the motion picture theatre as a class-room at such hours as the theatre is not used for its legitimate business.

"Official War Review No. 19" (Pathe).

The closing part of this number is especially instructive, as it pictures warfare in Palestine. Tractors are seen dragging howitzer guns across the desert, mosques and minarets appear in places, and there is one view of soldiers encamped in an oasis. The fore part of the subject includes many interesting views taken on the fronts in Italy and France.

"With the Polish Army in France" (Pathe).

This French pictorial subject gives views of the headquarters of the Polish troops "Somewhere in France." It brings to mind one of the important changes that may be wrought in behalf of justice by the world war, namely, the rehabilitation of Poland as a separate nation. President Poincaire is seen reviewing Polish troops and presenting the colors to the officers and color bearers; later the flags are blessed by a priest.

"Nature's Mischief Makers" (Educational).

An amusing series of scenes with some of the more domestic of nature's children was exhibited at the Rivoli during the week of Nov. 3. This picture is attributed to the Educational Films Corporation of America, and is entertaining rather than educational in character. It shows in an amusing fashion the mischievous and sometimes destructive pranks of fowl, cats and dogs, and monkeys. In the Rivoli program it preceded a Post-Van Scoy scenic.

Asks Extension of Time on Film Shipping Cases

THE National Association of the Motion Picture Industry has entered into negotiations with the Bureau of Explosives relative to having the period when the motion picture companies must comply with the new regulations of the bureau in regard to film shipping cases extended for a period of six months.

When the new regulations affecting the shipment of motion picture film were put into effect there was a provision that companies which had purchased the old style shipping cases prior to May 15, 1918, could continue to use them until December 1, 1918.

Owing to war conditions and the difficulty in obtaining sheet iron, of which material the new cases must be made, it had been practically impossible for the exchanges throughout the country to obtain the new cases. As the period of grace expires in less than a month's time, an extension has been asked for until July 1, 1919.

Owing to the short time remaining until December 1 it is expected the bureau will take prompt action on this request.

Dwindling Reels.

By Epes W. Sargent.

HARKING back into the past, it will be remembered that all reels used to be "approximately 1,000 feet," if you recall the wording of the advertisements of five years ago. When a manager booked in a three-reel or a five-reel show he knew just about how long that show would run. He could arrange his program to within a few minutes of a schedule, knowing that few reels would drop below 975 feet at the worst.

To-day a reel is a tin thing on which the film comes wound, but just how much film is wound upon a reel is a matter for speculation. When the beaten track of the release by reels was left behind with the appearance of the two-reel feature, the exact length of a picture became more and more uncertain as it approached the five-reel stage. Then some manufacturers ran over the five-reel limit and the tradition was created that a six-reel picture must be better than a five and an eight-reel release better than a six, until nowadays many features go out in seven and eight "reels" which might be accommodated very comfortably on five well wound reels.

It has reached the point where the reel has ceased to exist as a convenient standard of measurement and has become instead the tool of the selling agent and the publicity man. It would not matter were this generally understood, but the growth of the scheme has been so slow that managers are just awakening to the fact that the reel is governed by no pure food law or regulated by any standard of weights and measures. As one correspondent puts it:

"This sending in a five-reel subject wound on eight reels is the latest. Make them tell it in feet; not reels. We fellows in the sticks book a seven or eight or nine-reeler for a full show and the people hardly get seated when the show is over—all half-reels. Here's a good chance to help the remote exhibitor who thinks he has booked a two-hour show, judging by its length in reels. If you buy the reel you are buying a cat in a bag and more often than not it is a mighty skinny cat. It's getting worse all the time."

There is a great deal in what this exhibitors says. He is located some distance from an exchange and cannot extend his show with added bookings at the last moment. He must trust to what he has booked. It is all very well to say that he can arrive at the length by asking. This one does now, but why not a return to the old standard of measurement?

Artistry cannot be produced by the yard nor regulated by exact thousand feet lengths, but it is possible to announce the result of that effort in definite footage and not the misleading reel length, and for the sake of the man in the sticks, who most needs the help, such a course should be followed.

WHAT TO DO IF YOU'D FOOL THE EDITOR

Only One Way, Says Bob Cochrane, and That's to Give Him the Truth in the Form He Likes Best

HOW to fool the editor? It can't be done. There was a time when publicity men indulged in the great indoor sport of putting something over on the editor. And they got away with it. And they laughed about it. And, in high glee, they showed their bosses how hard the editor had fallen for it. Then the editor, who after all is merely a worm like the rest of us, turned. He became suspicious of "news" items about theatrical folks, and he has learned to include moving picture folks in those same suspicions. So he fell into the habit of dumping such stuff into the waste basket.

Then, along came certain publicity men who had a real desire to reform things. They decided to tell the truth. But they didn't take the trouble to find out what kind of real truth the editor wanted. Some editors like long stories, some like short ones, some like mere paragraphs, some like stuff in lighter vein, some will use photographs, some will use cuts, some will use mats, some will use no illustrations at all. The reform publicity men didn't bother about these distinctions, but shot in the plain uninteresting truth to all editors alike. It went to the waste basket just as the old fakes had done.

So the reform publicity men thought the truth wouldn't work, and they reformed themselves again, and went back to faking. It never occurred to them that it was the deadly dull form in which they gave the truth to the editors rather than the truth itself which made their efforts futile.

Fooling the editor is a thing that can't be done—in either of the old ways.

To Fool Editor Give Him the Truth.

There's only one way to fool him now, and that is to give him the truth in just the particular form he likes best. Fool him by giving him what he doesn't expect. He doesn't expect the kind of stuff he wants. Give it to him. He gave up hope long ago. Fool him by giving him the kind of stuff he has quit hoping for. No matter how much of a shock it may give him, give him what he thinks you haven't brains enough to give him. He's not going to take the time to teach you what he wants. That's your job to find out. He has troubles of his own. You can make yourself useful to him. You have great quantities of the kind of news that he wants, because in studios as large as those of the Universal Company real news is breaking every day. Your only problem—and it's yours, not the editors—is to serve it the way the editor wants it.

The editor is smart enough to know that more millions of people are interested in moving pictures than are interested in baseball or any other entertainment or sport.

But he is not going to let you prostitute the columns of his newspaper or magazine just so you can get some free advertising. He is willing to use your news, even though it contains publicity, but he is willing only because it is something that he wants for his readers.

Just as soon as you give him as much real moving picture news (truth in an interesting form) he will devote as much space to moving pictures as he now devotes to baseball, because he knows as well as you do that more of his readers are picture fans than baseball fans. He hasn't time to rewrite your stuff. He hasn't time to look out for fakes. First, you've got to find out what he wants. Then you've got to give it to him. And then you've got to keep on giving it to him until you've established a confidence in your stuff. It may take a long time to prove to him that you're not trying to fool him or to get something for nothing. You'll have to overcome old prejudices that exist in his mind against the old-style publicity man. But once you've made good with him, he'll help you as much as you help him.

He doesn't expect you to do any of these things. He never expects to get anything that he really wants from you. He thinks you're always going to make the same old mistakes.

Fool him!

R. H. COCHRANE.

Young Filipino Sailor Graduate Film Expert

ON the word of a United States sailor who has just arrived half way around the world on the way to help put the finishing touches on the U-Boats, the Universal reports big business in the Philippines. The sailor in question is Aguedo DeJesus (pronounced DeJaysu), who dropped in at the Universal headquarters last week, on leave from his ship, the Wickes.

Young DeJesus, is a native Filipino, nineteen years old, who was manager of the poster department of the Universal exchange in Manila when he volunteered to serve Uncle Sam. He reported that seventy-five per cent. of the films in the Philippines are Universal films. There are forty theatres in Manila alone.

Aguedo is married and has a little son, but he didn't let this delay his action when he thought a big task called him. He volunteered July 6, 1918.

"There are 11,000 Filipino volunteers in the American service," said Aguedo. "We joined not only because we believed it was our duty to fight Germany, but because we feel deep gratitude to the United States. The Filipinos set great store by America's promise to give us full independence some day, when we show that we are capable of ruling ourselves. We believe, therefore, that a good way to show America our worthiness of independence is to help her fight this war."

Aguedo speaks with a strong Spanish inflection, but he shows good understanding of English. He had been working in the Universal exchange for about four years when the war came. From the age of eleven to thirteen he was employed in the Government railroad stores under his father, Lucas DeJesus.

Aguedo seems to have flourished as a film man. He worked at first as inspector of films for the exchange, but was promoted soon to the poster department. Raises in wages came fast, and two years ago the young fellow felt responsible enough to be married.

"The Filipinos love the movies," he said. "You ought to have been in Manila when 'The Kaiser, the Beast of Berlin' came to town. The picture stayed a week, and the people just packed the theatre to see it. The box office receipts were over 1,500 pesos every night.

"We had a carnival the week that the Universal's submarine picture came. This made an awful big hit with us, because Filipinos are great swimmers and we love water pictures.

"But the biggest movie hits are the patriotic war pictures. These pictures had a whole lot to do with making us Filipinos realize what this war means. I know they certainly made me feel like getting into the fight quick."

Universal to Issue Big Film on America Aroused

AFTER months of preparation the American Defense Society and Universal Film Manufacturing Company announce the completion of a super-film presenting a narrative of America's war and peace power. The film shows in effect how the nation accomplished military and industrial supremacy over its enemies, and how it is equipped now to achieve infinite good for the world.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the title of the production. It is declared to be one of the greatest spectacle films ever made, and the very first of what may be called victory films. It is, in effect, the screen story of America's conquest.

The picture will be issued as an official message of the American Defense Society, with the heartiest support of that organization and all its executive leaders.

Several nationally prominent men are said to have originated the basic ideas of the production. They collaborated for weeks during their vacation in devising the general plan of what they hoped would be an epical review of the nation's rise to the world leadership, and then enlisted the film experts and defense society into the undertaking. The work of production started immediately.

Cameramen and film scientists were dispatched to many parts of the country to collect scenes and spectacles for the film. More than a hundred cameras were employed.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" was made at the Universal studios by Harry Levey, manager of the industrial department of the Universal Film Manufacturing Company, under the direction of the American Defense Society.

Metro Has Three Lockwood Pictures.

Though the death of Harold Lockwood came as a blow his many admirers will be glad of the opportunity to see him in three great Screen Classics productions, which had already been completed before his illness. These were "A King in Khaki," adapted and directed by Fred. J. Balshofer from Henry Kitchell Webster's novel; "The Great Romance," by Finis Fox, directed by Edwin Carewe; and "The Yellow Dove," a screen version of George Gibbs' famous novel, also directed by Mr. Carewe. These represent the young start at the zenith of his power. "Pals First," his screen version of Lee Wilson Dodd's stage play from Francis Perry Elliott's novel, is considered the high-water mark of Lockwood's work.

Advertising for Exhibitors

Conducted by EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Get Busy.

DURING the Fourth Liberty Loan, a glance out of the windows of this office was like looking into fairyland. Fifth avenue, as far as the eye could see, was a mass of bunting, the Loan flag, the flags of our allies, slogan flags, the Stars and Stripes and bannerettes. We recall only one occasion when the street was so well dressed. But while Fifth avenue was the centre of Loan activities, there was not a side street that did not get its share of advertising. There was not a by-path on the outskirts that did not cry the same slogans. The Liberty Loan Committee did not trust to the Fifth avenue display to sell all the bonds. It went after everyone. It is the same in selling amusements. Make your flash in your lobby and with your house front, but do not think that advertising in any one locality will completely cover your clientele. Get after them with posted paper, programs and newspaper work to the extent that your means permit. Don't do all your advertising in one bunch. Get it spread over as much surface as you can. Make the most row closest to home, but the further afield you get, the broader your appeal.

Steve Stunts.

Steve Farrar, of Eldorado and Harrisburg, Ill., gives the whole receipt for good advertising when he writes in a recent letter:

"You will notice that I have always been lucky or something in getting a good printer wherever I have been. But I always go over every ad with him when I take it down, and I also take down sample for him to look over, this I usually get from your department, and then when I send one in and you give it a good word as to display, I always take the book down to him and show him that we are working along the right line. Perhaps I have been lucky, but I know that I have always gotten good work from the printer."

That is not luck: it's common sense. He knows what he wants, he knows how to tell the printer what he wants and generally can show a sample of about what he wants. Steve is strong for this department, because he uses it right. He writes: "I'd be willing to give a long price for some bound book of all your pages since you started writing for the World. If I had such a volume they could take all their punk press books and go to hell, for your sheets would be all that I would need. I could find something in the department sheets that would fit any picture I was playing." That's strong language, perhaps, but it is true. A press book gives you what a company press man thinks you should use for his attraction. The sheets would give the best ideas of the best managers throughout the country. To show what he is doing, Steve sends in a cross page sevens for "Under the Yoke" that tells in three lines what the play is about, and tells it attractively. We think this is an improvement on the press book styles because the press book does not give unusual layouts since comparatively few use them. One of the best things he has done lately is a kidding two twelves for a vampire story. It will get a smile from every reader and will get the money from a lot of them. Put the glass on this and get the text, then try your hand at it the next time you havo a vamp picture yourself. A good adaptation of the Bleich weekly advertisement is found in a five and a half, full. This is run in the Saturday issue with a six inch single for the current bill. It is a useful form of program display even if it does give some advertising critics a pain in their innards. It is clean and neat, orderly and easily read. We're glad to see that Steve is following the Bleich idea. We are surprised to see so few using this layout. And talking of Steve, you'll remember that he was raising blooded dogs lately. The other day he swapped his stud dog for a flivver. Must have been some dog, for even second hand flivers cost money these days. Steve probably needs the car to hike between the two towns he shows. There is a trolley service, but now Steve can be free of time tables.

We've Got a "Vampy" Picture
At the Orpheum tonight with LINA CAVALIERI in the title role. Just to make it seem "saucier" than it really is, they named it "THE ETERNAL TEMPTRESS."
But why all this "howl" about these "vampy" subjects? Surely no living female is going to follow the footsteps of one of these "vamps" after seeing what a hard time she has.
Let's take the present offering as an example: The "vampy" lady in this instance, as is usual in about 99,999 cases out of every 100,000 uses the handsome hero as her accomplice, making him a traitor, spy, forger and everything else the scenario writer could think of, to prove his love for her. Then, woman-like, feels sorry for him, goes over to the villain's house, tries to get him "stewed," and finally kills him in attempting to get the papers that will save the hero's life.
After having returned the valuable papers, our "shero," for she is no longer a "vamp," deliberately shoots herself, and then on comes a sign, "The end," and the customers make room for more, whom we hope are waiting on the ouside to get in.
I've been looking at "vampy" plays and pictures for years, and have yet to find one where she looks like more than "30 cents" at the finish. I have in mind writing a scenario some time, devoting one reel to the fiendish operations of Miss Vamp and six reels to the unhappy life that is bound to come to anyone with vampish aspirations.
I don't blame a young miss for wanting to live a life like Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, Billie Burke, etc., portray, but when it comes to following the occupations of a vamp—well, I think they'd rather wash dishes for a living.
If you don't like vampy pictures STAY AWAY, stay away—for "The Seven Swans" are slowly swimming this way, and they tell us this picture is 110% pure.
STEVE FARRAR, Manager.
P S.—I don't think Lina "wiggles" in this picture, but won't swear she doesn't.

A cross-page program dropping five and a half inches, and a single six for the current bill in a Saturday edition.

Two, but One.

Here is a double space for the Boyd, Omaha, in which the suggestion of two advertisements is given through the totally different style of cuts used. Had the name of the house run across the four columns, the signature would have held the two together, but as it stands there is only the "doublo feature bill." Had space permitted, the two could have been held together with twelve point border, but both cuts supplied were flush two columns wide, and there was barely room for the border used. "For Hus-

McCormicks.

S. Barett McCormick, of the Circle, Indianapolis, is always well worthy of study. For one thing he knows how to say things so well that it pays to use display spaces for small type talk. It is what sells the picture, and he puts his press notice in his display ads. One pair of elevens—one three and one four columns wide—are more text than type, with a large attractor. He knows that it will pay him to make his readers find out about Mitchell Lewis, so he tells about him and identifies him through a previous play. The insert shows how he cuts down a large cut to make it fit a two fours. Once he has a mat he can cut his casts as he likes, and he gets many good effects through this means. If a cut is your own have a mat made and use portions if you can to advantage. A three fifteens and a three thirteens for Nazimova come out nicely, but we think that the suggestion of Salome is made too prominent. It is not a part of the real play, and gives the wrong suggestion. People will go to the theatre expecting to see something different, and will be disappointed no matter what they get. The larger cut is almost an oddity in its layout. The only display lines in a three fifteens are the star, play and house name. The rest is mostly eight point italic, but it makes an unusually attractive space, and one that will probably be read. The banks below the title relate to the additional attractions. For "The Fall of the Romanoffs" a four fulls and two three fifteens were taken. The red shirt announcement is another example of the unusual, and it will attract more attention than either of the other displays because of its oddity. The artist is wrong in using the dome with a crescent for his tailpiece in the other displays. This is the emblem of the Moslem, and not of the Russian-Greek Church. It is a detail that few will notice. It will be seen that the same tailpiece is used in both the three and four column displays. This can be done where the top and tailpieces are separate. Here one is held together by a pair of columns, and in the other twelve point rule serves the same purpose. The last of the set is a three fulls, a four fulls and two smaller threes. The three fulls makes a vivid display, and the cut has been cropped to work as a three thirteens, with some changes in the type display. The four fulls starts off with a redrawn poster, and runs right into small type, with the big type following. The bill was used for the second anniversary of the house, and special spaces were taken. All of the displays are made with unusual care, and show real work. The anniversary is merely announced. The rest came in the reading pages, but the anniversary announcement gives a punch to the suggestion that the bill must be better than usual.

Gave Away Stockings.

A. C. Raleigh, of the American, Butte, Mont., played "A Pair of Silk Stockings" lately, and, as there was a patriotic demonstration on that evening, he announced that silk stockings would be given away at the night shows. It's an old trick, but the something-for-nothing appeal hitched up closely with the play, and it brought a crowd. Mr. Raleigh also hung around town red and yellow leg cut-outs lettered, "'A Pair of Silk Stockings.' Oh, Boy!" and at the top, "American, Now." His newspaper space was a black leg with the same text in white, and on a card pinned to the top of the stocking, "A few feet of silk stockings will attract a lot of notice on Park street—but see Constance Talmadge in five thousand feet of 'Silk Stockings.' Some stockings! Some feet!" But for the love of Mike, what sort of girls go out on Park street and show their stockings by the foot? tude, as well as longitude. On one side of the sock is written, "Girls! A pair of silk stockings will be given away at each show to-night. Are you lucky?" The punch lies in the question. And we give notice that we are keeping an eye on Miss Talmadge. First it was "A Pair of Silk Stockings" and then "Mrs. Leffingwell's Boots." If she goes much further—. Another Raleigh space is a four nines for "Just for To-night." The attractor has no real relation to the film, and, if a pun is intended, we think it will pass many, but it will get attention, and that is what it is there for. It is a mistake, however, to dismiss "Our Bridge of Ships" with so scant a mention, even though this may have been played up in other displays. To use so small a display for a war subject is not getting the full value.

Projection Department

Conducted by F. H. RICHARDSON

Manufacturers' Notice.

IT IS an established rule of this department that no apparatus or other goods will be indorsed or recommended editorially until the excellence of such articles has been demonstrated to its editor.

Important Notice.

Owing to the mass of matter awaiting publication, it is impossible to reply through the department in less than two to three weeks. In order to give prompt service, those sending four cents, stamps (less than actual cost), will receive carbon copy of the department reply, by mail, without delay. Special replies by mail on matters which cannot be replied to in the department, one dollar.

Both the first and second sets of questions are now ready and printed in neat booklet form, the second half being seventy-six in number. Either booklet may be had by remitting 25 cents, money or stamps, to the editor, or both for 40 cents. Cannot use Canadian stamps. Every live, progressive operator should get a copy of these questions. You may be surprised at the number you cannot answer without a lot of study.

To Washington Again.

Again, at the request of our International offices, the editor of this department has journeyed to the Capitol City, this time to take part in a conference with the heads of the Federal Board for Vocational Education, to which board Congress had delegated the great task of rehabilitating, as workers, our partially disabled soldiers and sailors.

Assistant President Dolliver and Third Vice-President S. B. Newman had expected to take part in the conference, but other matters compelled their absence, so that First Vice-President Cannavan, General Organizer Mathews and the editor were left to represent the interests involved in a conference upon which, Superintendent of Training W. J. Hamilton frankly declared, hinged the decision of the board as to its further action with relation to the projection field and disabled men. The conference lasted from 10:30 a. m. until 12:30 p. m., the board being represented by H. L. Brunson, superintendent of employment for the board; W. D. Hamilton, superintendent of training for the board, and Henry Lester Smith, superintendent of co-operation for the board, all of whom impressed the editor as being men who are taking up a task of extreme difficulty in the right spirit and with a broad vision. They seek to so place the returned disabled army and navy men that they will be self respecting, self sustaining citizens, and to accomplish that end without the upsetting of labor conditions in any vocation affected.

"This board cannot be used," said Superintendent of Employment Brunson, "to flood any industry with an overplus of workers, and thus break down labor conditions in that field. To allow that would be to work as great an injustice on the disabled soldier or sailor we seek to help as to the men already employed in the vocation affected. Its ultimate effect would be to leave the disabled man in an overcrowded field of labor, hampered by physical disability, yet compelled to compete with able-bodied men. That we propose to guard against, so far as is possible. We are here to aid the disabled soldier and sailor, not to injure him."

The foregoing was fully indorsed by Mr. Brunson's colleagues on the board, and it stamps them as broad gauge men, having a real comprehension of the various phases of the problem given them to solve.

The view of matters from the standpoint of the organization was set forth in most excellent form by Messrs. Cannavan and Mathews. Among other things they pointed out the indisputable fact that there will be approximately 3,500 of their own membership returning who must be absorbed back into the business, and the further fact that this must be done by a business or profession in which the field is rapidly narrowing through the substitution of one large theatre for several smaller ones, and the further probable fact that many of the theatres closed during the war will never again reopen their doors. Messrs. Cannavan and Mathews also pointed out the fact, citing the recent scathing report of conditions in projection rooms by the California State Board of Health in proof, that a very large percentage of projection rooms, particularly in the older theatres and theatres of the "store-room" type, are decidedly unhealthy, and that projectionists working in them are subject to grave danger from tuberculosis. They also made the point that many projection rooms must be reached by way of iron ladders leading through trap doors, or by devious and oft times difficult routes, so that only an able-bodied man could hope to escape serious injury or even death in event of a serious film fire in the projection room. "Imagine," said Mathews, "a man with one limb trying to raise a trap door, get through an eighteen-inch square hole and down an iron ladder, with two or three reels of film spouting fire around him!"

The projection editor set before the board his views of the injustice that it would be to disabled men to place them in the projection field without any even half way adequate apprenticeship, and with little or no real training in theoretical or practical projection; also that such action would work tremendous injustice to the industry itself. His argument was largely confined to setting forth the need for the induction of such men as the profession could absorb (after having absorbed its own returning men, who must naturally be taken care of—a rather large undertaking in itself, by the way) as competent instead of incompetent projectionists. It was pointed out to the board the utter futility and absurdity of attempting, as some seem proposing to attempt, the transforming of disabled soldiers and sailors into projectionists through the medium of a few "lectures" and a short course of hospital training with a projection machine. We tried to show that which is the unquestionable fact, viz: That this would work injustice to the man himself and to everyone concerned, and that the board should recommend to no man to enter the projection field except after supplementing such teaching as might be given him by a course of training (an apprenticeship) in a theatre projection room.

We discovered the fact that much pressure is being brought to bear on the board to place large numbers of disabled soldiers and sailors in the projection field. The board officials intimated that this fact looked to them just a bit "queer."

The editor left the board with the impression that its officials are fair minded men who seek to and intend to do the right thing regardless of any outside influence or pressure once the "right thing" has been fully determined. Certainly it seems that the board will not allow itself to be used to flood any vocation with a surplus of labor, and that most decidedly is good.

Misguided Activity.

From Fred J. Herrington, former president Pennsylvania Exhibitors' League, comes the following, with request for publication. We comply, of course, but reluctantly, because the letter cannot do other than call for adverse criticism. I shall make this criticism as mild as I consistently can, for the reason that I know friend Herrington personally and believe him to be perfectly honest. In other words I do not for one moment imagine there is any ulterior, wage economizing scheme warping Fred Herrington's judgment, though that may not hold good of everyone implicated. The letter reads:

> Dear Editor: While the convention of our organization, the American Exhibitors' Association, was on at Chicago the Keystone state was not represented as it should have been; still we are pleased to let you know the members of the E. A. E. of our state were and are not asleep at the switch. Attached letter from the Supervisor of Western Pennsylvania to the Department of Labor of our state will prove that fact. It may be news to some of the states to hear we are ON THE JOB and that our request has been granted, the Department of Labor now allowing us to employ operators 16 years of age, which certainly means something to the exhibitors of this state, and may help exhibitors of other states to obtain consideration, which they all need under present labor conditions and the scarcity of operators, with so many of the boys going to the front to aid Uncle Sam, which is a much nobler, grander work. I ask that you publish this letter, also copy of Mr. Feehan's letter to the Department. Signed, Fred J. Herrington.

The letter of Mr. Feehan reads, its non-essential paragraphs deleted for sake of conservation, as follows:

> Mr. J. H. Walker, Acting Chief Inspector, Department Labor and Industry, Harrisburg, Pa. Dear Sir: A committee representing motion picture theatre owners of western counties, composed of F. J. Herrington, Mt. Oliver; O. McKee, St. Clair; J. S. Newman, Newcastle, and W. M. Kane, Carnegie, all this state, called at our Pittsburgh office today and directed my attention to the serious difficulty they would experience in complying with the Industrial Board's standards for motion picture machine operation, which became effective March 1, this year. The following constitutes their principal objections, viz.: (A) Section 1 thereof provides that an operator shall be not less than 18 years of age and that he shall be licensed as prescribed in Section 2. The new draft law provides that boys 18 years of age be subject to its provisions. This means that a very large percentage of motion picture machine operators will be drafted * * * and the theatre owner will have no assurance that when he has secured a licensed operator the man will be able to remain in his employ, unless he be physically unfit for military duty. Your department appreciating the hazard of this occupation, both to the operator and the public, has taken unusual precautions in providing restrictions and regulations in order to insure competent and efficient operators (Pardon me while I pause to smile. That last declaration sounds queer to one acquainted with Pennsylvania examination of projectionists. —Ed.). The effect of this provision of the new safety standards and of the new draft law will make it almost impossible to carry into effect the provisions of the standards, and the owner, being unable to secure a licensed operator, will be confronted with the proposition of either closing his theatre and going out of business or deliberately violating the provisions of the law. A remedy proposed to meet this condition is that the age of operators be reduced from 18 to 16. Personally I am of the opinion this can be done successfully, because modern machines in use, and those that will hereafter be put into use, have many safeguards that machines of years ago did not have * * *. There is available a sufficient number of 16-year-old boys (Children, you mean, don't you.—Ed.) who can be drawn on for this class of work.

(B) The question of suspending the requirements of Sections 1 and 2 of the standards should be given further consideration by the Industrial Board, for the following reasons: The difficulty that will be experienced in securing operators due to abnormal conditions existing will undoubtedly become more serious before the war is over. * * * I am in favor of holding in abeyance the provision requiring certified operators until normal conditions are again restored. * * * I request you to call the Commissioner's attention to this letter; also members of the Industrial Board, as it contains my views on the subject. Signed Francis Feenan, Supervising Inspector, Pittsburgh, Pa.

Boiled down, what this official wants, and presumably what friend Herrington asks, is that the gates be thrown wide open for incompetency until the return of "normal conditions," which will certainly be until after the war is over, and possibly for years thereafter. I would like to ask both Mr. Herrington and Mr. Feenan the following questions, which they are entirely at liberty to reply to through this department: (A) How is it that Vancouver, B. C., with an examination which makes any Pennsylvania examination I know of look like a plugged copper coin, has not, after years of war, in the least let down the bars and is still able to secure projectionists (not operators; she has no use for them) to man her projection rooms? (B) How is it that New York City seems to stand in no danger of closing her theatres from lack of projection room help, though the examination is as strict as ever and the age limit not reduced. How is it that the same is true of Massachusetts, with an age limit of twenty-one (21) and a good stiff examination. Why the tremendous excitement in Pennsylvania alone? (C) You propose to employ sixteen-year-old school boys to reproduce the product of the motion picture industry on the screen, do you? How much apprenticeship have they served, please? If incompetent you, of course, understand there will be very great wastage of machinery, and of light, which means coal. What do you propose to do to insure us against this loss, which we can but ill afford at this time? You, of course, expect to pay these "operators" (I imagine that is about all they will be, if they could be justly called even that. To name projection in the same breath would be an insult to intelligence) the standard wages and give them the standard conditions of labor. Of course you do? (D) What assurance do you offer the actor and producer that their work will not be even worse manhandled than it is now? (E) If your schoolboy "operators" work damage to the films over and above that done to them by competent projectionists, are you prepared to have the Pennsylvania League shoulder the added overhead expense thus saddled on the industry, or do you expect to make the exhibitors of other states help you foot the bill? (F) If you are going into the schoolboy business, why stop at 16. There are thousands of boys of ten and twelve who can do just about as well as the proposed 16-year-old untrained material you propose to shove into the projection rooms of Pennsylvania.

And the shame of it is that the Pennsylvania officials, who certainly ought to know better, have consented. Herrington says this action may be of value to exhibitors of other states. Yes, as an example of what NOT to do. The Pennsylvania exhibitors have succeeded in dealing the industry of that state a solar plexus blow from which, I venture the

I am also taking the matter up with Pathe, the Mutual, and other animated weekly producers. I intend to try to secure at least a reduction of the evil, if not its remedying. There is no possible excuse for such utterly stupid performances. It is high time cameramen be given to understand that unless they at least can regulate their speed of taking within reasonable limits they have no right place twisting a camera crank at all. They have not the right to make the projectionist ridiculous, that being exactly what happens, since the average theatre patron blames all faults to the projectionist, not understanding that he, the projectionist, must suffer not only for his own sins, but also for the sins of others.

I presume some cameramen will plead in excuse that some scenes are slowed down on account of poor light, but I take the position that except in very rare cases, unless a scene can be photographed in such manner that it can be reproduced at least half way acceptably, it has no place on the screen at all.

From a Funeral March to Twelve Miles an Hour.

The assortment of camera speed indulged in by cameramen employed in the making of scenes for some of the various weekly topicals is something very wonderful, and well calculated to produce an effect on the screen which is almost anything but good.

This matter has been called to my attention many times by high-class projectionists, who complain that it is utterly impossible to produce a screen result even half way decent or acceptable from such punk material. Joseph Basson, a high-class projectionist, holding down a position at the Rialto, one of New York's very best photoplay palaces, is the latest to register protest. Brother Basson is well known to the fraternity, both in New York and outside. He says: "How can we be expected to present a decent showing from a topical, especially where columns of marching men are involved, when, in one scene, they are wiggling along at seemingly ten or twelve miles an hour and in the adjoining scene are apparently taking part in a very slow, solemn funeral march? To remedy the wide difference in camera speed in taking, which is primarily responsible, by changing speed of projection, is impossible, for the simple reason that projection speed cannot be altered over so wide a range quickly enough; also, were we to attempt to slow down to produce an effect of naturalness in some of the scenes, even the special fast intermittents provided us in the Rialto, with consequent ideal shutter, could not prevent flicker. We do slow down to about 42, but that is the limit, and it is not nearly enough in some extra bad cases."

And brother Basson is entirely right! The carelessness (or is it ignorance) of cameramen employed on some topicals in the matter of taking speed is nothing short of an infernal outrage. It leads one to wonder if they really are cameramen at all, or merely tonsorial artists, who, being perhaps fair amateur kodakers, just blossomed forth. I am assured by Mr. Cohen, editor Universal animated weekly, that he allows nothing of the sort in his production. Said Mr. Cohen: "I am a cameraman myself. I have been in this game for years and we know the result produced on the screen by such raw work. I would rather throw a negative away than make a laughing stock of myself by inserting a piece of overspeeded or underspeeded film such as you very justly criticize."

Lens Combination.

Charles Vanderbilt, Trenton, New Jersey, asks:

> Would like to ask a question, provided it would not take too much of your valuable time: Can you recommend to me the best combination of condenser for following condition: 110 volt a. c., using 40 amperes. Size of projection lens is 4½, ¼, 5¼ inch focus. Distance of projection is 76 feet, and size of screen 12 feet, 10 inches. Distance from arc to film 20 inches. Please give price of combination you recommend.

Answering questions is exactly what our valuable time is for. We do not quote prices on merchandise, except in exceptional cases. Part of your data is not intelligible. But, anyhow, all I want to know is kind of current and amperage. For forty amperes a. c. you should have two 6.5-inch plano convex condenser lenses set as close together as you can get them without actual contact, with about 22 inches from centre of condenser combination to film. That is the correct dope. If you cannot get 22 inches, why that is no fault of mine, but of the projector manufacturer, who has failed to provide sufficient lamphouse adjustment. We shall very soon publish a new optical chart for the projector, which will supply all the necessary information as to condenser lens focal lengths, distance condenser to film, diameter of projection lens and distance of revolving shutter from aperature. Watch for it.

Music for the Picture

Conducted by GEORGE W. BEYNON

The Evolution of Picture Music Is the Result of Conscientious Effort

Part III.

Theatres were assuming larger proportions and the time was ripe for more innovations. Here entered Mr. and Mrs. Tympani to complete the family reunion of Percussion. The family now being together and in conclave solemn, it was to be expected that there would be some momentous upheaval in the realm of picture music, and there was.

During the slow growth of the cue sheets, musical scores crept into existence. The Essanay Company of Chicago produced a feature of five reels accompanied by a piano score which could be played on the organ. These scores were rented to the exhibitor at fifty cents a day and proved very helpful in properly interpreting the picture, but were not a financial gain to the company. This was in 1912, and there were no further experiments in musical scores until the run of "The Birth of a Nation" in New York during the year 1915.

The music for "The Birth of a Nation" will go down in the annals of the history of the film industry as an epoch of greatest importance. It was arranged for an orchestra of forty pieces and was clearly synchronized to the minutest detail. Joseph Breil composed and arranged it and, in so doing, he set a high mark at which future composers might shoot. At the time of writing, after three years of musical advance, "The Birth of a Nation" score still stands as a criterion, and no subsequent score has transcended its beauty or comprehensiveness.

Following closely upon the enthusiastic and popular reception of this famous score, the writer presented at the Broadway Theatre, New York, September 16, 1915, a musical score arranged for the Oliver Morosco picturization of "Peer Gynt."

Never was there a more severe test set for synchrony than this first performance of "Peer Gynt." Because of an unexpected delay in getting the music from the printer, there was no rehearsal, and the writer was forced to conduct a newly gathered together orchestra of fifty instruments through the intricacies of Grieg and at the same time bring the music out coincidentally with the scenes. All went well until Peer Gynt shot the Southerner. Immediately after that there was a scene which was interpreted by using "Dixie." For some unaccountable reason, the shooting was delayed and the orchestra could not, with justice to the merits of the number being played, be held back until the duellists had vindicated their honor. Thus a moment before the shot the orchestra started "Dixie." No doubt at that moment the Southerner wished he was in Dixie, and the appreciative audience thought they were listening to a musical joke perpetrated to relieve the dramatic tension. Nevertheless, it was a bad break and was criticised severely by the daily papers.

If we are conscientious and painstaking in our efforts, we learn by our mistakes, and following scores were more successful.

The Paramount saw the possibilities of this new form of music service, and by an arrangement entered into with G. Schrerer, Inc., and the writer, printed orchestral scores for one hundred and sixteen pictures. These were rented to an exhibitor for a nominal fee, and letters of praise were received from hundreds of those deriving benefit therefrom.

But the time was not ripe for such an elaborate form of picture music. The service was poorly advertised and all those interested lost money. It was discontinued—not because the idea was wrong nor because the scores contained little merit—but from the pure lack of support expected from the exchange and the exhibitors.

During this period, S. L. Rothapfel, sometimes called "The Little Napoleon of the picture industry," saw the vast possibilities of the musical part of his program, and, being engaged to open the Strand Theatre on Broadway, gathered together an orchestra of thirty-fixe expert instrumentalists and installed a large organ as a permanent feature of this new house. Carl Edouarde was engaged to conduct this constellation of artists, and a standard program of merit was conceived, in which singers of reputation had a prominent place.

The Strand became the Mecca, not only for picture "fans," but for all lovers of the truly artistic music. Nothing like it had been seen before; never had the "movies" been run on such a large and elaborate scale. Picture presentation became an art which met with popular favor throughout the country. Live exhibitors everywhere began to pattern their amusement palaces after the Strand model. The name "Movie" lost its significance, and in its place we heard such new dignified terms as "Picture Show," "Temple of the Motion Pictures" and "Picture Palace."

The program opened with an overture of classic nature or excerpts from symphonies or operas. Then followed music fitting an educational subject. A vocal number separated the Scenic from the Pictorial Review, followed by another vocal selection. Then came the feature, an entr'acte by the orchestra, a comedy, and the bill closed with an organ solo.

Music from beginning to end, this program established itself in the hearts of the people and, although only four shows were run daily, the receipts were counted in thousands of dollars.

The musicians who made no pretense of fitting the picture, but calmly sat waiting for a scene to appear that should fit the music they were capable of "faking," had gone and the orchestra pit was to know them no more forever. Their places were filled with competent and painstaking artists who gave the scenes depicted an intelligent attention and who played the music in perfect synchrony.

There is indeed a far cry from the store front of earlier days to the "Picture Palace Beautiful," and a long flight from the big drum to the synchrony orchestra. This astonishing evolution was not brought about suddenly, but only through the slow process of evolution in picture playing, materially assisted and encouraged by the upward trend of film craft and the increased interest and patronage of musically appreciative picture lovers.

Death of Harold Edel Stuns Picturedom.

Active, useful and fruitful in the picture field, drawing to him countless friends because of his sunny disposition, Mr. Harold Edel, managing director of the Strand Theatre, New York, finished his work and passed into the Great Beyond, Saturday, November 3.

Though young in years, Mr. Edel's life was filled to overflowing with managerial activities, and his energetic mentality refused to rest even when it seemed vitally necessary. Had the career of Mr. Edel been turned from executive and business channels into the stream of art, he would have proved a wonderful musician.

From earliest childhood, he loved music, and became fairly proficient as a pianist. It was his good fortune to have many opportunities of hearing the best operas and symphonic works. He reveled in musical color, and being an apt student, soon learned the fundamental principles that distinguish artists from amateurs.

All this stood him in good stead when he undertook the management of picture theatres for the late Mitchell Mark. Mr. Edel's modesty never permitted him to accept the credit for his musical conceptions, and it was characteristic of the man that he should force the crown of achievements accomplished upon the head of his friend and employer.

The passing of Mr. Harold Edel, to many is shocking; to a few, calamitous; and to countless well wishers has created a void impossible to fill. To those of his family suffering in bereavement, we personally extend our inexpressible sympathy.

"Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean."

The peculiar nature of his occupation and a certain amount of leisure which is unavoidable on board ship, have given the sailor many opportunities for music that the average soldier cannot hope to enjoy. Even while at work, the former is far more accustomed to lighten his labors with song than the latter.

Taking these facts into consideration, it is rather surprising that few songs have been written that are distinctly of the ocean in atmosphere.

Among this little group and embodying the spirit of power and patriotism, we have "Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean." It can scarcely be ignored when reviewing our national songs as the words are distinctly American.

So many wordy battles have been fought about it that it would be interesting for that reason if it had no other title to distinction. England has set up some very well-defined claims for it. One English writer very sensibly argued that the "Gem of the Ocean" was far more applicable to the Island of Great Britain than to a large continent, three thousand miles wide, and bounded by land on two sides. In England, the song is called "Britannia, the Pride of the Ocean" and is quite as popular there under that name as in this country by the one with which we have become familiar.

If the tune alone was concerned in the controversy, it would not be quite such a puzzle. But the writer of the American lyrics seems to be equally a question never satisfactorily decided. There were two claimants for the honor, and a surprising amount of valuable time has been wasted trying to substantiate the assertion of one or the other of the two gentlemen interested: Thomas á Becket and David T. Shaw.

Mr. Becket relates this story, which sounds plausible: In the fall of 1843, while he was engaged at the Chestnut Street Theatre, Philadelphia, Mr. Shaw, then singing in the Chinese Musuem in the same city, called upon Mr. Becket and requested him to write the music for a song to be used in a benefit given Mr. Shaw. The latter produced some lines which he wished used as a nucleus. Mr. Becket states that these verses were so ungrammatical and so deficient in measure it was impossible to set them to music. He pointed out this fact to Mr. Shaw, who acknowledged the truth of the statement. The two men then went to the house of a friend who had a piano. There Mr. Becket wrote the first two verses in pencil and composed the music. On reaching home again, he added a third verse, arranged the music and made a copy in ink. This he gave to Mr. Shaw, requesting him not to give or sell a copy. Then he adds: "A few weeks later I left for New Orleans and was greatly surprised to see a published copy, entitled 'Columbia, the Gem of the Ocean,' written, composed and sung by David Shaw and arranged by Thomas á Becket, Esq."

Mr. Becket proceeds to relate that upon his return to Philadelphia he called upon the publisher. By him, Mr. Becket was assured that the song had been purchased from Mr. Shaw. Mr. Becket thereupon produced the original pencil written manuscript and claimed the copyright. In a few weeks, the song made its reappearance and the credit was given to Mr. Becket.

The song did not take long to find its way across the ocean, and was sung everywhere in England. Mr. Becket seems to have had a rather difficult task in reserving to himself the honor of writing the song. For, when he visited London in 1847, he again found that the credit had been diverted into other channels and it was accepted everywhere as an English composition. He quaintly adds: "Perhaps it really is, I being an Englishman by birth."

Thus the song, familiarly known as the "Red, White and Blue" flourishes. Its origin is shrouded in claims and counterclaims, but any amount of controversy cannot conceal the fact that it is warmly received as one of our patriotic airs. It breathes a warm national spirit which is a part of our American life and indicative of the spirit which in this present national crisis, has made "Columbia ride safe thro' the storm."

Patriotic Rally for Thanksgiving Day.

A patriotic allegory entitled "Three Stars," the work of Mrs. David Allen Campbell, founder of National Song Day, will be a Thanksgiving Day attraction in motion picture theatres throughout the United States. In connection with this picture the song, "Three Stars," will be sung by the audience. The words are by Charles Knap, and the music is Mrs. Campbell's composition. In the choruses she has used the refrains of three old familiar songs. This fact alone should insure an ovation for the song, aside from the merit of the verses.

Promptly on the stroke of four o'clock, Eastern time, Thanksgiving afternoon, if the splendid idea works out as planned, audiences all over the country will begin the same patriotic song, and there will follow the unfolding of a picture unique in the annals of the screen and universal in its appeal to patriotism.

The allegory consists of five panoramic pictures depicting mankind's slow progress through the ages of Autocracy's oppression down to the present time.

The first picture shows humanity crushed by war, famine and pestilence, heavily burdened by the weapons of Autocracy and crying into omnipotence for deliverance. Following this is a vision of Democracy, with the sword of Jenovah in hand, answering the call to which all the forces of humanity respond.

These epic scenes move in quick succession across the screen, and fade into the dim scene of our American boys answering the call to arms and to the Blue Star of Valor shining overhead, while the audience will be invited to sing the first verse of the song:

"Blue Star of Valor glowing
On service flags of white,
You mark a hero's going
To fight the fight for Right."

The blue star dissolving as the boys march away, the oncoming scene portrays the first defeat of Autocracy in battle—the boys in action—whereupon the Silver Star of Service appears, while the audience sings in unison:

"Bright star of Silver shining,
In fire of battle tried;
The dross of life refining
By action glorified."

The Star of Service finally is dissolved into the Stars and Stripes, significant of the end of the conflict.

Then follows the Gold Star of Sacrifice, while the audience joins in singing:

"O, star of Gold! Immortal!
O, sacrifice supreme!
You shine thro' Heaven's portal
With Star of Bethlehem."

This star dissolves into a blue background, the Star of Bethlehem appears, and the audience sings the last stanza of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic."

The "Liberty Song" is being arranged under the direction of Mrs. Philip North Moore, president of the National Council of Women, an organization seven million strong. The basic idea is to create a wave of patriotic melody that will reach from ocean to ocean.

New Ballad, "When I Come Home to You."

"Smiles" has made such a hit wherever it is heard—and it is sung everywhere—that music lovers will be glad to hear that Mr. J. Will Callahan, the writer of "Smiles," has a new ballad, "When I Come Back to You." This song has been set to music by Frank H. Grey, and the publishers, Huntzinger & Dilworth, are predicting a great future for it.

Questions Answered—Suggestions Offered.

Q. I have a new theatre under my management and the work of gathering together musicians who can play well has been somewhat hard. After getting what I consider a good orchestra together, they refuse to play more than seven hours a day. As you can readily understand, with our show running continuously from 1:30 p. m. to 11 p. m., we must have music. What shall I do?

A. Music is not mechanical and good results cannot be obtained if the players are forced to play for hours at a stretch. No doubt the musicians whom you have secured are Union men and they cannot play more than seven hours without breaking one of the Union rules. Your data is somewhat meager from which to form a basis of advice; but, taking it for granted that the orchestra is a small one, we would suggest that there be a relief pianist or organist employed. He should open the show and play until 2:15 p. m., when the orchestra begins and plays until 5:15. The relief then should carry the supper show until 7 p. m., and the orchestra again take up the burden from 7 to 11 p. m. Moreover, don't make the boys play steadily even when they are in the pit. Give them breathing spells by the interpolation of the organ or piano. This will give you better music.

Q. My cellist refuses to play on a cement floor, claiming that he gets rheumatism. How can I please him?

A. Cement floors are poor sound resonators and much of your beauty of tone is lost because of non-resiliency. Get a false wood flooring laid over the cement, and it will hold your cellist and prove a blessing as a sounding board for your music.

Q. Should I start my music "at screening" or wait until the first scene of the picture?

A. Never allow a foot of film to lack musical accompaniment of some sort.

MENTAL "STUNTS" BY D. FAIRBANKS

Celebrated Exponent of the Active Life and Physical Agility as Applied to Moving Pictures Sits Quietly and Talks Soberly of the Serious Side of the Screen

By Edward Weitzel

BENNIE ZEIDMAN did the honors and ushered the long row of interviewers, special writers and photographers into the suite of rooms at the Biltmore occupied by the popular screen actor and champion Liberty Loan boomer, Mr. Douglas Fairbanks. The sound of a lilting tune, whistled right merrily, came from the handsomely appointed sitting room at the end of the hall. Every one crowded to the door. The sight which met the gaze was one that might have been anticipated from the well known devotion of the movie star to the most strenuous forms of physical exercise.

Clad in a gray checked business suit, soft collar and dark blue tie, Doug stood on one foot in the centre of an imported rug nonchalantly swinging an elderly Japanese valet, Indian club fashion, about his head with one hand. His grasp upon the dark-skinned servant's ankle was gently reassuring, and he smiled pleasantly at the son of Nippon every time the bald spot on the man's head brushed against the ceiling.

"Mr. Fairbanks at his morning exercise," announced his press representative.

"Howdy, folks?" called out the athletic star, as he tossed the valet over from his right to his left hand and reversed his motion through space. "Sit down and make yourselves at home. I'll have this almond-eyed servitor pass the cigars as soon as I'm done with him. How long have we been at it, Sakio?"

The whirling Japanese consulted his wrist watch, and answered gravely:

"Forty-seven minutes, most honorable Mr. Fairbanks."

"Good!—only an hour and thirteen minutes more." And resuming his cheery whistle, the great exponent of pep and the active life accelerated the tempo of his muscular symphony and sent the human dumbbell circling through the atmosphere in even more intricate and bewildering curves.

"Does Mr. Fairbanks always employ Japanese valets?" asked a lady reviewer.

"Always," explained the truthful Mr. Zeidman. "Sakio was top-mount with a troup of acrobats in Tokio for over twenty years. No other training would stand the strain."

Interesting—if True.

There is one fact connected with the scene just described that will not meet the approval of a portion of the Fairbanks admirers—it never happened. No one will deny that it would have been interesting, if true. And it would not have been surprising if any Fairbanks fan had anticipated such a method of calisthenics, judging from many of the star's feats before the camera. Truth also obliges the prosaic statement that the number of scribes at the interview was limited to one. Also that Douglas Fairbanks was interrupted in a business discussion with his brother, John Fairbanks, and that the actor sat quietly in a chair throughout the interview and talked soberly of the serious side of the screen.

Like all persons who have any real understanding of the art of the silent stage the man whose reputation has been built up by his ability to do "stunts" believes that the moving picture has a marvelous future, but that it has progressed but a short way toward ultimate classification of form and perfection in producing its several modes of activity. Whether the news reel as a rival to the daily press, the educational feature or screen fiction in its different forms eventually will take the lead he does not pretend to say, but he is very positive that all three will make great strides forward during the years to come.

To the question, "What producer has shown the most originality and freedom from the conventions of the stage?" came this unconventional answer:

"Charlie Chaplin."

Pausing to note the effect of his reply and to smile the famous Fairbanks smile, the champion of the creator of "Shoulder Arms" proceeded to state the reasons for his belief:

"I consider Charlie Chaplin to be far in advance of every other producer of the moving picture. He is so sure in his effects, so clean cut and drives so straight at the point to be made! Now that he is his own producer and relies solely on his own inventive powers and skill, he is giving the screen a series of comedies that are thought out and executed with an originality and grasp of the artistic that put him in a class by himself. The article by him in one of the November magazines shows the thought and care he gives to everything he does, and what serious business making people laugh really is."

The Interviewer's Views.

"Chaplin's method of acting recalls, I think, that of the American comedian, John Sleeper Clarke, whose professional career was confined almost exclusively to London and the English stage. Chaplin never saw him act; the American died about thirty years ago. But Clarke, who was famous as Bob Acres, Dr. Pangloss, and in a line of similar parts, made his points by the same thorough mental preparation and strict attention to artistic concentration that is used by the screen actor. And now about your own affairs, Mr. Fairbanks. How is 'Arizona' progressing?"

"All right, as far as we've gone. You know, I stopped work on it to come East and help on the Fourth Liberty Loan and make some propaganda pictures for the Government. One of the things that Uncle Sam is preparing for his soldiers is emotional training. To that end pictures are being made that will keep before the boys who are doing the fighting the ideals for which they are asked to risk their lives. I am at work on a picture now that will have a powerful appeal to their emotions. It is symbolical, and several historical characters are introduced. There is a scene in the trenches, and the figure of Christ appears as the men go over the top."

Remaking "Arizona."

"Do you find remaking a picture a difficult task?"

"It is certainly not an easy one, the way we are doing it. 'Arizona' was a fine stage play, of course, but the first screen version stuck too close to the original form. We are trying to profit by the wider scope of the screen, and tell the story in a new way. I met Augustus Thomas the other day, and he wanted to know how we were getting on with his drama."

"What did you tell him?"

The reply was accompanied with the Fairbanks smile:

"Fine!—you won't recognize it when we've finished."

"Do you think that remaking old successes will become a recognized branch of screen production?"

"Yes. But the work must be done by the men who are striving all the time to find a newer and better way of creating the photoplay."

In Good Company.

Personal Representative Zeidman came in from the next room with a bundle of photographs in his hand, and passed them around for inspection, with the remark:

"Mr. Fairbanks has been getting into good company, hasn't he?"

The picture was taken on the roof of the Biltmore, and shows a group consisting of John D. Rockefeller, Jr.; Dr. John R. Mott, of the Y. M. C. A.; Commander Evangeline Booth, of the Salvation Army; Mortimer Schiff, and Douglas Fairbanks. All but the moving picture actor are leaders of different branches of the United War Workers' Campaign, and Doug has pledged himself to raise $25,000,000 as his share of a $170,500,000 drive.

Which is doing his bit, and a few pennies over.

Sherry Landing on Broadway.

The William L. Sherry Service has been well represented on Broadway, New York, during the past week. At the Strand Theatre the bulk of the program was drawn from the Sherry Service. This comprised, as a short subject, one of the Burlingham Travel Pictures, and, as a feature subject, one of the G. M. Anderson ("Broncho Billy") pictures entitled "Son-of-a-Gun." At the Broadway Theatre the feature picture has been "Marriage," one of the Frank A. Keeney productions featuring Catherine Calvert. All of the Keeney productions are released through the Sherry Service. The other productions on the Sherry program are the Harold J. Binney Productions, featuring Vangie Valentine, and De Luxe Pictures, Inc., featuring Doris Kenyon, sponsored by Theodore C. Deitrich.

To Issue "America's Answer."

The announcement is made by the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, that the wave of influenza has now sufficiently subsided to make it practically certain there will be no further delay in the general release of "America's Answer," the second official war picture, and that exhibitors throughout the country will now be able to promise their patrons an early showing of this big war film.

Binney Is Convalescent.

Harold J. Binney, the producer, is recovering from a very serious attack of Spanish influenza, which was complicated by double pneumonia. Mr. Binney has been ill for the past three weeks and is still in the call of his physicians and nurses. He has passed all danger and is rapidly recovering and will resume operations on his production of "Velvet and Rags" in a week or so.

Veteran William Shea Is Dead

WILLIAM SHEA died suddenly on Tuesday morning, November 5, at his home, 349 Lafayette avenue, Brooklyn. He is survived by two sisters, three nephews and three nieces. The funeral was held at 9 o'clock Saturday morning at St. Patrick's Roman Catholic Church, and interment was made at Holy Cross Cemetery. Many friends in the profession attended the obsequies.

William Shea, better known to his familiars at "Bill," was one of the veterans among picture players. He made his first appearance before the camera some thirteen years ago with the Vitagraph Company, and was one of that company's oldest players. His recollections of the early days were full of humorous incidents that were the kernel of many interesting stories of the beginnings of screen drama. He was the leading comedian of the Vitagraph Company, and as such was a strong favorite with motion picture fans throughout the world.

Before going into pictures, Mr. Shea was a legitimate actor of wide experience, appearing in company with such artists as Edwin Booth, Joe Jefferson, Lawrence Barrett, Maggie Mitchell, Clara Morris, the elder Salvini, J. K. Emmett and with many notable traveling combinations of his time.

By reason of a delightful disposition, Bill Shea made many friends among his associates, and his sudden death will be widely and genuinely mourned.

Stop Work on Big Theatre.

A Government order, just transmitted to the city authorities by the War Industries Board, instantly halts all work on theatres in the building where structural stages have not been passed. Only in case of those which are virtually completed, requiring only material for finishing, will an exception be made. In such instances permits must be secured from the mayor's Committee on National Defense before the necessary material may be purchased and hauled to the building site. But one important structure in progress of construction in New York will be halted.

This is the B. S. Moss house, which is going up on Broadway at 181st street. Inasmuch as this building has not progressed to the stage where it may be said that it has entered its finishing phase, work will be abruptly halted.

"Willie" Now a Lieutenant Recovering from Wounds

MEMBERS of the film industry who know William J. Moore, of the former 69th Regiment—and who doesn't know "Willie"—who since the days of 1910 has been actively identified with the motion picture business, having been employed successively by the Atlas, Exclusive Supply, All-Star, Itala, Harry Raver and Paramount companies, read with interest the account in the April 6 issue of the Moving Picture World of his having received the French Cross of War for bravery under heavy bombardment. They will now be pleased to hear that he has recently been commissioned a second lieutenant and is continuing to make an enviable record with our fighting forces in France.

This information was contained in a letter just received by Harry Raver from Lieutenant Moore, and which Mr. Raver has kindly permitted us to publish for the benefit of our readers:

Octoher 7, 1918.

My Dear Mr. Raver:

At the present time I am sitting up in bed in a hase hospital recovering very swiftly from a machine gun bullet wound received in the recent Verdun drive. The piece of lead through its course penetrated my right lung which at first gave me considerable trouble, cutting off my breathing a great deal. However, I am pleased to inform you that I am coming along very nicely, many thanks to the splendid treatment and care which I am receiving at the hospital. They sure are wonderful folks, Mr. Raver; nothing is too much for them to do for you. Just like a mother, and I can assure you it is more than appreciated. The folks back home haven't the slightest conception of the great work these doctors and nurses are doing for our boys in the base hospitals.

If you were only present at the starting of the hombardment that paved the way for us I know you would have been able to get a wonderful story out of the effects, for it seemed as if the skies had opened up and hegun to spit forth fire. The most spectacular scene I ever witnessed, and am quite confident that if put into scenario form it would he the biggest bread-winner of the age. As you no doubt know, it was the greatest attack of the entire war. The excitement certainly thrilled our lads, placing the greatest confidence in them. They were sure on edge waiting for the "zero hour" to arrive. Assuring you that when the time did arrive they were all on the go, and as you have no doubt read, made a great success, rounding up hundreds of prisoners, guns, ammunition and material on their way to Berlin. In general, Mr. Raver, the Germans are poor fighters; when you corner them you very quickly hear the familiar "Kamerad" shout for mercy.

The second day out finished my episode when we ran into some strong machine gun resistance and artillery fire just as we were taking our second village. However, our tanks came to the aid and it wasn't long before we silenced them and went through the village.

I have been commissioned since July 9 and am getting along real fine with my new outfit, the Ohio boys. Before going into the drive took an examination for promotion to a first lieutenantcy, which I expect is back at the company by this time. It takes quite a little while for the business to go through the military channels.

When the twenty-fifth of this month arrives it will be a year since I left the States. During that time I have traveled the best part of France, which I have enjoyed very much, for the scenery, old fortresses, castles and chateaus are certainly picturesque. Yes, Mr. Raver, I can parle vous francais since I have been "over here." They are surely hospitahle to our chaps, a mighty fine race. You will most likely be very busy so I will cease firing, and if you have a few spare minutes drop me a line, I will be pleased to hear from you. With best wishes to all, I am, sincerely yours, WILLIE.

ADVISORY BOARD FOR FILMS DIVISION

Director Hart Calls to His Aid Many of the Country's Prominent Motion Picture Showmen

THE organization of an exhibitors' advisory board, to co-operate with the Division of Films, Committee on Public Information, is an assured fact. Acceptances of appointment to the board by Director Charles S. Hart comes from all parts of the United States.

The purpose of the exhibitors' advisory board, as outlined by Director Hart, is to take up matters in which the exhibitors and the Division of Films are mutually interested and work out a system of distribution that will be to the interest of all.

"Since entering the work," says Director Hart in his letter to the exhibitors, "it has been my feeling that the exhibitor is the most important element in the film industry, and, as such, should have a voice in all questions of policy and taxation which arise relative to the industry. From time to time, problems arise which are essentially exhibitors' problems, and in forming this advisory board it was also my purpose to get the advice and assistance of the leading exhibitors—particularly in the matter of adjusting the distribution of official pictures through the Division of Films."

Those whose acceptances have been received are: C. D. Cooley, Tampa, Fla.; Louis H. Frank, Chicago; Willard C. Patterson, Atlanta; Ernest H. Horstmann, Boston; Alfred S. Black, Rockland, Me.; Mike Shea, Buffalo; Peter J. Schaefer, Chicago; Charles Weigel, Cincinnati; Henry H. Lustig, Cleveland; E. M. Mandelbaum, Cleveland; E. H. Hulsey, Dallas; Harry Nolan, Denver; Charles H. Seaman, Grand Rapids; Frank Rembusch, Shelbyville, Ind.; F. L. Newman, Kansas City; Glenn Harper, Los Angeles; George Tally, Los Angeles; Charles H. Branham, Minneapolis; Theo L. Hayes, St. Paul; Josiah Pearce, New Orleans; E. B. Richards, New Orleans; S. L. Rothapfel, New York City; H. R. Thomas, Omaha; Lawrence D. Beggs, Philadelphia; Mike Comerford, Scranton, Pa.; John D. Keppelman, Reading, Pa.; Harry Davis, Davis Theatre, Pittsburgh; Jean H. Roth, San Francisco; Sidney Grauman, Los Angeles; Charles E. Pettijohn, New York City; Alfred T. Tanzet, Milwaukee; Sydney S. Cohen, New York City; J. Von Herberg, Seattle; H. B. Varner, Lexington, N. C.; Harry M. Crandall, Washington, D. C.; Jake Wells, Richmond, Va.; G. C. Gildersleeve, Kingston, N. Y.; George J. Schade, Sandusky, Ohio; C. E. Geoghegan, Chase City, Va.; S. Barrett McCormick, Indianapolis; Henry F. Haring, Brooklyn; Thomas Saxe, Minneapolis; A. L. Stalling, Salt Lake City; John E. Weinig, Cincinnati; John Manheimer, New York City; Joseph Grossman, Cleveland; Thomas Saxe, Milwaukee; Samuel I. Berman, Brooklyn; Charles S. O'Kelly, New York City; William Reaver, St. Louis; Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; Thomas Furniss, Duluth.

British Naval Photographs.

An exhibition of British Naval photographs in colors, under the direction of the Photographic Division, British Bureau of Information, opened at the Anderson Galleries, New York, November 6. The net proceeds will be for the benefit of Navy Auxiliary No. 205, American Red Cross. These pictures are not related to the movies, in any way, but are enlarged photographs which depict every phase of naval warfare, the collection forming a valuable record of a British fleet.

One hundred and eighty subjects are shown. A selection of titles will indicate the interesting nature of the collection. "The End of a U-Boat;" "An Airship Escorts a Convoy," "Ships Which Both Fight and Fish," "Death Beneath the Waters," "A Rush to the Rescue," "Help at Hand," "The Damaged Mole at Zeebrugge," "At the Bottom of the Sea," "The Tell-Tale Patch of Oil," and "The Pirate's Work."

The exhibition comes direct from the Prince's Galleries, London, where it was attended by over a quarter of a million people in a few weeks.

Association's Directors to Hold Important Session

THE regular quarterly meeting of the board of directors of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry will be held at the rooms of the Association, 806 Times Building, at 11 o'clock, Thursday morning, November 14.

Numerous important matters are on the calendar for discussion and action at this meeting. It is expected the Washington situation will be carefully gone over in every detail, especially the recent action of the Senate Finance Committee in amending the War Revenue Tax bill.

Another important matter that is to come up for action is the organization of the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. At the convention of the American Exhibitors' Association in Chicago it was decided the two national exhibitor organizations should merge into one body to be called the Exhibitors' Branch of the National Association. Since the Chicago meeting nothing has been done pending the arrival of Peter J. Schaefer, the president of the merged organization, in New York.

It is also probable the board will appoint a delegation of its members to attend the annual meeting and convention of the United States Chamber of Commerce, of which the association is a member, to be held at Atlantic City, December 4, 5 and 6. This is a very important convention, as the question of world trade after the war will be discussed in all its details. The part the motion picture will play in the reconstruction period after the war is naturally very large, and it is expected the delegation from the association will take an active part in the deliberations of the convention.

Another subject that will be brought up for discussion will be the question of inaugurating a campaign for Sunday opening of motion picture theatres throughout the United States. Preliminary details for a campaign of this description are now in the course of preparation, and it merely requires the action of the board of directors to put them into effect.

This will be one of the most important meetings of the board that has been held in considerable time, and the attendance of every member is urgently requested.

Winnipeg Exchange Faces Drastic Fire Legislation

MOVING picture men of Winnipeg, Manitoba, were having plenty of excitement during the health vacation imposed by the local authorities through the action of the Winnipeg Fire, Water and Light Committee in devising drastic legislation governing the operation of a film exchange.

At a meeting of the committee, the official attention of the body was brought to the subject by Fire Chief J. E. Buchanan, who claimed that a number of local film exchanges were fire traps, and that they were housed in unsuitable premises. A by-law was drawn up with the following principal provisions:

All buildings hereafter used for the storage, keeping or handling of inflammable nitro-cellulose motion picture films shall be only one story high.

All films, except those in actual use, must be stored in fireproof safes or vaults which must be approved.

Films, except reels undergoing examination or repair in exchanges, must be kept in substantial individual containers with tight fitting covers.

The Winnipeg fire chief and building inspector must examine every film exchange at least once every two months.

Examination and repair of films must be done in a room having outside ventilation and separated from the balance of the building with tight partitions of inflamable material and with fire doors.

Reels containing films under examination or in process of rewinding must be enclosed in magazines or approved metal containers.

Lighting arrangements are to be restricted to incandescent electric bulbs with vapor-proof globes.

One fire bucket filled with sand is to be provided for every 500 feet of floor space or fraction thereof.

Smoking is to be prohibited in every room containing films.

"We must get film exchanges out of dangerous buildings," declared Fire Chief Buchanan, in discussing the measure with the committee. The draft of the by-law was sent on to the city's legal department, after which it will be reconsidered by the committee and finally recommended to the city council. It may be ready for the city council by November 11.

In the meantime the managers of Winnipeg film exchanges threaten to close up shop permanently and to withdraw from the Winnipeg field.

Set Release Date for U. S. A. Series.

The World Film Corporation, which is to distribute the new "U. S. A. Series," which will comprise twelve two-reel pictures, to be produced by the Division of Films of the Committee on Public Information, has notified its exchanges that the first picture, "When Your Soldier's Hit," which visualizes the work of the field hospitals in a new and interesting way, will not be released until December 23. The original date for the first release was December 9, but delays, largely caused by the prevalence of the influenza and the necessary rearrangement of bookings, have made it advisable to delay the first public showings. The other pictures of the series will follow regularly, two each month.

An Opened Letter to One Film Magnate Who Tried
To Double in Celluloid

LAST night in a foolish moment I attended the California Theatre and enjoyed the music and the Pathe News very much, and then there suddenly flashed before my eyes and also the eyes of the vast multitude a supposed scenic of the Yosemite Valley with Marion H. Kohn and Jack and Jennie played by two mules.

To say that I was surprised at first, disappointed at second and disgusted at third and out at home goes without saying. You had on your Los Angeles clothes while you were supposed to be showing comedy with your hat and umbrella, unbeknown to yourself your trousers were displaying real comedy by crawling up your limbs and bestowing upon an unsuspecting public Phoenix silk hosiery at 75 cents per pair, Boston garters, non-silw, at 25 cents per pair, and fuzz enough upon your shafts to make you resemble a Newfoundland dog.

I knew that you were not a Tom Mix and that you were sore and getting sorer from riding that you were not used to. I also knew that the other two asses were also sore from the loads that they were carrying.

Your comedy with a frying pan at the camp was perfect because it was natural and showed that you had never tried to cook before, and when you appeared in your birthday clotehs the next morning the sub-title said that you were to take a bath in the pool that was running close by your tent. I knew that was a lie, because it was only Tuesday.

The next time I saw you you were sitting on the edge of Glacier Point and you dropped your umbrella off to fall to the floor of the valley, which was three thousand feet below, and then you threw your hat off and it fell also to the floor of the valley three thousand feet below. And then we all waited for you to follow the hat and the umbrella, but we were disappointed.

The next time I saw you you were going down the valley endeavoring to catch the two mules, who had decided like the rest of us that they had had enough and were going back to their homes. It must have been a hot day, because about every five hundred feet you took off some garment until finally you were almost naked, and then as the sweat began to pour from your body and run down your legs I knew dam well that you had not had a bath, because sweat left long streaks between the dirt which they traversed.

Mr. Roth is my friend, but I shall ask him what you have on him that he would be so mean to his public by running it. Also I shall try and ascertain whether he paid for it or you paid for it. Then I shall curse him for presenting me with an annual pass to his house and not announcing in the lobby what I am to see before I pay my 3-cent war tax to be annoyed by Fromag de Brie.

The Work of Two Very Fly Poets.

JIM FOLAND, Kansas City manager of General Film, was one of those who received the bit of "flu" verse flung off by Ned Pedigo of the Highland Theatre, Guthrie, Okla., which went as follows:

If a flea that flew
Got a fly to flee,
Could the flea that flew
Get the "flu" to flee?

Jim is some fluent penman himself, so he flicked this back at Ned in a flippant flight:

The flea did flee
And the fly did fly,
And the fly and the flea
Got the "flu" to fly.

Which will be without a flaw when the "flu" has flown.

Every Knock is a Boost—Sometimes.

BETTY BLYTHE went to see herself in "The King of Diamonds" at a theatre recently. Two young girls sat directly back of her. Apparently they didn't like Betty's character, for hardly had she appeared on the screen than they began to knock. They kept their hammers going continually throughout the first four reels and when the fifth was about half over one of them remarked:

"Gee, I hope she dies or gets killed."

Then Betty turned around, gave the pair one of her very best "make you feel small" looks. They recognized her and—then Betty smiled.

Famous Disrobers of the Stage Scorn
Audience of Cameraman and Director

MAURICE TOURNEUR'S much liked production, "Woman," calls for an extended reproduction of the Garden of Eden, with Adam and Eve in their original negligee of days when the coal problem was a thing ages away. Mr. Tourneur comments on his search for an ideal Eve in a manner thus:

"At first thought," he says, "it would seem to be an easy matter to find an Eve in New York, with its many beautiful choristers, art models and so on. But the reverse proved to be true much to our genuine surprise. The beauties of the Follies, the Winter Garden and the numerous midnight roof shows were invited to visit the studio and consider the part. They came, considered and departed.

"I soon discovered that an odd angle of psychology entered into the matter. The beauties were quite willing to appear in decollete behind the footlights, but the intimacy of the studio was another matter. The idea of appearing behind the footlights dates back to antiquity; the stage lady in semi-dress or almost none at all is an accepted item in our modern life. But to pose as Eve in the studio, within the bright glow of the Cooper-Hewitts, although only in the presence of my cameraman and myself, made even some of the stage beauties famous for their stage negligee actually blush."

Just a Snack of Brain Food

AS YOU probably don't, but should know," pencils Fritz von Tidden, "one of my whims—and we must gratify our whims—is adding volumes to a library sadly and regularly depleted by unconscientious borrowers.

"While looking for such books to fill in the gaps, as 'Iron Bound Ed, the Elevator Boy, or from the Bottom to the Top'; 'The Lonesome Liver, Now That Two Meats Is Barred,' by Paul Henckle; 'Have Another Lump? or The Rash Waiter,' by Hoobert Herver; 'The Origin of the Species,' by Darwin; 'The Genealogy of Morals,' by Nietzche, and 'The Law of Psychic Phenomena,' by Prof. Whosis—I say, while looking for books I came across a volume by Hugh Walpole, who is quite a famous lad, called 'The Gods and Mr. Perrin.'

"Can this be THE Perrin? He of Goldwyn?

"If so what does Senor Goldfish or Don Fred Warren think of his shinnying up the Olympian heights and his didoes there?

"You might ask him what Gods he was chummy with—Bacchus? Aphrodite? Neptune? Venus? (Oh, surely not Venus!) Thor? or Louis Sherwin?

World Pictures Announces List of December Issues

WORLD PICTURES has a notable galaxy of stars to present to the public in its releases scheduled for December. Louise Huff, Carlyle Blackwell, Evelyn Greeley, Lewis S. Stone, Barbara Castleton, Madge Evans and June Elvidge —all established stars—head the list of those appearing in World Pictures during the coming month.

Carlyle Blackwell and Evelyn Greeley in a story of love and redemption on the east side of New York come first on the list of the month's releases. Their picture bears the title of "Hitting the Trail," and it will be released on December 2. It is along the lines of comedy-drama. It was directed by Dell Henderson and written by Roy Somerville, with continuity by Harry O. Hoyt. Prominent in the cast are Muriel Ostriche, George MacQuarrie, Edward Elkas and others.

Second on the month's program comes Lewis S. Stone, who achieved such a hit in his other World Picture, "Inside the Lines." Mr. Stone's new picture is a different sort of a Western play and bears the title of "The Man of Bronze." Supporting Mr. Stone in this production is Marguerite Clayton. The picture is released December 9. The story was written by Karl K. Coolidge. The picture was directed by David M. Hartford.

June Elvidge in "The Zero Hour" comes on December 16. This is said to be one of the most unusual stories ever filmed and added interest is given to its presentation by the fact that it was penned by Paul West shortly before this famous writer met his death in the Seine River in Paris. Supporting Miss Elvidge is Frank Mayo and a superior company. Hamilton Smith and Harry O. Hoyt wrote the continuity. It was directed by Travers Vale.

The unanimous verdict of all those who have seen "The Love Net," the picture in which Madge Evans stars, and which will be released on December 23, is that it is a fitting successor to her great success, "The Little Volunteer," which firmly established her as one of the leading screen stars. The story of "The Love Net" is replete with human emotion and should appeal to all ages. Jack Drumier is featured with Madge in this production. The story was written by Bertha A. Backus, continuity by Clara S. Beranger, and the direction is by Tefft Johnson. Kate Lester, W. T. Carleton, Nora Cecil and Charles Alcott are in the cast.

Last on the month's program is "The Sea Waif," starring Louise Huff with John Bowers as leading man. This picture will be released on December 30. The story was written by Lieut. Howard Irving Young of the American Expeditionary Force, during his rest periods while serving his country in France. The continuity is by Hamilton Smith and Harry O. Hoyt. Frank Reicher directed the picture.

Rainbow Reaches Fifth Release.

With a new subject every other week, the Rainbow Comedies, made at the United States Motion Picture Corporation's studios in Wilkes-Barre, have now reached their fifth release as a General Film offering. The current Rainbow picture is "The Camouflaged Baby," and the favorites of this series, Lillian Vera and Eddie Boulden, are in the leading roles.

Production of Rainbow Comedies is well ahead of schedule, since the next November subject and the first December subject are ready and only await the date of release.

Reports to General Film Company indicate that the sparkling nature of the Rainbow single-reelers already distributed makes them acceptable to exhibitors. The titles are "Nearly a Slacker," "Some Judge," "My Lady's Slipper" and "How She Hated Men."

Fox Productions Saved Situation for Showmen

DURING the no-release period, reports show, the William Fox Big Timely Pictures and the Productions extraordinary have proved life-savers to those exhibitors unable to get pictures of an importance worthy of their patronage. The Big Timely Pictures available for exhibitors during the no-release period are "The Prussian Cur," R. A. Walsh's great play, which has proved one of the most successful box-office attractions of the season; "Why America Will Win," the stirring photobiography of General Pershing, and "Queen of the Sea," which, starring Annette Kellerman, has scored a sensational success all over the country.

Many theatres also have been able to tide themselves over the no-release period by showing "Cleopatra," "Les Miserables" or "A Daughter of the Gods." This last named production, starring Annette Kellerman, has enabled numerous exhibitors to capitalize the public interest created by the other Kellerman picture, "Queen of the Sea." A large number of theatres which showed "Queen of the Sea" found that by showing "A Daughter af the Gods" soon after they were able to attract all those who for any reason had been unable to see "Queen of the Sea."

During the no-release period, reports to the Fox offices show, exhibitors have found themselves facing this difficulty: They have been unable to get the regular releases of big pictures, while at the same time only the very best pictures made could persuade their patrons to brave the influanza dangers that lay in crowds. "The Prussian Cur," "Why America Will Win" and "Queen of the Sea" apparently were known to the public all over the country, bacause wherever exhibitors booked these pictures during the influenza days they played to capacity houses.

Unwarlike Views of France.

Incidental to D. W. Griffith's new photoplay, "The Greatest Thing in Life," are some wonderfully beautiful pictures of France and French life. Much of this picture was filmed on the other side when Mr. Griffith went to the front line trenches by special permission of the British and French war offices. Most of the battle scenes are real and were taken during actual engagements with great belching howitzers and field pieces.

Among the most interesting of the "real pictures" in the play are the bits of quiet French life—as calm and serene and peaceful as though war had never been invented. Some of these scenes are more like beau iful paintings than photographs. There is one scene looking down the historic River Marne.

Twenty-four Sheet Issued by Pathe for "Infatuation."

Brunet Praises Artistry of Mercanton in "Infatuation"

PAUL BRUNET, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., feels confident that Louis Mercanton, who directed the special feature, "Infatuation," starring Gaby Deslys, has reached a rare height of artistic achievement in presenting this picture, produced by the Eclipse Film Company, of which he is the director-in-chief.

"Mr. Mercanton's experience with both stage and screen productions and his personal and artistic equipment," says Mr. Brunet, "are all used to fine advantage in this production, which combines the deft esthetic and emotional touches of the French with the finest of modern American direction, for Mr. Mercanton's experience embraces both sides of the Atlantic. His screen work is favorably known to American exhibitors and audiences through 'Her Triumph,' featuring Gaby Deslys, and 'Mothers of France,' interpreted by Sarah Bernhardt.

"It is well to remember that Mr. Mercanton was one of the first recruits from the theatre to the motion picture, years ago, when he persuaded Madame Bernhardt to appear on the screen in 'Queen Elizabeth.' He had been the stage director of the great French artist in France and served in the same capacity for Sir Herbert Beerbohm Tree at His Majesty's Theatre, London. He is a pioneer in big feature productions, backed by an exhaustive and complete knowledge of stage technique."

The advertising material includes posters, one sheet, two three sheets, six and twenty-four sheet; portrait slide in colors, two two-column scene cuts, line cuts, ad sheet, two one-column portrait cuts, Gaby Deslys, and one two-column cut of the star; sets of twelve black and white photographs of star and scenes, 22x28 sepia of star, lobby display in sepia, three styles of large hand-colored portraits for lobby use.

The campaign book of "Infatuation" will have a beautiful cover design in three colors, the portrait of Gaby Deslys in the twenty-four sheet being reproduced.

William Farnum Hero In Automobile Wreck

Many times in his photoplays William Farnum has been called upon to perform great feats of strength. In "Les Miserables," as Jean Valjean, he lifted a carriage from the body of an old man. Again he raised a huge stone. In "Riders of the Purple Sage," which he filmed from the novel by Zane Grey, the famous William Fox star pushes a gigantic boulder over the edge of the cliff. In each case the task was so difficult that only a man of Mr. Farnum's great strength could do it.

Last week Mr. Farnum again was called upon to exert his strength—but this time it was in real life, with no cameras around. While coming from a location at Fort Schuyler, N. Y., where some scenes were to be filmed for Mr. Farnum's latest production, an automobile containing seven men was overturned while taking a sharp curve, burying its occupants beneath it.

Mr. Farnum, who was following in another car, reached the spot a moment later and ran to the rescue of the men pinned beneath the machine. He put his shoulder to the wrecked car and with great effort slowly lifted it, enabling some of the men to wriggle out to safety. By this time Director Frank Lloyd and Cameraman Billy Foster had arrived, and adding their strength to that of Mr. Farnum, soon had the machine righted.

Cinema to Release Film of Captain Bairnsfather

ANNOUNCING its acquisition of the American rights to the motion picture adaptation of Captain Bruce Bairnsfather's celebrated play, "The Better 'Ole," the Cinema Distributing Corporation, through President Paul H. Cromelin, says that Bairnsfather and his creation, Old Bill, the character upon which the play is based, are two names to be conjured with in the United States. President Cromelin feels that Bruce Bairnsfather needs no introduction to American exhibitors, and that his great work as the devisor of a war figure that has actually made the whole world laugh is best told by Major George Haven Putnam, head of the famous American publishing firm, who knows Bairnsfather intimately and gives the following interesting facts about him: "Captain Bairnsfather has had long practical experience in the fighting line. He has been in the service from the beginning of the war, and for a large part of that time has been actively engaged at the front. The early breaks in his service in the field and in the trenches were caused by the necessity of retiring to hospital for the healing of wounds.

Captain Bruce Bairnsfather.

"The young Scotsman began his drawings merely for the amusement of his comrades in the shacks or in the trenches. The first sketches were made on the rough boards of a more or less ruined hut, or on the rocks which were dislodged in the digging of the trenches. These sketches were later transcribed for the amusement of the home folks to whom the artist was writing, and were passed from hand to hand in the home circles.

The stage adaptation of "The Better 'Ole" continues to attract New York crowds and high admissions to the Greenwich Theatre. The Cinema Distributing Corporation expect to have a releasing announcement regarding the film ready shortly. Captain Bairnsfather was in New York conferring with Cinema Distributing Corporation officials on plans for national publicizing of the picture. But he is now back in London, where a troublesome ear must be treated by his physicians. It can be said about the publicity campaign, however, that its slogan will be that dawning peace and "The Better 'Ole" bid the people to forget the dispiriting side of the war from which the world is emerging.

Fox Films Greatly Please South American Audiences

THE completeness of the invasion of South America by William Fox films was illustrated this week in a letter received by the Fox Film Corporation from Pablo Bianchi, manager of La Teatral Diamantina, in the little town of Diamante, in "the province between the rivers," in Argentina.

The Teatral Diamantina seats 600 persons and was first opened in May, 1916. "Since about one year ago," says Mr. Bianchi, "we are showing your notable films, and to-day we are making money and shall continue exhibiting the Fox Films always. We get your films from the branch office of the Fox Film Corporation in Rosario. I should like very much to present my best wishes to the great Farnum, the incomparable George Walsh, the beautiful Virginia Pearson, Gladys Brockwell and to all the actors and actresses of the Famous Fox Films.

"As soon as we advertise the name of one of the above actors our house is sold out, because there are many admirers of your films here who congratulate us for having brought your brand here. A short while ago you released in Buenos Aires 'The Honor System,' which is a Fox Standard Picture, and we hope to be able to show same soon here to your admirers."

Arbuckle Burlesque Confreres.

Roscoe "Fatty" Arbuckle's newest comedy, "The Sheriff," which will be released at an early date under the Paramount trade mark, is said to offer much in entertainment for those who like to laugh. Unlike most of Arbuckle's recent pictures, this comedy is straight burlesque, the comedian emulating in a most ludicrous manner Douglas Fairbanks and William S. Hart in a series of astonishing stunts. He climbs a lofty steeple with the characteristic agility of Fairbanks and duplicates the two-gun exploits of Hart.

Expert Praises Settings for Fox's "Ali Baba and Thieves"

THE day when a motion picture director could assemble a few heavy pieces of furniture, hang some draperies around the walls and let the sub-titles explain that it was the gymnasium of King Solomon, or the scenario department of the William Shakespeare Super-Film Company, Inc., or the Count of Monte Cristo's garage, has vanished. Of course in the best regulated studios a set must be artistically correct, regardless of expense. But in addition the set, if used in a historical subject, also must be historically correct, down to the smallest detail.

A striking illustration of how producers have progressed in this phase of their work is given in a letter received by the Fox Film Corporation this week from Professor J. E. Delaroche, of Harvard University, who is probably the foremost authority in this country on Persian literature and Persian customs. Professor Delaroche's letter resulted from a visit he made late in the summer to the William Fox studios in Los Angeles, where he saw the new William Fox extravaganza "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" in the course of making. "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves" is an elaborate production, along unusual lines, of the famous story of the Arabian Nights, and is said to have settings of striking beauty and magnificence. Professor Delaroche's letter follows:

"I wish to thank you for an exceedingly interesting afternoon which I had as a result of a visit to your studio in Los Angeles. I was very fortunate in being your guest at the time you were producing 'Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves.' The scenery used in this motion picture was of peculiar interest to me, as I have been deeply interested all my life in Persian life and customs. I assure you that I was deeply impressed with the care and study that were very evident in the preparation of this scenery. Indeed, I must confess that I was not prepared to find such remarkable attention to detail and such fidelity in the reproduction of Persian living conditions, in the work of art that is so ephemeral as I fancy a motion picture production must necessarily be. Again permit me to thank you for an opporiunty to see this picture in its making. I assure you I look forward to its presentation in a theatre with the keenest interest."

When Professor Delaroche visited the William Fox studio the director immediately availed himself of the presence of so distinguished a Persian scholar and had the professor inspect all the sets that were to enter into the making of "Ali Baba and the Forty Thieves." The professor carefully looked over the many pieces of furniture, and, except for two or three minor anachronisms, which soon were corrected, found the settings perfect in their furnishings and their atmosphere.

Pathe Shows Air Men's Work.

The miracle of the air, one of the amazing prodigies brought about by the great world war, is shown in No. 12 of "The Far Flung Battle Line," released by Pathe the week of November 17. Here is described the armored dreadnoughts that speed over the water and rise like great birds into the sky. This collection of official pictures is called "British Flying Ships," and indicates how the training of naval air men, as shown in previous pictures, reaches perfection for the perilous and hazardous work.

The evolution of the seaplane is shown —all the different types discussed in the news from London are here seen in actual work: The Sopwith, the Sunbeam Short, the Sopwith Baby and the latest superseaplanes called "flying boats." In this number also there is a magnificent panoramic bird's eye view of the Bristol Channel and an English coast town.

Loew Books Lowry Film for 70 Days in New York

IRA M. LOWRY'S great patriotic screen spectacle, "For the Freedom of the East," a drama of the defeat and rout of the Hun in Siberia, featuring the Chinese star, Lady Tsen Mei, has been given seventy days' booking on the entire Marcus Loew metropolitan circuit, comprising New York City and nearby communities.

Officials of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, distributors of "For the Freedom of the East," regard this as a striking testimonial to the wide appeal of this subject. Few productions ever are rated by the Loew experts as strong enough to warrant such blanket booking. A contract for immediate playing dates was signed because, to quote the Loew bookers, "'For the Freedom of the East' is one of the best pictures ever made for the average American."

The production was booked at sight After the Spanish influenza shutdown had interrupted a record-breaking pre-release showing at the Stanley Theatre, Philadelphia, where thousands were turned away in the four days the subject was shown. During the month of no releases twenty Goldwyn offices throughout the United States have proved by bookings that this offering is to be one of the big money-makers of the Winter and Spring seasons. Goldwyn believes it is not too much to predict for it a success equal to that of "For the Freedom of the World," another Lowry production which has broken box-office records wherever shown.

"Common Cause" Will Be Released on Big Scale

FROM the offices of the Vitagraph Company comes the announcement that plans are maturing for the handling of "The Common Cause" on a big scale. The company has had made a fine variety of posters, including one twenty-four sheet, one six-sheet, two three-sheets, two one-sheets and a window card. In addition there will be available for exhibitors a special herald 5¾ inches wide by 8¾ inches long, six styles of star cuts, two slides, electros of newspaper ads, numerous scene cuts and special publicity campaign matter. The publicity and advertising helps will be up to the high standard set by the company.

"The Common Cause" should prove one of the big offerings of the year. It is described as "the war story with a laugh, a thrill and a throb," and its theme is such that the picture not only is one of great timeliness now, but it will endure even after hostilities have ceased.

In point of talent the production has behind it a combination richly endowed. Its producer, authors, stars and supporting cast are among the best.

Commodore Blackton has behind him a record of splendid work done while he was with Vitagraph, while the authors of the play—J. Hartley Manners and Major Ian Hay Beith—are recognized as among the leaders of the present day writers. Anthony Paul Kelly, who wrote the scenario, is a man with many screen successes to his credit.

Herbert Rawlinson and Sylvia Breamer, the two featured players, have both won wide followings among screen patrons, and in addition to them there appear in the main story of the picture Lawrence Grossmith, Louis Dean, Charles and Violet Blackton, children of Commodore Blackton; Huntley Gordon, Philip Van Lorn and Mlle. Marcel. Added lustre is given to the production by the appearance in the prologue and epilogue of such famous stage artists as Julia Arthur, Marjorie Rambeau, Irene Castle, Effie Shannon and Violet Heming.

England Likes "Inside the Lines."

Word from England carries the news that the World picture, "Inside the Lines," starring Lewis S. Stone, is repeating its phenomenal American success across the sea. All the notices given the picture by the reviewers in London and other large cities of England unite in a chorus of praise. "Inside the Lines" has been hailed as one of the really great pictures of the season. One reviewer said of this picture among other things: "The most crowded trade assembly of the season gave 'Inside the Lines' the ovation which it merited. It is seldom one sees a spy play so well played. It is a film of special interest. Unlike many plays of this description, sensational and impossible scenes are conspicuous by their absence." The picture has been given the highest kind of a rating by all the reviewers.

Two Nazimova Productions Are Ready for Release

TWO great Nazimova productions de luxe, super-features, prepared in seven acts each, will be ready for release when the motion picture theatres throughout the country resume operations. These are "Eye for Eye" and "'Ception Shoals," which present the celebrated Russian artist in totally different types of character. They will be presented by Richard A. Rowland and Maxwell Karger. Both productions have been directed by Albert Capellani.

"Eye for Eye" will be the first Nazimova production released. It bids fair to eclipse anything previously achieved by this star, not even excepting her successful "Revelation." "Eye for Eye" is a picturized version made by Mr. Capellani and June Mathis from the three-act drama "L'Occident," by the Belgian playwright, Henry Kistemaecker, and tells the story of Hassouna, a girl of the Arabian desert. The difference in the ideals of the Orient and the Occident are shown in "Eye for Eye." This vitally dramatic feature illustrates the law of the desert, "An eye for an eye and a tooth for a tooth," and in contradistinction to it the code of Captain de Cadiere, French gentleman and naval officer, who seeks to uphold honor and the flag of France.

In "'Ception Shoals" the scene is changed from the eastern to the western hemisphere, and its heroine, Eve, is as different as possible from Hassouna. "'Ception Shoals" was used by Mme. Nazimova on the speaking stage, and as picturized by June Mathis and Albert Capellani it promises to be even stronger than it was in play form. "'Ception Shoals" is a drama of the sea and the New England coast. It is elemental and irresistible in its appeal.

"'Ception Shoals" is a mighty drama of human souls, and the lessons it drives home are unforgettable. Charles Bryant plays Captain Blake, who awakens love in the heart of the unspoiled girl; Henry Harmon plays Job Coffin, the same part in which he appeared with the star in her stage production, and other roles are in capable hands. "'Ception Shoals" was originally written in play form by H. Austin Adams.

Big Reports from "Shoulder Arms."

With an extension by the Broadway Theatre, New York, of its original booking of one week to a three weeks' run on "Shoulder Arms," and increases by the big vaudeville houses of the B. F. Keith Circuit of from three days to a week on Chaplin's second million dollar comedy, the famous comedian's policy of "nothing if it is not his best," is proving its value in the unusual indorsement of the public and of exhibitors.

Reports on early runs of "Shoulder Arms" from practically all of the exchanges of the first National Exhibitors' Circuit indicate that it will play to a total of more days than any other Chaplin production.

Assassination of Count Tisza Hooked Up With "Kultur"

THE assassination last week of Count Tisza, formerly Premier of Austria-Hungary, credited with having been one of the men who brought on the great war, is another startling example of the close adherence to facts which prevails in "Kultur," the play which Gladys Brockwell made as as expose of Austro-Germany intrigue prior to hostilities.

Scenes in "Kultur," which lay bare all the secret plotting carried on by Germany and Austria to bring on the war, show Tisza as one of the arch conspirators in leading Serbia to commit some act which the Teuton powers could construe as a cause for war. This part of the story of "Kultur," revealing Tisza as one of the ringleaders of the plot, was corroborated in greatest detail in the Vienna despatches which told of the assassination of the former premier in the streets by a Hungarian soldier. These despatches reviewed his activities at the beginning of the war and showed once more the close fidelity to little known facts which is seen in "Kultur."

In calling attention to this the Fox Film Corporation points out that with the conclusion of peace the question of who really started the war will come to the fore, for it is generally conceded that the Allies will visit personal punishment upon the Teuton leaders who plunged the world into more than four years of bloodshed. There is bound to be tremendous public interest in this phase of the peace discussions, and "Kultur" is believed by the William Fox organization to afford a splendid opportunity for exhibitors to capitalize this public interest.

Eighteen Metro Subjects Are Ready for Exhibitors

EIGHTEEN productions distributed by Metro, comprising twelve of the All-Star Series features and six Screen Classics, Inc., super-features, will be ready for exhibitors throughout the country at the close of the four weeks' cessation of the industry's activities decreed by the National Association. President Richard A. Rowland, of Metro, is authority for the statement that never before has the corporation been in such an advantageous position to supply the needs of motion picture theatres and their patrons.

November 18 has been decided upon as the date on which the "first run" pictures will be resumed throughout the United States. Metro's first contribution under this arrangement will be a comedy-drama starring Emmy Wehlen entitled "His Bonded Wife."

"Wilson or the Kaiser?" the great Screen Classics super-feature written by Maxwell Karger and directed by Charles Miller from A. S. LeVino's scenario, will be offered to exhibitors at an early date.

Hale Hamilton's initial Metro starring vehicle, "Five Thousand an Hour," will be released November 25. Hale Hamilton is by no means a new name to patrons or exhibitors.

December 2 is the date announced for May Allison's next feature, "The Testing of Mildred Vane." Charles T. Dazey, author of "In Old Kentucky," wrote the story.

"Hitting the High Spots," which will be released December 9, is the title chosen for Bert Lytell's next feature, written by himself and adapted by George D. Baker. It was directed by Charles Swickard.

Next in the list of All-Star Series releases is "Sylvia on a Spree," an Emmy Wehlen feature, which will be seen for the first time December 16. It is probably the most naive and unusual feature photodrama in which Miss Wehlen has appeared.

"The Poor Rich Man" will be released December 23. Francis X. Bushman and Beverly Bayne are the co-stars in this attractive feature, which was written by Elaine Sterne, scenarioized by A. S. Le Vino, and directed by Charles J. Brabin.

The final regular release of the year will be "Her Inspiration," starring May Allison, December 30 being the date set for it. This five-act feature was written by George D. Baker and Thomas J. Geraghty, and directed by Robert Thornby.

Many other productions besides those for which the release dates have been announced will be ready and waiting for distribution as soon as the theatres are in a position to handle them.

General Film to Release Subject Starring Edna Mayo

THOMAS BEDDING is now general sales manager of the American Feature Film Corporation, with offices at Suite 616, Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York City. "Hearts of Love," produced by the company, is going on the General Film program for the United States and Canada. The foreign sales are handled by Mr. Bedding.

Edna Mayo is the star of the production. Miss Mayo was identified with a long string of Essanay successes and has received cordial congratulations on her reappearance in the limelight of popular favoritism. Gladden James, Frederick Truesdell and Fred Hearn are also in the cast of the picture, which was directed by J. Charles Hayden.

"Hearts of Love" was made in the South. Many months and large sums of money were devoted to its preparation. It is essentially American in theme and sentiment.

"In recent times," declares Mr. Bedding, "there has been a tendency to overlook the fact that purely American drama is popular with audiences all over the world. We have been so obsessed by the war that the screen has necessarily reflected our ideas on this matter and American productions have become influenced by the conditions so created. 'Hearts of Love' is like the beginning of a new epoch in picture production. It is all American; it deals only with the United States, its history, drama and problems.

"It is a complete picture and a complete production. There are no clippings from weeklies in it; no fakes; no dupes. Everything about it is thorough, genuine, artistic, authentic.

"Force of circumstances, due to the recent shutdown, make 'Hearts of Love' among the few great independent releases available to foreign buyers.

"It is one of the best pictures I have handled."

Topics of the Day Moves Offices.

A. E. Siegel, head of the Timely Films, Topics of the Day Company, announces removal of their executive offices from the Times Bldg., to suite 716 Longacre Bldg. It is said that a tremendous publicity campaign in 400 newspapers throughout the United States and Canada was to be launched a week or ten days ago, but the epidemic and the printers' strike, which was raging in New York recently, have held up this campaign temporarily.

Rex Beach Exercises Author's New Prerogative

THE individuality of Rex Beach is as marked in his photoplay productions as it is in his novels. The reason for this is not difficult to find. It is because the popular American author does not merely arrange to have picturized one of his works and then leave it to somebody else.

Rex Beach, on the contrary, supervises every detail of his cinema productions. His vigor and broadness of outlook are as apparent on the screen as on the printed page. All this is especially true in regard to his newest play, "To Fat to Fight," with Frank McIntyre as the featured player.

When it was arranged to produce this unpublished story of Mr. Beach's at the Goldwyn studios, the author set about to do precisely what he had done to make "Laughing Bill Hyde" a success. He resolved to give his best efforts to the undertaking.

Beginning with the scenario, which he wrote himself, the entire production came under Mr. Beach's watchful eyes. Hundreds of applicants were interviewed before Mr. Beach assembled his cast. It is well known that he demands more of his players than many of them can give in pictorial fidelity to their prototypes in the book. Accordingly, when an actor is personally chosen by Mr. Beach, it means that he is the living counterpart of the character created in the novel or short story.

All the locations were chosen first by an experienced man at the Goldwyn studios, later to be passed on by Mr. Beach. Use of the magnificent estate of Colonel Delamar at Glen Cove, L. I., was arranged for by the distinguished author, and through Thomas G. Patten, postmaster of the City of New York, the aviation field at Belmont Park was requisitioned by Rex Beach for important scenes in "Too Fat to Fight."

When the production was completed, Mr. Beach's work was not by any means at an end. There were a score of titles to devise, some of them to bring out a point developed in the action; others to reflect the spirit of the patriotic comedy, and some to give an amusing twist to the dialogue supposed to have been spoken by the players. All this Rex Beach delights in doing, feeling that the silent drama is affording him actual expression of equal importance to the written word. He is practically the only author who enjoys this advantage.

Select to Release Two Subjects in November

SELECT announces two new pictures for the month of November. These will be "The Road Through the Dark," the Maud Radford Warren story of the war in which Clara Kimball Young is starred, and Alice Brady in a typical New York story, "Her Great Chance." While there is no definite date for either attraction, the Clara Kimball Young picture will probably follow "Her Great Chance."

"The Road Through the Dark" is a story based on the early period of the war. Kathryn Stuart wrote the scenario, and it was directed by Edmund Mortimer. The cast includes Jack Holt, leading man; Henry Woodward, Eleanor Fair, Bobby Connolly, John Steppling, Lillian Leighton, Elmo Lincoln, Edward M. Kimball and Eugenie Besserer.

"Her Great Chance" is the story from Fannie Hurst's novel, "Golden Fleece." Charles Maigne wrote the scenario, and also directed the picture. Miss Brady has the part of Lola, the shop girl. Others in the cast are David Powell, leading man; Nellie Park-Spaulding, Gloria Goodwin, Gertrude Barry, Hardy Kirkland, Ormi Hawley, C. A. DeLima and Jefferson De Angelis. The photography is by Leo Rossi.

Jazz Makes Committee on Public Morals Dance

THAT music hath charms even for a committee on morals bent on saving its townspeople from tangoing themselves to perdition is comically brought out in Madge Kennedy's latest Goldwyn picture, "A Perfect Lady," from the Rose Stahl stage success by Channing Pollock and Rennold Wolf, to be released December 8.

Madge Kennedy is Lucille Le Jambon, prima donna and premiere danseuse of the Merry Models Burlesquers, whose opening performance in Sycamore the constable has stopped at the command of Deacon John Griswold and other members of the town's purity league. Resolved to stay in Sycamore, Lucille quits her stage career and opens an ice cream cabaret, where she teaches the tango and other modern steps.

Again she meets with opposition from the self-constituted purifiers. They warn her that "she may be tarred and feathered, and rode out o' town on a rail." Lucille defies them, and the committee calls on her to give her final warning. Music and dancing ceases with the arrival of the goody-goodies. They state their case to Lucille in no uncertain terms, but Lucille, firm in the belief that her dancing lessons are harming no one, orders the orchestra to play.

For a time few of the couples brave the committee's anger, but the ragtime tune the orchestra is playing proves too alluring, and soon the floor is as crowded as when the committee made its appearance. With the dancing resumed in full blast, do the committee members fume and fuss? Not much! They begin to sway to the lilt of the dance-inspiring tune, and the deacon is shocked beyond words when two of his committee forget their mission and join the others on the dancing floor.

Ten-Dollar Bills on Fifth Avenue During Great Jubilee

HUNDREDS of thousands of persons went victory mad and money mad in the premature peace celebration in New York on Thursday, November 7. Then again they went "plumb loco" Monday, November 11, over the real thing.

As the crowds of wildly excited patriots swarmed up and down Fifth avenue clanging tin pans, ringing bells, blowing horns, yelling, cheering and exchanging embraces there was a sudden commotion near Forty-second street that made the rest of the celebration look like a country village after nine o'clock at night.

The police reserves were called into action; everybody rushed to the spot, and all hands scraped the avenue to get a share of the ten-dollar bills that were raining down from the heavens. One smartly dressed young man shouted: "John D. Rockefeller is giving away money—J. P. Morgan took a wad of greenbacks and let 'em loose, fall as fall can—everybody this way! A chance of a lifetime to get rich quick!"

But alas! When the excited persons bucked each other in picking up the greenbacks, a quick analysis revealed that the "ten spots" were not real United States money, but imitation money certificates which Goldwyn's service department had issued to exploit Mae Marsh in her dramatic success, "Money Mad," the last picture released in Goldwyn's first year.

The money certificates, at the time they were issued, met with the enthusiastic indorsement of motion picture exhibitors everywhere. The title and subject of Miss Marsh's production necessitated advertising of an appropriate and compelling type, and the imitation money was conceived for the purpose of directing attention to "Money Mad."

An enterprising office boy was the direct cause of the rain of "ten-dollar bills." The Goldwyn New York exchange, on the eleventh floor of a building on Fifth avenue, carried a large stock of the money certificates. Grabbing a bundle of the "money," he rushed to the window and let 'em fly. The sensation he created was one of the big features of the two greatest celebrations New York has ever known.

Rothacker Films Montana "Bad" Spots.

In "Bad Men and Good Scenery," the second in the series of "out-door" pictures produced by the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company and released through Mutual, is shown the famous "Jackson Hole," the former rendezvous of the gunmen and outlaws of the bad lands of Montana. When the trail of the sheriff and his posse became too hot for "Alkali Ike" and "Maverick Pete" in the "good old days,' the bad men found a refuge in "Jackson Hole," into which few, even of the fearless Western arbiters of justice, ventured in pursuit of their quarry. Back in the "Old Hole" they defied law and order.

Goldwyn Buys "Sis Hopkins" as Vehicle for Miss Normand

THE next picture which Mabel Normand will make for Goldwyn will be a screen version of "Sis Hopkins." Goldwyn acquired the moving picture rights to this famous Hoosier play from Rose Melville, who wrote and created and played the part for nearly a quarter of a century. No play on the American stage has a more curious history than "Sis Hopkins."

To the present generation of New York theatregoers it is known only by hearsay. In the provinces it was for twenty years as well known and popular as "Rip Van Winkle," "Way Down East" or "In Old Kentucky." In fact "Sis Hopkins" is of its kind a classic. Four people have made fortunes out of it and retired.

Rose Melville and her husband, Frank Minzey, toured America with it year after year for nearly twenty-five years, always making the same sure profit, and usually playing to about the same audiences. In both large and small towns all over the country many people would go to see Rose Melville in "Sis Hopkins" regularly once a year. Out of the proceeds the Minzeys have left the stage, and acquired a large estate on the shores of Lake George.

"Sis Hopkins" began as a specialty, which Miss Melville did in between the acts of "Zeb," when playing with the Baldwin-Melville stock company in the early nineties. Born and brought up in Indiana, she had made quite a study of Hoosier types. Her amusing caricature of the gawky farmer's daughter made such an effect that she was engaged to do it in "Little Christopher" at the Garden Theatre in 1894, and subsequently in "The Prodigal Father" and "By the Sad Sea Waves." Later on Miss Melville went into vaudeville with "Sis," and was so successful there that she was persuaded to elaborate the sketch into a three-act play.

The characterization and the dialogue were entirely Miss Melville's. As a matter of fact, "Sis" is one of those parts that grew rather than being written, because Miss Melville never ceased building and elaborating the part. It will be an ideal character for Mabel Normand in pictures. The character and situations offer ideal opportunities for her to build comic scenes on.

No Sectionalism in World Pictures.

In the selection of stories, plays and other kinds of dramatic material for photo plays the cardinal principal that guides the scenario department of World Pictures is to chose only such vehicles as are free from the taint of sectionalism. A story might offer splendid opportunities for picturization, in fact make a feature that would add lustre to any program and yet have in it certain elements that would arouse race religious or party feeling in some section or other of this country that would injure not alone the producer but also embarrass the exhibitor. A picture that will make several hundred thousand dollars in the North and excite public riots in the South is not the kind of a picture for a program company to produce.

A program company must have a policy entirely different from the sporadic productions of the independent producer as regards the subject matter of its pictures, World Pictures believes. One company lives by reason of the established value of his output while the other in order to make a profit must produce sensational photoplays to secure quick sales regardless of sectionalism.

X-Ray Reveals Bullets In Tom Mix's Leg

AN X-RAY examination having revealed a number of shot which had been in his leg nineteen years, Tom Mix, the William Fox cowboy star, now hopes to achieve the greatest ambition of his life—to be one of Uncle Sam's aviators. Several weeks ago Mix, unable longer to stand the strain of being out of the biggest fight in history, went to an aviation recruiting station in Los Angeles and offered himself for service.

The examining surgeons found him in perfect condition except for one thing. Something seemed to be wrong with one of the principal muscles of his right leg, and although Mix was suffering no pain or trouble he walked with an almost imperceptible limp. When the doctor questioned him about this Mix at first was at a loss for an explanation. Then he remembered that during one of the battles with the insurrectoes in the Philippines, where he served in the American Army under General Pershing, then a lieutenant, he was shot in the right leg by a Filipino with a shotgun and the bullets never had been removed.

The surgeon shook his head and told Mix that the bullets would bar him from the air service. Disconsolate, Mix went back to making pictures in the William Fox studio. The other day, however, an accident occurred which, while painful in itself, put Mix in a way of realizing his hopes.

Mix was engaged in a scene at the Fox studio and was mounted on his horse, Blue. The horse, in taking a high jump, stumbled and the rider was thrown heavily to the ground. When he attempted to walk he found he was barely able to hobble. But he thought he had merely twisted his leg and tried to forget about it. The next day, however, the pain was worse, and the day following it was so severe Mix went to a doctor.

The surgeon made an X-ray examination and found all the trouble was caused by the bullets which had been twisted and collected into a ball that presses against a nerve center. Mix promptly ordered an operation. This proved to be a simple affair and the bullets were quickly removed.

Blackton Release Date Still Unset.

In answer to many inquiries concerning the release of "Safe for Democracy," the J. Stuart Blackton special featured at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, the week of November 3, Commodore Blackton announces that no distribution plan or release date has yet been determined. He is now considering propositions for the exploitation of this "work-or-fight" picture, and expects to make formal announcement regarding it within a few days.

Mitchell Lewis is starred in this production, and the representative cast includes Ruby De Remer, Ida Darling, Helen Ferguson, John C. Wade, John [illegible] worthy, Sidney D'Albrook, Gus [illegible], Eugene Strong and Aubrey Beattie.

Unique Advertising Stunt.

The manager of the Codman Square Theatre, Dorchester, Mass., is to be complimented for a most unique advertising folder stunt. The stunt in this case is a little strip of paper folded in a small square, with the words, "Keep this under cover—don't show it" on the outside. Naturally this piques curiosity, and upon unfolding the strip there is shown small cuts of each of Select's stars, with an apropriate box of wording at the right of each picture. The manager of the Codman Square is continually on the lookout for new ideas, and this is what makes a theatre popular. Good pictures and new ideas are the best winning combination on earth.

Among Independent Producers

Conducted by C. S. SEWELL

Select to Handle "The Woman the Germans Shot"

SETTING at rest the various conflicting rumors in film circles during the past week, Plunkett & Carroll now make definite announcement regarding the distribution of their feature production, "The Woman the Germans Shot," starring Julia Arthur in the role of Nurse Edith Cavell. The booking rights to this picture have been secured by Select Pictures Corporation for the United States.

Since the presentation of this story at the Strand Theatre during week of October 27 to November 2, which is based upon the life of the martyred British Red Cross nurse, the producers announce that they have received an unusually large number of applications both for purchase and for exclusive booking privileges, and there is every indication that this production will prove an unqualified box office success. It was enthusiastically received by the large audiences attending the Strand during the showing.

Messrs. Plunkett & Carroll report that they have compiled in their office a record of no less than one hundred and seventy-three press criticisms and magazine articles praising the production, both from the standpoint of historic value, technical excellence and drawing power. In addition, the producers have been the recipients of a large volume of correspondence from historical societies and war work organizations, expressing their thanks for the remarkable picturization of that epoch of the world's history which stands out as one of the greatest acts of martyrdom.

Anthony Paul Kelly is responsible for the scenario, which is founded upon authentic data regarding the life of Edith Cavell, while John G. Adolfi is the director of the production.

E. K. Lincoln Starred in Special S-L Pictures

ARTHUR H. SAWYER and Herbert Lubin, of the S. L. Pictures organization, announce that E. K. Lincoln will be starred in a series of special productions under the personal direction of Ralph Ince; also that Conrad Milliken, until recently vice-president of Petrova Picture Company, has become associated with this organization.

In speaking of his new alliance, Mr. Milliken stated: "I feel certain of the success of S.-L. pictures not only because of the diverse abilities of Messrs. Sawyer, Lubin and Ralph Ince, but because of the fact that the whole organization has been started in the right way, without hurry or worry. There is just one object in view, that of making truly great pictures—'specials' in every sense of the word. There will be no fixed program of releases—no rushing of work to meet fixed releasing date schedules. Every picture will have to be as nearly perfect as human skill and thought can make it. The fact that Ralph Ince is to personally direct for S.-L. pictures is in itself a guarantee of successful production."

Mr. Lincoln is well known for his long and successful career in motion pictures, his latest work being in the Perret production, "Lafayette, We Come," in which he was starred. He has also been starred in many other productions. Work on the first S.-L. picture in which Mr. Lincoln will appear under Mr. Ince's direction commenced this week, and, while the subject has not been divulged, it is said to be a theme of international importance which will be of first interest to exhibitors everywhere. In this connection, it will be recalled that Mr. Lincoln appeared in pictures under Mr. Ince's direction several years ago with the Vitagraph.

Director Ince, in speaking of his connection with the new organization, says: "I have come to the point toward which I have aimed consistently through years of endeavor. No conditions could be better than those under which I now go on with my new work, and every ounce of effort I can command will be brought to bear on the new productions.

Several Sales Reported on Victoria Cross Film

WITH the announcement that Sol L. Lesser has bought "Five Nights" for All Star Feature Distributors, Inc., for California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands, comes news of other sales of the screen version of Victoria Cross' popular novel; the southern peninsula of Michigan went to Baynes Features, Inc., of Detroit, where two weeks solid bookings were reported by W. A. Baynes before he had received his first print. The Silee Film Exchange has acquired "Five Nights" for Chicago with promises of giving Al. Harstn, who is keeping several prints busy in New York, a close run for record bookings; while a deal has just been closed with F. M. Sanford, whereby he gets the picture for Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas.

Perret Moves to Candler Building.

Perret Productions, Inc., whose first film, "Lafayette, We Come!" was presented last week at the Strand Theatre, have just moved their offices to larger quarters in the Candler Building, 220 West Forty-second street, New York. However, the publicity and sales offices remain as heretofore in the Brokaw Building, with Adolphe Osso in charge. In addition to "Lafayette, We Come!" Mr. Osso is also handling the forthcoming Perret production, "Stars of Glory."

Blaikie Dick to Distribute "Unconditional Surrender"

A. BLAIKIE DICK announces for immediate distribution "Unconditional Surrender," a five-reel picture that is sensational in its timeliness and in its picturization of the great events of today in the theatre of war. The producer states that the picture visualizes the desire that is in the hearts of all humanity, not only that the Hohenzollern surrender unconditionally, but that he be adequately punished. The drama also deals with the popular conception that Emperor William is the reincarnation of the anti-Christ. The picture shows the evolution of the present enemy of mankind from the time that the serpent raised his head in the garden of Eden to the present day, when the Kaiser is summoned before the court of world justice and the wrongs of the world are avenged.

While the picture covers the whole history of mankind, the early scenes are passed over rapidly and the gripping events of the present day are fully set forth. In the making of this picture special scenes from each of the Allied countries have been used, and the intelligence bureaus of the varied allied countries cooperated to reproduce faithfully the activities of their nations which lead to the Kaiser's downfall.

Particulars as to the distribution of this picture can be obtained from A. Blaikie Dick, of the McClure organization, at 25 West Forty-fourth street, New York.

Pioneer Opens Office in Cleveland.

After a thorough canvass of the situation, Nathan Hirsh, president of the Pioneer Film Corporation, decided to open an office in Ohio territory and handle his own booking for "Wives of Men," consequently he visited Cleveland, and as a result a branch office of the Pioneer Film Corporation has been opened in the Sloan Building under the supervision of Mr. Burnside and Miss M. A. Smith. All bookings for Ohio and Kentucky will be handled through this office.

Trade Press Praises Latest Tourneur Film

NO PRODUCTION of this screen year has received more unanimous and enthusiastic trade press comment than Maurice Tourneur's epic film, "Woman." Apparently without a dissenting voice, the trade publications pronounced this picture, aside from being Mr. Tourneur's masterpiece, to be one of the most artistic productions of the year.

Hiller & Wilk, Inc., the selling agents for "Woman" and other forthcoming Tourneur productions, announce that they will make a statement within the next few days regarding the releasing channel for this picture, and they promise that it will be as striking as the releasing of the first independent Tourneur production, "Sporting Life," which, after the New York premiere, was immediately secured by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which in handling this production broke their precedents, as it was the first time that they ever purchased an independent production.

SAN FRANCISCO THEATRES SPRUCING UP

Will Be in First Class Condition Regarding Both Sanitation and Comfort When Reopening Time Comes

By T. A. Church. 1507 North Street, Berke ley, Cal.

ALMOST every moving picture theatre in San Francisco is being renovated and will be in perfect shape from the standpoint of sanitation and comfort when the reopening date is at hand. One house has a sign in its lobby reading: "This House is Being Washed, Ironed and Fumigated," and others are calling attention in various ways to the improvements that are being made.

In addition to being thoroughly renovated, some extensive structural changes are being made at the Tivoli Theatre, the stage being altered to care for the large orchestra that will be installed. William Casey has resigned as manager and will be succeeded by E. M. Asher, now in charge of the film exchange business of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit.

Considerable work is under way at the California Theatre, but this is largely confined to a thorough cleaning of all hangings and carpets and the construction of a studio in the basement for the use of the orchestra leader. Advantage is being taken of the enforced period of closing to prepare new stage sets and some novel effects are promised.

The Imperial Theatre has received attention at the hands of decorators, and is now in the best shape since the opening of the house. Manager J. A. Partington has some interesting programs to offer in his inimitable way when the entertainment of the public is again in order.

The Strand Theatre, of which Leo Weinberger is manager, is being given a thorough cleaning, a larger screen is being installed and the public will be given a musical surprise when the house is reopened.

The Portola Theatre was closed for several weeks during the summer for the purpose of receiving a thorough overhauling, and but little work has been necessary to place it in perfect condition. Many changes were made a short time ago at the Rialto Theatre, but further improvements are being made by the new owners, Sheehan & Mann.

The Silver Palace Theatre on Market street near Third, one of the oldest moving picture houses in the city, and one of the few adhering to the old admission price of five cents, is also being made spick and span under the direction of Nathan Herzog, and the Unique and Odeon Theatres in the same block are also receiving attention.

Popular Exhibitors Pass Away.

A. A. Berard, who has conducted the Modesto Theatre at Modesto, Cal., for the past two years, passed away during the week from pneumonia induced by influenza. Mr. Berard was one of the most popular exhibitors in Central California, generous to a fault, with business methods that placed him far above the average in his calling. The funeral services were conducted under the auspices of the Masons, and the film trade was represented by Louis Reichert and G. C. Blumenthal, of the Metro Pictures Corporation. The Modesto Theatre will be conducted in the future under the direction of Harry L. Kelling.

Charles Rogers, manager of the Peerless Theatre on Third street, San Francisco, is also a victim of influenza, his splendid physique proving no bar to the dread disease.

Smileage Man Visits City.

Leonard Meyberg, who is in charge of a plan announced a short time ago by the War Department Commission on Training Camp Activities, whereby moving picture houses will turn over to the commission a certain percentage of their gross receipts one day each month to be used in the purchase of smileage books for soldiers, has arrived from Los Angeles to interest local theatre owners. It was announced that twenty-four moving picture houses were to co-operate in the southern city.

Enlist as Yeamanettes.

Dixie V. Boulware, cashier, and Nellie Boulware, stenographer for the Metro Pictures Corporation since the opening of the San Francisco exchange, have enlisted as yeomanettes in the United States Navy and will leave for Washington, D. C., at an early date.

Haussler Takes Regent Theatre.

W. F. Haussler, who for several years conducted a moving picture house on Fillmore street, near Sutter, has taken over the Regent Theatre and will reopen this as soon as the ban on amusements is raised.

New Fox Manager Soon.

Paul Mooney, who has been made district manager for the Fox Film Corporation, is expected here at an early date to succeed George Mann, who has resigned to become associated with Howard J. Sheehan in the management of the Rialto Theatre.

Preparing for Hodkinson Change.

W. O. Edmonds, manager of Hodkinson Service in this territory, is preparing to move to the Pathe quarters on Market street, Hodkinson releases to be made through the Pathe exchange after November 25.

The Tom North Loving Cup Awarded to the San Francisco Pathe Exchange for the Greatest Increase in Business in the Western Division.

Top row, left to right: Frank Duffy, assistant to the general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc.; H. J. Henrioullc, Miss E. Leon, P. M. Roberts, Gilbert Moyle, A. M. Bowles, Lee Fook, G. Bird, R. Green, M. A. Hulling, and E. O. Child, manager of the San Francisco branch.

Installs "Picture Show" in Lobby.

WALTER ARMSTRONG, manager of the Strand, Portland, has installed in his lobby a free picture show under the name, "William Westinghouse's Moving Picture Show." He took a large cabinet, installed in it a big revolving wheel. On the wheel he placed stills of the picture with which he will reopen. A small peep hole allows one to look in, and a crank at the side revolves the wheel, bringing each successive picture in view. Every patron is his own operator. He had lots of trouble with the newsboys, who wanted to "see the wheels go 'round." It created interest and amusement.

Brief Items.

The Associated Press has reported the drowning of two film men in the sinking of the Steamer Dumura, when she caught fire off Guam. I am pleased to be able to correct it in one instance. W. W. Kohfelt, who was steward, was not on the steamer at the time of the accident, having left it at San Francisco. He returned to Portland and re-engaged in the film game. He was formerly Pathe representative, but enlisted in the Merchant Marine. L. J. Samuelson, associated with Mr. Kohfelt and Pathe, enlisted at the same time. He stayed with the ship, and was lost.

Mr. Lederman, of the Universal Film Company, accompanied by his wife, has been making a tour of the company's offices, and is now in Portland. He reports that the Eastern cities have suffered far more than the Western ones from the epidemic, and that the Middle States have suffered the least.

Whittle Again with Variety.

THERE has recently been a complete reorganization of the Variety Pictures Corporation of Baltimore. J. L. Whittle has again associated himself with the Variety and will act as sales manager. Mr. Whittle returned from Atlantic City last week, at which place he had charge of the Anita Theatre from the last of July until the first of September. He has had a great deal of experience in the film business for the past ten years.

Milton Caplon, manager of the Clover Theatre, 414-16 East Baltimore street, one of the organizers of the Variety, has been made president of the company. J. Louis Rome, who formerly held that position, is now in the aviation corps. Mr. Caplon will attend to the business arrangements of the company.

Baltimore Personals.

M. (Mike) Siegel, well known throughout the Baltimore territory as a live wire film salesman, who is connected with the Baltimore Film Exchange, according to present indications will probably, in the near future, become a benedict. It is said that congratulations are being showered upon Monsieur Siegel, who has the reputation of being the champion "African Golf" player of the Baltimore territory.

Several weeks ago the stork visited the home of Simon Pelsweig, formerly a salesman for Universal, working out of the Baltimore Film Exchange office, and presented the family with a bouncing baby boy. Mr. Pelsweig has returned to Philadelphia, leaving the service of the Universal, and has become a salesman for Armour & Company.

Out-of-Town Items.

Jerry Cahill, manager of the Opera Houses in Centerville and Easton, Md., took a trip to Baltimore last week to look over the film situation and visited his friends along Film Row.

Cumberland, Md.—Peter C. Barnes, an attorney of this city, has received the appointment as motion picture inspector for Allegheny County from the Maryland Censor Board, of which Mrs. Marguerite E. Harrison is the secretary.

Hagerstown, Md.—Charles E. Thropp, who for some time managed Nixon's Victoria Theatre, 415 East Baltimore street, in Baltimore, and who prior to that time was associated with the Nixon-Nirdlinger interests in Philadelphia, is now said to have been appointed manager of the Academy Theatre, in this city, and may probably have charge of the Colonial and Maryland theatres. After he left the Victoria Theatre he managed the McHenry Theatre, Light near Cross street, Baltimore, for the Parkway Theatre Company, for some time.

Frostburg, Md.—Lawrence Hitchens, the well known and popular manager of the Frostburg Opera House, in this city, died during the week of October 28 at his home here. It is said he suffered an attack of influenza and died from the malady. His father will probably take over the management of the theatre.

Will Open to Service Men.

The New Theatre, 210 West Lexington street, will be thrown open to men in the United States service on Sundays hereafter between the hours of 3 and 5 o'clock in the afternoon, through the courtesy of L. A. DeHoff, the well known manager of this playhouse. A series of entertainments for the men have been planned and Mr. De Hoff is arranging a program of excellent moving pictures, including educational and historical subjects. The entertainments are being held under the auspices of the United Service Club, of Baltimore. The first one took place on Sunday, November 10.

MARCUS LOEW'S PALACE THEATRE OPENS

November 4 Marked Dedication of Washington City's Biggest Picture House—Managed by Lawrence Beatus

By Clarence L. Linz, 622 Riggs Building, Washington, D. C.

WASHINGTON.—The newest link in the Marcus Loew chain, the Palace Theatre, opened here November 4. This house, located on F street at Thirteenth, is the largest in the city, with a seating capacity of 3,000 persons. It will be devoted to high-grade pictures, although a large stage and dressing rooms and other arrangements make it possible to put on any sort of a show.

The theatre fronts on F street, where a large lobby, constructed in marble and travatine, is provided. The marble consists of a wainscoting about five feet in height and marble columns and pilasters the full height of the lobby. The columns have bronzed capitals and support a cornice where are located the lights, which are of the indirect type.

The theatre is decorated in a modified Adam style, with a number of plaster ornaments especially modeled and constructed for the house, and painted in soft colors ranging from gray to amber and gold. The main ceiling has a dome from which hangs a chandelier. The fixture, when lighted, shows a structure of delicate tracery, with star-like lights in the openings. Set in the proscenium arch and suspended from the center arch in the lobby are illuminated self-winding clocks. The entire lobby is so arranged in its relation to the rest of the house as to break the climb from orchestra to balcony.

A mezzanine promenade, paneled in mahogany and with mahogany columns, has been provided for the comfort of patrons. The furniture throughout is of brown mahogany, upholstered in red mohair, all in the Adam style, to harmonize with the architecture of the house. A smoking room for men and a rest room for women are located on the mezzanine promenade, the former furnished with large leather-covered chairs, and the latter in black and gold Chinese laquer. A large fireplace has been installed in the smoking room, over which is a mantle surmounted by a very rare specimen of Mandarin embroidery. The rest room has been finished with a Chinese wall paper of striking design. A feature of the promenade is the large open well of Mexican mahogany, which overlooks the lobby below.

The lighting, heating and ventilation, also, are features of the house. The lighting consists of a three-color system, showing through cover cornices and illuminated panels. It can be controlled so as to harmonize with the music of the large pipe organ and the symphony orchestra with which the house is provided. In addition, lights have been placed under alternate steps in the balcony, making it possible for patrons to find their seats even when the house is in total darkness.

The heating is of the hot-air type, carried into the orchestra through a number of cone heaters under the seats. The air is brought in from outdoors through a water curtain, which purifies it. It is then heated, distributed through the house, and exhausted through the roof by large fans. In other sections of the house, direct radiators have been provided for steam heat. The ventilation is treated in much the same manner.

The stage is decorated with a semi-circular colonnade, with a beautifully decorated dome above. This feature was designed and carried out in the same style as the rest of the house and forms an excellent background for the lighting effects which are used.

The house will be under the management of Lawrence Beatus, who for the past three years has been manager of Loew's Columbia Theatre. Through this connection he has become well known to Washington theatregoers who have long been aware of his desire to provide them with the best facilities for amusement.

Mr. Beatus was born in Memphis, Tenn., and received his first theatrical training there, being at one time connected with the Lyceum Theatre. He has been in the theatrical game for about fifteen years, and with the Loew interests since 1911, his first position with Marcus Loew being as treasurer of the Yorkville Theatre in New York. He has managed theatres since in New York, Toronto, Denver and Washington.

Cincinnati News Letter

LeVene Shows War Work Pictures.

ABOUT the only special exhibition of moving pictures held in Cincinnati for a month, on account of the ban on all gatherings, business or otherwise, declared by the health authorities, was that given at the Mutual Film offices on Seventh street recently by Manager LeVene for the benefit of 25 or so team chairmen of the Cincinnati War Chest organization. As it may be gathered, this meeting and exhibition was permitted only because of its connection with the work of the big drive. Manager LeVene showed films prepared for such purposes, and they will be seen all over Cincinnati during the drive, provided, of course, the theatres have been opened, as it is hoped they will be shortly. The pictures show what the Y. M. C. A., Red Cross and other relief organizations are doing abroad, thus giving direct proof of the service they perform.

Consolidation Plans Arouse Indignation.

The reported plans for the consolidation of the Alhambra and Lubin theatres by the Frankel interests aroused the indignation of the clothing man who occupies the stores between the two theatres, and who holds a twelve-year lease on the property. He declared that he has no intention of giving up his lease. None the less, in view of the facts already reported on the subject, there is room for belief that an effort is being made to secure the lease, eliminate the store and consolidate the two theatres named into one big house, of a size to compare favorably with any in Cincinnati.

Sweeney Succumbs to Influenza.

The epidemic of influenza, which has taken nearly 700 people from the city during the past month, claimed Eugene Sweeney, manager of the Erie Theatre, in Hyde Park, on November 2. Mr. Sweeney died at his home on Grandin Road of pneumonia growing out of an attack of influenza. He was 32 years of ago, and has been in charge of the theatre with considerable success for some time. A pathetic feature of the untimely death of the young man is that his wife, who was nursing him, also contracted pneumonia, and at this writing is in a serious condition. There is a little daughter in the family.

Doing War Chest Organization Publicity.

So successful was I. W. McMahan, the film and picture-show man, in "boosting" the operations of his team during the recent Liberty Loan drive, that he has been made publicity lieutenant for Team T of the War Chest organization, and he promptly got to work in that capacity. Mr. McMahan, who knows everybody, including the newspaper men, is fully aware of what is what in the matter of news, and is therefore an ideal man for the work of keeping his team to the forefront in the press.

ACTIVITIES OF KANSAS CITY FILM MEN

Goldwyn Installs a System Which Improves Its Service to Exhibitors—Josephson Buys the Elliott

By Kansas City News Service, 115 Railway Exchange, Kansas City, Mo.

Goldwyn Betters Service to Exhibitors.

THE Goldwyn office at Kansas City was one of the few where all the force was retained on full pay during the entire period of epidemic restrictions. Richard Robertson, manager, discovered, when the ban was lifted, that the work done during the "off period" was quite the most important that the force had ever accomplished. New systems were worked out to perfection.

Operated During Epidemic Period.

One theatre, so far as known now, operated throughout the epidemic period in the Kansas-Missouri territory. This was the DeGraw Theatre, at Brookfield, Mo. The town of Brookfield is one of the best of its size in the state, about 5,000 people. The epidemic does not seem to have touched this place, and no restrictions were imposed on gatherings of any kind. There were many other towns that suffered not at all from influenza, but all except Brookfield closed down theatres for at least three weeks.

Josephson Company Buys Elliott Theatre.

The Josephson Amusement Co., of Kansas City, a corporation recently organized, has bought the ground lease and building of the Elliott Theatre here, and will operate it. The K. C. Amusement Company, of which A. E. Elliott, formerly proprietor of this theatre, recently leased the Grand Theatre to the Klaw & Erlanger Company for ten years. The Elliott Theatre Building, a one-story structure (designed ultimately for eight stories), was opened under that name two months ago, having previously been operated as the Sapphire. The Josephson Amusement Company has as its president Frank Josephson, who a few months ago bought the Westgate Hotel at Kansas City. A son, A. Josephson, will manage the Elliott. It is the purpose to run high-class pictures. The theatre seats 500; admission, ten cents and war tax.

Keeps Tabs on Theatre Closings and Openings.

The Kansas City Vitagraph office established a card system for checking closing and opening dates of exhibitors with reference to epidemic restrictions. The system was put into effect when the ban first began to be imposed, and has proved its usefulness several times—becoming invaluable, as the territory is being released generally from restrictions. The cards used were blank, about the size of ordinary business cards. One was used for each exhibitor, his name, address, and the date of his closing being noted when his announcement to the latter effect reached the Vitagraph office. Cards were filed alphabetically. As an exhibitor notified the company of reopening, his card was put into a live file—if he closed again, the card was returned to the quiescent file. In this way the office knew what shows were running—and it can now check easily the exhibitors who have not reopened—or who have not sent notice to resume their service. Letters will be sent to exhibitors whose cards remain in the quiescent file after a majority of others have sent orders for picture service.

Kansas City Brevities.

G. I. Bradford, since January 1 traveling out of the George Kleine office at Atlanta, formerly with the same company at Kansas City, is again on Kansas City territory. He started out November 4, with the lifting of the ban on shows, for Pathe. He succeeds A. A. Bourg in Southern Kansas districts.

L. H. Chandler, Missouri traveler for Pathe, was sick ten days; but outside of that short vacation, he has been in the field, selling service. Herman Lerch, covering northern Kansas, kept busy on his field throughout the period and reported good business with contracts, dates being left open.

J. H. Hill, traveler for the Mutual office, Kansas City, is recovering from a brief illness. His brother, Dale P. Hill, World traveler, was a victim of the epidemic.

C. S. Edwards, Jr., manager of the George Kleine office at Kansas City, has moved to the suite of the General, in the Gloyd Building. The General's organization will handle the mechanical details of the Kleine work.

Theatre Notes.

Wichita, Kan.—The Wichita Theatre, built by the Peerless Theatre Company, is now being decorated and will soon be ready for business.

Wilson, Kan.—Mr. Mikulesky has remodeled the old picture theatre and put in a new front and is now operating the show.

Picher, Okla.—The Main Street Theatre Company, of Picher, purchased the Liberty Theatre from J. W. Wineland, according to J. B. Cotter, who, in connection with J. A. Daly and A. Besse, of Pittsburgh, will lease the theatre with a view of operating it as soon as the influenza ban is lifted. Messrs. Daly and Besse are principal stockholders in the Main Street Theate, while Mr. Cotter has been operating the Picher Theatre. The deal will have the effect of consolidation when the Liberty Theatre is reopened. It is not known what the future plans of Mr. Wineland are, but he owns theatres at Webb City, Mo., and Gardin.

Leon, Ia.—J. L. Adams and D. Earl Combs, of Chariton, have purchased the moving picture theatre of Will F. Lindsay.

Manitowoc, Wis.—Zallon G. Stebbins, owner and manager of the Crystal Theatre, died recently.

Hoisington, Kan.—R. H. McCloskey, formerly traveling out of Denver for General and Mutual, has organized a company for the operation of the Strand here. This will be Hoisington's second show.

Lynch Enterprises Takes Over the Garden.

The S. A. Lynch Enterprises, now operating the Empress at Kansas City, Mo., have secured the Garden Theatre, at Thirteenth and McGee streets, formerly owned and operated as a moving picture house by M. J. Flynn, William Flynn and Lee Richards. The Lynch organization has the Pantages eircuit, its Empress running vaudeville and pictures. Messrs. Flynn and Richards own the Wonderland and the Twelfth Street, moving picture houses. They are planning the erection of a new theatre, details of which may be announced after a visit of William Flynn to New York soon.

Dayton News Letter

By Paul J. Gray, Dayton Theatre Building, Dayton, Ohio.

Bert Fiala Not Present for Opening.

BERT FIALA, manager of the Alhambra Theatre, Dayton, and which is the leading suburban house here, was not able to be present at his house for the opening of the local theatres November 2. Bert has been confined at home for the past four days. Upon inquiry, it was proved that Mr. Fiala had not contracted the influenza, as was the report, but had been sick with neuralgia. Mr. Fiala hopes to be back on the job within a very few days.

Nann Assistant Manager of Strand.

George Nann, erstwhile assistant manager of the Apollo Theatre here, has transferred his allegience to a larger enterprise and is now assistant manager of the Strand Theatre here. Although young in years, Mr. Nann has had much experience in his line (not to forget the Alhambra and Dayton Theatres), and that he will make a success of his new activities is an assured fact.

Majestic Not to Be a Colored House.

When sold at auction in Dayton several weeks ago it was announced that the Majestic Theatre here had been disposed of to a company of colored capitalists and would be operated as a house for colored people. When the time came to put up the money, however, the negro lawyers who represented the purchasers, found that there was not enough obtainable. He was forced to step out of the race by this action, and George Haas, one of the former partners under whose regime the house was put in the hands of receivers, saw his chance and bought the bid of the colored interests, and thus the Majestic passed over to him. Mr. Haas is to open the Majestic within the next week as a first-class theatre, and will bend every effort toward making it one of Dayton's leading picture play houses.

Strand Stays Closed in Honor of Keith.

Because of the death of A. Paul Keith, president of the Keith interests, who operate the Strand Theatre here, this house did not open Satuday, November 2, until six o'clock. This was done by reason of the fact that Mr. Keiths' funeral took place before that time.

Campbell a Victim of Influenza.

A. T. CAMPBELL, for the last eight months Vitagraph salesman in Michigan, passed away at his home in Cincinnati Friday, November 2. He had been ill but a few days with influenza. Prior to joining Vitagraph Mr. Campbell operated the Strand Theatre in Escanaba and the Grand in Menominee.

Horowitz in Control of Foursquare.

Joseph Horowitz, former half-owner of the Foursquare Exchange, Detroit, has taken over the interest of his partner, George Backer, of New York, which gives him complete control. He will continue the business at the same location under the style of Joseph Horowitz Productions. Mr. Horowitz has had a most interesting career in Detroit, coming here eighteen months ago as salesman for Universal. To-day he owns an individual exchange.

New House at Petersburg.

Petersburg, Mich., will soon have a new photoplay house, to be known as the Averhill. Veronee & Mortimer are the proprietors. The place will seat about 450 and be modern in its construction and equipment.

Dawn Masterplay Changes Its Name.

Arthur S. Hyman announces that the name Dawn Masterplay Company is to be used no longer, and that hereafter he will conduct his business under the style of the Arthur S. Hyman Attractions, Owen Building, Detroit. Recently Mr. Hyman purchased "Wives of Men," with Florence Reed, and "The Million Dollar Mystery."

Detroit Dots.

If nothing intervenes the New DeLux Theatre, Percival and Parkview, Detroit will open November 28 at the latest. The New Regent, in Battle Creek, will surely open November 21, according to present plans and arrangements.

Ernest H. Forbes, manager of the Detroit office of the United Theatre Equipment Company, has completely changed things around, putting the offices toward the front and making a 100 per cent. improvement in the general appearance of the place.

H. A. Somerville, of the Drury Lane Theatre, Detroit, has given his house a new coat of paint. He says his new price of 15 cents at matinees and 20 cents at night is to stay, regardless of any additional tax the Government may impose.

EXCHANGE HEADS PLAN ORGANIZATION

Thirty-one Minneapolis Managers Meet and Discuss Means for Caring for Rush After Lifting of Ban

By William Edward Mulligan, Minneapolis Journal, Minneapolis, Minn.

MANAGERS of the thirty-one moving picture exchanges in Minneapolis met last week at the Film Exchange Building and made plans for a permanent organization in this city. They also discussed means of caring for the rush of business which is anticipated as the aftermath to the raising of the influenza ban. The primary object of the organization, which will be perfected at a later meeting, is, however, a general study of conditions and the merging of common interests looking to the betterment of the moving picture industry as a whole. A committee was appointed to arrange the details of organization, and will report at the next meeting. The members are E. S. Holmes, manager of the Greater Vitagraph Exchange; E. R. Pearson, First National Exchange manager, and M. C. Lestice, manager of the Triangle Film Corporation's local exchange. Although in many other cities in the United States film exchange managers have organized, this is the first step in that direction taken by members of the local colony.

St. Paul Has "Railroad Night."

"Railroad Night" was observed in St. Paul at the Auditorium on October 29, when an army of workers of the Great Northern and Northern Pacific Railroads attended the showing of "America's Answer." Unusually keen interest was shown by the audience in this picture, because of the fact that it reveals some of the extensive construction of railways in France by American engineers.

Sunday shows are now an accomplished fact in Boone, Ia. The town had its first Sunday movies recently, when, despite strong opposition, the mayor refused to stop the showing of "Pershing's Crusaders" at the Princess Theatre. Since then other moving picture theatres in Boone have opened Sundays.

Circus Serial Boomed.

A big campaign to book "The Lure of the Circus," Universal's latest serial starring Eddie Polo, was launched by the Minneapolis exchange's publicity department with the mailing of more than one thousand attractive thirty-two-page four-colored campaign and press books on the subject to exhibitors of the Northwest. Universal is sending out special advertising that will help the exhibitors put this serial over in record style. Special rates for posters, stock sheets and first episode paper have been made so that exhibitors can afford to "circus" their showings.

"Hearts of the World" to Resume.

T. B. McCormack, manager of the "Hearts of the World" company, which played at the Minneapolis Shubert until the advent of the influenza ban, expects to have at least an additional run of three weeks in Minneapolis after business is resumed. He will then take his company through this territory for an extended tour.

Universal Employe Weds.

Miss Anna Mjosing, of the Universal Film Exchange, was married to Sergeant John D. Zeppernick, of United States Air Service Mechanics' School, St. Paul, last week. Mrs. Zeppernick will, however, continue her work with the Universal contract department, as her husband expects to leave for France in the near future. Mrs. Zeppernick is the oldest employe in point of service at the Minneapolis exchange.

News Brevities.

Ira Mantzke, manager of the Minneapolis Mutual branch, has secured the services of A. A. Hixon, well known in Northwest film circles, who will act as head salesman for this territory.

M. H. Aygarn, formerly superintendent of schools at Akeley, Minn., has been appointed manager of the Minneapolis branch of the American Seating Company.

H. E. Lafferty, former auditor of the Minneapolis Mutual Exchange, has been appointed city manager of the credit department of the Pittsburgh Plate Glass Company.

David T. Hobson, of Litchfield, Minn., has purchased the Premier Theatre at Dassel, and will conduct it as a moving picture house.

Theodore L. Hays has disposed of the Grand Theatre at Crookston, Minn., to the Northern State Amusement Company, a new corporation.

The Grand Theatre, at Biwabik, Minn., recently damaged by fire, will be repaired and reopened in the near future.

A. Pomterio, of Bryant, S. D., has leased the Colonial Theatre at Tracy, Minn., from J. C. Filkins.

The Grand Theatre, at Grand Forks, N. D., recently destroyed by fire, will probably be rebuilt.

Amos Tweeden, proprietor of the Princess Theatre, at Fargo, N. D., is having the house remodeled.

Dr. A. J. Dix, of Aberdeen, S. D., has turned over his moving picture interests at Mitchell, S. D., to his partner, William Fraser, who took charge November 1.

THE correspondent of the Moving Picture World has received a letter from the Central Liberty Loan Committee, which conducted the recent campaign in Ohio, Kentucky and Western Pennsylvania, thanking the exhibitors and exchange men for their co-operation in distributing the loan moving pictures.

Greenbaum Made a Corporal.

Jack Greenbaum, former manager and one of the present owners of the Alhambra Theatre, Cleveland, was among those who were promoted at Camp Sherman last week. Greenbaum, a first-class private, was serving in the base hospital company when the influenza epidemic broke out. The boys of this company worked day and night, many of them contracting the disease. Eight died. Greenbaum was made a corporal.

Elmer Cox Killed.

Elmer Cox, well-known local moving picture operator, was electrocuted at the plant of the Hydraulic Prossed Steel Company while working there during the enforced closing of the theatres. He was on a crane when the juice was turned on by mistake by another worker. Cox formerly was a salesman in the employ of the United Theatre Equipment Corporation. He leaves a wife and two children.

McBroom Leaves for New York.

FRED K. McBROOM, receiver for the Washington Motion Picture Corporation, has left for New York to join Larry Trimble, director of the organization, with the idea of marketing "Fool's Gold," the picture produced by the company here. Mr. Trimble left for the East two weeks ago. Mr. McBroom expects to sell the picture at a figure which will pay off the debts of the company which, he expects, will lead to a reorganization.

Liberty and Clemmer to Raise Prices.

With the opening of the moving picture theatres of Spokane, at the close of the influenza epidemic, the Liberty and Clemmer theatres will increase prices to make the adult tickets 20 cents plus the war tax of two cents. Children will be charged 10 cents plus the war tax of one cent and box seats will be 35 cents plus the war tax of four cents. This will make the admission prices 11, 22 and 39 cents, as compared to 10, 20 and 35 cents which was previously charged.

Sam W. B. Cohn, of the Liberty, said he expected other picture houses and other Spokane theatres to follow suit and add the war tax to their present admission prices. "We are simply acting as collection agents for the Government," said Mr. Cohn.

HESITATE ON RAISING ADMISSION PRICES

Exhibitors in Eastern Part of Philadelphia Have Not Yet Agreed on Advancing Their Rates

By F. V. Armato, 144 North Salford street, Philadelphia, Pa.

ALBERT BROWN, of the Overbrook Theatre, and Charles Segall, of the Apollo and Fifty-sixth Street theatres, of West Philadelphia, are reported to be fully in accord with the movement for higher prices of admission, and have expressed their willingness to co-operate along equitable lines in their zone. No agreement has at present been reached for the zone covering the eastern part of the city, owing to the lack of confidence displayed by several exhibitors in this section. There is no doubt that if a special meeting were called more specific results could be obtained and a more congenial plan adopted which would conform with the ideas of those who are inclined to be a bit backward and retard the movement for higher prices which is deemed essentian at this time for the proper maintenance of their theatres. The leading exhibitors are all in favor of higher prices to meet the growing taxes which are threatening the industry.

Bradfield Dies of Influenza.

Charles L. Bradfield, who will be remembered as one of the pioneer exhibitors of Philadelphia, died last week in Wilmington, Del., where he resided during the past year, while the manager of the Grand Opera House. Mr. Bradfield was a victim of the influenza plague, having been ill for several days before he succumbed to its deadly effects. Mr. Bradfield was one of the early managers of a motion picture theatre here, having managed the Family Theatre, on Market street, for nearly twelve years, and was popular in this city, where he had a host of friends. Mr. Bradfield's enterprising career as a successful exhibitor was reviewed at length by the writer in these columns nearly one year ago.

Philadelphia Brevities.

Harry Ertle, formerly manager of several Philadelphia theatres, has joined the Goldwyn forces, and is now one of their traveling representatives.

EXCHANGES MAY MOVE FROM ST. JOHN

Canadian Picture Board Discusses Question as to Whether Distributors Shall Locate in Moncton

By Alice Fairweather, The Standard, St. John, N. B.

WHAT is chiefly agitating the exchange men of St. John, N. B., is the long-discussed question as to whether the eight exchange offices here will receive orders to move to Moncton. The matter is being settled by the Motion Picture Board of Canada, with head offices in the Allen Theatre Building, Toronto. Last week a telegram was received in the St. John exchange, stating that a meeting had been held by representatives of the following firms: Famous Players Film Service, Ltd., Monarch Film Company, Ltd., Regal Films, Ltd., Metro Film Service, Ltd., Specialty Film Import Company, Canadian Universal Film Company, Mutual Film Company, General Film Company and Exhibitors' Distributing Company. The wire stated that a telegram had been sent to the city council of Moncton, N. B., asking confirmation of their action of last Spring to induce the exchanges to move to that city.

The telegram points out that the members of the organization object to a city license fee being charged against exchanges operating in the three provinces which pay a provincial license tax in each of the provinces.

Mayor Hays, of St. John, said that the tax was to become effective at the first of the year when the new assessment act becomes operative.

St. John managers, when asked regarding this news, were most uncommunicative, saying that the matter rests entirely with the organization in Toronto. It is learned, from other sources, that at least two other places have offered special inducements to the exchanges to locate. In one town five years' exemption from taxes is offered. In other places the use of one general building at a very small rental is one of the inducements held out to the picture men. Moncton and Truro, N. S., both offered fine buildings, and both cities are anxious to have the business locate there.

The film exchanges located in St. John pay about $270 in taxes in addition to the personal taxes paid by the 150 employes of the exchanges. It was estimated that the various exchanges spend somewhere in the neighborhood of $100,000 in the city in a year.

The theatre owners will not enjoy the change, as they will have to spend something like $150 per year in express charges on film. It will be a distinct loss to the community if the film exchanges leave the city.

Margetts Recovers from Influenza.

G. A. Margetts, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, St. John, is back at his office after an attack of influenza.

Many of the staffs of the various film exchanges have suffered with inflenza.

Film Men Aid Victory Loan.

A whole page in a St. John paper was donated to the advertising of the Victory Loan by the following motion picture men: R. J. Romney, Vitagraph; R. G. March, Specialty Film Import; G. A. Margetts, Canadian Universal; Joe Lieberman, Fox Film Corporation; E. H. Teel, Regal Films; A. E. Smith, Famous Players Film Service; F. G Spencer, Unique and Lyric theatres; W. H. Golding, Imperial Theatre; Robert J. Armstrong, Queen Square Theatre; A. B. Farmer, Star Theatre.

Convert Theatre Lobby Into Bond Booth.

Those in charge of the Victory Loan campaign have realized, as have also many others, the great assistance the theatres have given in all patriotic movements. Now that the ban is on, all theatres and meetings, the people are at a loss to know how to spread the knowledge of the loan. The Imperial lobby is being used as a booth for the sale of Victory bonds, and evening meetings have been held outside the theatre. As it faces on King Square it is an ideal gathering place for such occasions and occupies a unique position in this respect, as hardly any public movement takes place without the assistance of the manager, W. H. Golding, or his staff. A curtain was placed on the outside of the theatre and the Victory loan pictures projected from a booth erected on the square.

Pryor Brothers Buy Four Theatres.

WITH the reopening of the Greensboro, N. C., theatres on November 4 an important deal comes to light, whereby Pryor Brothers, George W. Pryor being the local representative, have purchased from the R. D. Craver Amusement Enterprises, of Charlotte, all of the four local theatres, three picture houses and one vaudeville theatre.

Mr. Pryor formerly owned two of the local theatres, the other two being owned by the Craver interests, who obtained sole control of the local theatrical situation about six months ago. Mr. Pryor and associates now come into full ownership of the four theatres, which will be conducted in connection with their extensive interests elsewhere, including the Bijou Theatre at Danville, Va., and the Piedmont at Charlotte.

May Lose Expense of Griffith Film Advertising.

Richmond, Va.—Three days before the date local theatre managers have been guessing the epidemic ban would be lifted, namely, on November 4, health authorities have given no intimation that any action will be taken to that end. Local picture theatres are fighting for early opening, as the epidemic is very much on the wane, and the City Auditorium management is using large display advertising billing Griffith's "Hearts of the World" to begin a week engagement on November 4.

Indications are that opening will not be allowed before the eighth or ninth of November, and that "Hearts of the World" will lose the expense of an extensive billboard and newspaper advertising campaign. Other cities throughout the state have already announced opening dates, some as far as ten days in advance, and local theatre managers are a bit put out that they will have no advance information in order to enable them to book their houses in time for reopening.

Orders Swamp Exchanges.

Charlotte, N. C.—Local exchanges are buried under an avalanche of telegrams, telephone calls and special delivery letters from which it will require several days of day and night work to extricate themselves, with the orders opening almost all of the theatres in North and South Carolina to be effective November 4. Local exchange organizations have been kept intact, no fatalities occurring from the epidemic, and every effort is being made to give prompt service to the large number of orders that are pouring in.

The Universal Exchange, E. F. Dardine in charge, is working a day and night force getting the bookings in shape, rerouting serials and reinstating canceled bookings on Bluebird, Universal and Jewel productions, all of which are handled out of the one office. Manager Fuller, of the local Pathe office, is experiencing much the same epidemic of real work after four weeks of inactivity, and T. A. Brannon, of the Eltabran Film Company, is rapidly shaping his new booking sheets on the wide variety of independent subjects handled out of his office.

While news pours in from other sections of reopening, Charlotte is remaining dark, with little likelihood of the ban being lifted locally before the middle of November. The epidemic, thought to be on the wane a week ago, has taken a sudden upward spurt that placed all predictions of an early reopening in the discard and left health officials all at sea.

Seattle Houses Freshening Up.

THE motion picture theatre managers are taking the opportunity afforded by the closing order to freshen up their houses. John Hamrick is having the interior and the exterior of the Rex repainted, while John Danz is retouching the entire front of the Colonial, even to the sidewalk. Joseph Danz, manager of four small theatres on First avenue, is having all of them except the Rialto, which was only recently opened, fixed up, and many of the small houses on lower First avenue are getting a thorough renovating.

HELD OPEN AIR SHOWS TO AID LOAN

With Ban on Theatres, Toronto Exhibitors Screened Victory Drive Films Outdoors to Boost Bond Sales

By W. M. Gladish, 33 Wineva Avenue, Toronto, Ontario.

SOMETHING remarkable in the way of moving picture presentations were the open air demonstrations in front of three Toronto theatres to boost the Fifth Canadian Victory Loan, the stunts being staged on several evenings before the local houses were permitted to reopen on Monday, November 4.

The Allen Theatre, Richmond street east, started the ball rolling on Hallowe'en, October 31, by holding a free open air show with a number of the Victory Loan pictures which would have been screened in theatres all over the country if the theatres had been open during the first week of the loan drive. It is estimated that a crowd of 15,000 people were attracted to the demonstration, and the pictures shown included Douglas Fairbanks in "The Maple Leaf Forever," Mme. Nazimova in "A Woman of France," a special Canadian release, "Money Bags," showing how the Victory Loan is spent, and loan pictures by Fatty Arbuckle, William Duncan and Dorothy Dalton. The crowd was held for two hours and a half by the pictures and speeches, and then came the sale of bonds.

J. J. Allen opened the sale with a $5,000 purchase, and up went the buying until a total of $30,000 worth of bonds were sold.

The show was repeated in front of the Allen on the two following evenings, with different films on each occasion. On Friday night, pictures made by William S. Hart, Elsie Ferguson, Norma Talmadge, Wallace Reid, Mack Sennett and Corinne Griffith were screened. On Saturday night, November 2, the Victory Loan pictures of Mary Pickford, Charlie Chaplin, William Farnum, Lillian Gish and others were shown.

The interesting stunt was taken up by the Beaver Theatre in West Toronto, which is also owned by Messrs. Jule and J. J. Allen, on Friday night, when special inducements for the buying of bonds were held out in the shape of passes for the theatre. Anyone in the crowd buying from $50 to $450 worth of bonds received a double pass for one performance; a double pass for one month went to purchases of bonds valued at $500 to $950; a double pass for two months for a $1,000 purchase, and a double pass for six months for a still greater buy. The Beaver Theatre also offered to buy $2,500 worth of bonds on both Friday and Saturday night, providing the crowd bought more than $5,000 worth.

On the Saturday night, November 2, free shows were staged in front of the Park Theatre, Lansdowne and Bloor street, under a similar arrangement, while the local Victory Loan Committee provided an outdoor free film show of its own in front of the committee headquarters, where loan pictures and several comedies were screened.

The outdoor film performances became the big feature of the loan drive in Toronto during the week, and the special loan pictures were put to excellent use after all. Large advertisements announcing the shows were published in all the newspapers, and the space for these ads was paid for by the William Wrigley, Jr., Company, Limited, gum manufacturers, as a contribution to the Victory Loan campaign.

Laurie Boosts Fifth Victory Loan.

Manager Archie Laurie, of the Regent Theatre, Guelph, Ontaria, took advantage of the closing of Guelph theatres to make the position of the Regent much stronger in the community. Laurie was the first one in Canada to see the possibility of an open air moving picture show to boost the Fifth Victory Loan, and he received lots of space on the front page of the Guelph Mercury on the day following his first outdoor demonstration. Laurie followed this up by publishing an advertisement in the local newspaper in which he thanked the many people for their attendance at the outdoor show and incidentally told that another performance would be held on the following evening.

The free show consisted of the presentation of five Victory Loan pictures and a number of slides about the reopening of the theatre and other details. One slide emphasized the fact that the Regent was closed voluntarily to safeguard the people of the community, while another slide announced that the Regent would be "Better than ever" when it was reopened.

Laurie used sixteen Victory Loan posters on the front of his house while it was closed in addition to two large painted signs which also boosted the loan. On the centre doors was a sign to the effect that the theatre had been closed voluntarily but that the management was always ready "to serve and help."

The Regent Theatre is operated by the Paramount Theatres, Limited, of Toronto.

Regent Beautified During Ban Period.

When the Regent Theatre, one of Toronto's downtown palaces, was reopened on Monday, November 4, after a lay-off of two weeks on account of the epidemic, under the new management of W. M. Elliott, formerly of Detroit, a number of changes were noted by patrons.

The large mirrors in the lobby had been replaced by permanent frames for still photographs and small announcement cards and a number of large permanent sign frames had been placed above and below the iron marquee over the entrance. Inside the theatre a glass windshield had replaced the velvet curtains which had shielded the rear orchestra seats. All aisles were illuminated by small footlights placed at every sixth row. The orchestra of twenty pieces had been taken from the stage and was found in a special pit in front. One row of the orchestra seats had been taken out to give the orchestra plenty of room. The organ keyboards had been moved to the very side as well. New picture and poster frames of neat design had been placed on the mezzanine floor and a number of new carpets had been laid. The indirect lighting fixtures in the lobby had also been replaced by many ceiling lights arranged in a panel effect. And the ushers and other attendants were garbed in brand new uniforms of quiet style. An entirely new stage setting had been ordered from New York but did not arrive in time for the reopening.

Manager Elliott has devised a rather interesting method of advertising for current and coming attractions. The outside front is used exclusively for posters and pictures of the current features. The frames in the lobby will have advance notices and stills for the next week's pictures, while on the mezzanine floor will be found stills and cards for coming attractions. By this arrangement Mr. Elliott believes that he will overcome the usual confusion aroused by advertising both present and future features in the same displays.

Davidson in Royal Air Force.

N. W. Davidson, former manager of the Vancouver branch office of the Specialty Film Import, Limited, Canadian Pathe distributors, was made the recipient of a purse and an engraved identification wristlet before he left Montreal on his recent visit before proceeding overseas as a lieutenant of the Royal Air Force. The presentation took place quietly in the Montreal headquarters of the company and there was no formal gathering because of the epidemic.

HEAVY RAINS BREAK WEST TEXAS DROUTH

Theatres in Stricken Area Now Open and Doing Big Business—Dallas Salesmen Visit Territory

By Phil Fox, Times-Herald, Dallas, Texas.

NEXT to the raising of the quarantine the best news that has come to Dallas film exchange managers in many moons is the report that the drouth in West Texas has been completely broken by unprecedented rains.

In territory where rain had not fallen in three years a six-inch downpour soaked the ground, filled water holes and tinged the range with green late in October. Scattered rains throughout the Panhandle district have been steady since that time.

Moving picture theatres which had been closed in West Texas owing to the drouth are now opening again. The farmers and the business men are both busy and optimistic. The land is being plowed and plans for a bumper wheat crop are being pushed.

For the first time in months salesmen are going from Dallas territory into West Texas. Lubbock, Sweetwater, Abilene, San Angelo and Big Spring playhouses are open and doing a good business.

Pathe Exchange Moves.

The Pathe branch has moved from 2012 Commerce street to 1717 Commerce street, and expect to establish one of the model film exchanges in this territory.

W. S. Wessling, southern district manager for Pathe, was in Dallas to arrange for the moving. He leased the Dallas Gas Company Building for his company. This is a three-story structure with a vast amount of floor space and is admirably suited for film exchange purposes. The entire building will be utilized by Pathe, so Dallas Manager James Hill announces. New fixtures will be installed throughout.

Films Teach Hog Raising.

Texas farmer boys and farmer girls are learning the science of hog raising through the motion pictures. J. C. Hestand, chief of the live stock bureau of the state agricultural department, has adopted the films as a method of encouraging the raising of thoroughbred pigs throughout the Lone Star state. He has filmed the porkers from the humble barnyard shoat of the razorback variety to the bulging poundage of blue-ribbon Berkshires with the facial resemblance of Von Hindenburg and the disposition of Rip Van Winkle.

He shows the hog films to youngsters to demonstrate the right and the wrong way to raise pigs. He declares that his pictures have been a great aid in establishing hog clubs throughout the state.

Thousands Spent in Overhauling Theatres.

Thousands of dollars have been spent by motion picture exhibitors in Texas, Louisiana and Arkansas during the past few weeks in remodeling and repainting their theatres.

Hundreds of theatre owners took advantage of the quarantine period to give their houses a thorough overhauling and renovating. As the result, spick and span playhouses were awaiting the public when the post quarantine rush started.

Kleine Releases Through the General.

The Kleine branch will move to the General Film Company offices here. They will close their offices on Commerce street in November. Releases will be arranged through Jimmy Kelly, of General. Manager Bohorn will still be in charge of the business here.

"LITTLE WOMEN"

William A. Brady Presents a Sympathetic Visualization of Louisa M. Alcott's Famous Story.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

AN earnest and intelligent effort has been made to seize and portray the spirit, quite as well as the matter, of a rarely true story of American home life, one widely read and enjoyed in the printed version, and by a talented author writing from the fulness of experience. If there is any serious fault to be found with the Brady version, it must be ascribed to the original, or to the difficulty of setting forth on the screen a novel dealing with many characters and lines of action at the same time, for the release as shown to a crowded house at the Strand rang true to the author's purpose and evoked warm appreciation. In the very simplicity of this picture, that of a New England home during the Civil War, there is a fine and delicate art of accuracy. The "atmosphere" is so remarkably preserved that people see the events taking place rather than watch them being related. Furthermore, the kindly and humanizing purpose is made very effective without subtitle preachment of any kind.

An elderly New England clergyman has gone to the war as a chaplain, leaving behind in Concord, Mass., a wife and four daughters scantily provided for, but rich in home love and affection. Demure and sweet American girls are the "little women" of this family, and their struggles with the little affairs of existence, their pure-minded love stories, and their tender devotion to each other, even to the point of hard sacrifice, constitute the materials. All this is difficult to assemble for presentation in an art of expression which ordinarily demands one or another situation of high suspense to hold popular interest, so difficult that courage was needed to undertake it, but the logic and consistency of all that is shown compensates heavily for the absence of other picture values. The Brady presentation is admirably typed, every character being taken with skill, most carefully set, to the minutest detail, and it is a highly finished product, one of the best of its kind.

"A ROMANCE OF THE AIR"

A Story Featuring Lieut. Bert Hall and Released by Carle E. Carleton.

Reviewed by Louis Reeves Harrison.

THAT this picture is shown at the Rivoli gives it standing, and it contains some of the elements of a fine release, but it is all-too-obviously a publicity vehicle for Lieut. Bert Hall to be ranked with pictures of large public interest, and the story is on the regulation lines used by producers who enter the field without much knowledge of what has already been done to death, particularly the outworn situations of the falsely accused hero condemned to die and saved at the last moment by the heroine, the most threadbare of them all. Lieutenant Hall, himself, is shown to be manly and intelligent American, but he does not take the intelligence of his fellow-Americans quite enough for granted. He is sent on a mission and comes down wounded within the German lines, along with a German airman who is killed. Hall changes clothes and identity with the dead German and is taken to a hospital, where he recognizes an American girl warbound in Germany. They plan an escape at "Dawn" one day in a German machine.

At dawn the American girl appears at the rendezvous with an unknown foreigner, really the wife of a German spy, who has plotted to get into France this way, where she may be "useful." Hall's scheme of escape has been discovered by the enemy and they are aiding him to make a nice little getaway, providing him with gas he overlooked, sending back a dangerous American ace in order to get a woman over the lines. He gets there on a German machine and the spy is given every opportunity to be present when French officers are preparing to attack. Her discoveries are promptly telephoned to the enemy and the attack fails. Hall is accused on the flimsy evidence of plans being found in his room, and, in spite of a long and honorable record is sentenced to be shot at sunrise. Mere opportune circumstances enable the heroine to rescue the unjustly accused at the last moment. Lieut. Hall rings true, but his story does not.

"THE MASTER MYSTERY"

Houdini Serial Produced by B. A. Rolfe Promises Many Novel Thrills.

Reviewed by Edward Weitzel.

PUTTING Houdini and his celebrated escapes into a serial was a clever piece of showmanship. The Handcuff King himself is one of the best showmen in the world, and has obtained more free advertising than any other entertainer now before the public. His ready inventive faculty is constantly supplying him with a new sensation, and his skill in performing his feats of daring and mystery places him at the head of his class of wonder workers.

In "The Master Mystery," written by Arthur B. Reeves and Charles A. Logue, and produced by B. A. Rolfe, there is every promise that its fifteen episodes will keep the movie fan on the edge of his seat throughout each number and leave him hardly able to wait for the time between each installment to pass. A special showing of the first four episodes were given at the Strand Theatre, New York, November 6. Each episode contained one of Houdini's famous escapes. The Handcuff King takes the part of Quentin Locke, an agent of the Department of Justice engaged in trapping a pair of patent lawyers, who make it their business to surpress any invention that passes through their hands which might effect the value of inventions already in use. Locke has been employed by the lawyers as a chemist, and bccomes an inmate of the home of Peter Brent, one of the firm.

The suppressed inventions are hidden away in a secret cellar under the Brent mansion. Among them is what is apparently a mechanical man of Frankenstein that tramps about the house and pushes its way through locked doors in the most mysterious fashion. It also has a gang of thugs under its control, and all through the first four episodes the bullies do their best to put Locke out of the way. He is imprisoned in a straight jacket, chained and hung head downward over a vat filled with acid, nailed in a box and thrown into the water, and the air pipe to his diving suit cut when at the bottom of the river. And each time he manages to escape. These stunts are all handled cleverly, and the events leading up to them are always full of the creepy mystery that Arthur B. Reeves knows how to invent. There is also a proper love interest, and Houdini tackles the scenes with the heroine with the same calm courage he shows in risking his neck. To do him justice, his acting isn't half bad, and will receive but little adverse comment.

Burton King directed the production, assisted by William Haddock. The result is excellent, and the first four episodes show an evident intention to give the serial generous financial support. The cast has artistic strength. Its leading members are Margaret Marsh, Ruth Stonehouse, William Pike, Charles Graham, Jack Burns, Edna Britton and Floyd Buckley.

"TELL IT TO THE MARINES"

Trick Photography Featured in Latest Lee Kiddy Production from William Fox.

Reviewed by Walter K. Hill.

THE Lee Kiddies are presented in a slap-bang comedy that uses a very popular catch phrase for its title—"Tell It to the Marines." In this newest of their screen accomplishments the kiddies have opportunity to do all the mischief their little hearts desire—and they do it with speed. They will please their admirers and give satisfaction to those who have made these clever little ones their favorites.

The very important factor in the presentation is the incorporation of two or more reels of trick photography that has nothing whatever to do with the little plot the main story carries. The film has been in this country for something like a year, having been imported from Italy by Harry Raver. Under the title "Outwitting the Hun," the subject was shown at the New York Strand, week starting July 31, of the past summer. Then it was reviewed at length in the World.

The Lee children are supposed to dream the "trick stuff," and while these scenes are screened they will be sure to create intense interest. Some of the most effective "stop camera" work the screen has ever shown is contained in the exposition of the toy soldiers who accomplish some remarkable deeds. Exhibitors should pay special attention to exploiting these pictures in conjunction with showing of "Tell It to the Marines." The public should be told in advance what they are to expect that the showman may get the full benefit of the offering.

The doings of these toy creatures will create no end of comment. They constitute a remarkable offering.

COMMENTS

J. Stuart Blackton.

SAFE FOR DEMOCRACY (J. Stuart Blackton).—A splendidly treated story illustrating the "work-or-fight" idea with plenty of vigor, delicate humor and some fine characterization by Tony Kelly, with Ruby de Remer and Mitchell Lewis in leading roles.

Fox Film Corporation.

TELL IT TO THE MARINES (Fox).—The Lee Kiddies are starred in a lively comedy that carries as its chief attraction some remarkable examples of trick photography — stop camera work — that are sure to create no end of public comment. Exhibitors should promise their public something unusual in connection with the showing by the Lee Kiddies, and efforts should be made to capitalize the unusual opportunity for interesting and amazing the public in these unusual scenes.

Mutual Film Corporation.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 71 (Mutual).—Interesting items of this issue include scenes showing the Americans digging themselves into reclaimed ground and other incidents of the battlefield. Feeding German prisoners, a front line bakery in operation, Y. M. C. A. huts at Chateau Thierry, and a meeting of oppressed peoples of the old world at Philadelphia to write a new Declaration of Independence for their fellows.

SCREEN TELEGRAM NO. 72 (Mutual).—This issue shows the graduates of West Point appearing in their grey uniform for the last time, troops in review at Camp Gordon, dolls collected for Belgian children, motorized huts distributing cigarettes and candy to fighting men in France, and Lucien Muratore singing "La Marseillaise" at San Francisco at open air meeting.

Pathe Exchange, Inc.

ALONG THE CRIMSON GASH (Pathe-War Review).—This is No. 20 of the Official War Review. It deals with various phases of fighting on the Western front. Feeding the doughboys is an interesting topic, as food is carried by special messengers to the men in the front trenches. Target practice from dummy whippet tanks is also an informing feature, as well as the pictures of cavalry in action. The subject is full of interest.

THIRD AND LAST WARNING (Pathe).—Episode No. 13 of "Hands Up." This is another installment filled with tumultuous action. The many events are all interesting, though the suspense is not always maintained. The colorful atmosphere is a strong feature of this. Among the various stunts is the collapse of a building and the fall of a runaway coach over a cliff.

THE FAR FLUNG BATTLE LINE NO. 11 (Pathe).—This British war film gives some intimate views of the Tommys fighting in Italy. Their preparations for "tea" are interesting; also the manner in which they help the Italian girls pump water. The subject closes with some interesting views of German airplanes brought down behind the Allied lines.

TRAILS OF TREACHERY (Pathe).—Episode No. 6 of "Wolves of Kultur." Another strong installment of this serial, which constantly increases in interest. The big scenes occur in the book store operated by a German, in the rear of which a torpedo is being manufactured. Bob and Alice are made captive, but Barclay and Helen are on the job as the number closes.

ALTHOUGH a newcomer in the film industry Adolphe Osso, who is still in the early twenties, has already achieved considerable success. Only a few years ago he came from France as co-manager of the agency of Oscar Osso for the Society of Dramatic Authors of France and negotiated a number of deals for playwrights and publishers. He has also been successful in selling the motion picture rights of a number of productions, including Maeterlinck's "Bluebird," Anatole France's "Thais," Pierre Wolff's "Thais," Francis de Aurel's "The Savage Woman," Henry Bernstein's "Elevation" and Henry Bataille's "The Torches."

Mr. Osso has just taken larger quarters in the Brokaw building, 1457 Broadway, New York, and added a new department for publicity and personal representation, his clients including M. Leonce Perret, Albert Capellani, Madame Blache and Dolores Cassinelli. Also, as a result of his successful consummation of the sale of "Lafayette, We Come," Leonce Perret's latest picture, he has been appointed exclusive agent for forthcoming Perret productions, including "Stars of Glory," in which Dolores Cassinelli and E. K. Lincoln are featured, and which is now nearing completion.

Ince Talks About S-L Pictures.

In speaking of his connection with the S-L Pictures organization, Ralph Ince says: "The exhibitors may feel assured that everything I have to give of intelligence, imagination and hard work will be in the new productions. Particularly do I wish to invite the severest criticisms of the exhibitors. He who criticises my work with the fiercest honesty and severity will be my best friend, for it is only from the exhibitor who has his ear consistently to the ground that I can hope to gather criticism of constructive value for future work.

I am particularly pleased by the addition of Mr. Milliken to our circle. I worked under his management when he was associated with McClures, and have come to rely greatly on his friendship and judgment. In E. K. Lincoln we have captured a star of the first magnitude. Mr. Lincoln's first appearance in motion pictures was under my direction, and I have always entertained a very high opinion of his abilities and purpose.

The powerful theme of the story selected for the first picture in which Mr. Lincoln is to play the leading part gives us both one of the unsual opportunities in which director and actor rejoice, and it remains now only to deliver our best wares to the exhibitor whose confidence and approval is our single aim."

Argosy Offers "After the War."

The Argosy Film Corporation, which has recently opened offices at 729 Seventh avenue, is offering on state rights basis the feature production, "After the War," which was made by Director Sam De Grasse, and in which Grace Cunard is featured. The story deals with the conditions of reconstruction following the war, and was made recently by the Argosy in the Universal studios.

Rights to this production for New York and Northern New Jersey have been acquired by M. H. Hoffman.

Barbara Castleton
Leading Lady for William Faversham in "The Silver King" (Paramount-Artcraft).

Good Bookings for "Five Nights."

According to the Classical Motion Picture Company which is selling "Five Nights" to state rights exchanges, one of two things is happening. Either the big box office results shown by "Five Nights" in New York and Ohio are attracting attention to the feature or the state rights market is showing sudden activity, and reports from other sections attest the box office results obtained on this production.

The first theatre to play "Five Nights" in Ohio was the Lubin, of Cincinnati, where it was booked for one week. Business was so good that it was held over for the following week. Several theatres in Cleveland reported similar results. Among the prominent exhibitors in New York who have taken advantage of this dramatization of Victoria Cross' widely read novel is David V. Picker, of the Burland Theatre and the Spooner, Elsmere and Victory theatres.

Pioneer Reports Excellent Business.

Mr. Hirsh reports that "Wives of Men" is enjoying excellent business in New York City, and was recently shown at the Loew theatres, as well as some of the Fox and Keith theatres, including the Audubon and Prospect. Fred Mitchell, general booking manager for the Loew Circuit, reports that this production has proved to be one of the best film attractions booked for the Loew houses.

Screen Musical Comedy Ready for Lee Kids

RALPH H. SPENCE, special writer of humorous subjects and sub-title specialist for William Fox, has sprung "something new under the sun" in motion pictures. He has just written what he calls the first "musical comedy of the screen." The new play is entitled "Keep Smiling," and the stellar roles will be interpreted by Jane and Katherine Lee, the Fox kiddies.

In constructing his comedy Mr. Spence has managed to fit each episode to some well-known musical composition. He has punctuated the picture with one hundred and thirty of his characteristically humorous sub-titles, thirty of which form definite orchestra cues. Other orchestra or piano cues are provided in an unmistakable manner by the action of certain scenes.

"Keep the Home Fires Burning" is the keynote of the play. Other well-known selections that fit the action of "Keep Smiling" are: "Smiles," "Till the Clouds Roll By," "The Sunshine of your Smiles," "Over There," "Stars and Stripes Forever," "Let Me Like a Soldier Fall," "Taps" (bugle), "Mammy's Little Chocolate Soldier," "We're All Going Calling on the Kaiser," "Beautiful Lady," "I Hate to Lose You," "Blue Bells of Scotland," "I'm So Glad My Mamma Don't Know Where I'm At," "My Hero" and several others.

While "Keep Smiling" has its dramatic moments it is mostly comedy-drama, and at times drops—or rides—to real farce. Its plot, characters, settings and tempo strongly suggest musical comedy, except that Mr. Spence has provided a plot of merit and springs a real surprise in the "finale." The closing action of the play is at a New Jersey beach resort, and here the author has weaved a humorous episode around the inborn curiosity of the American public. When it is known that an enemy U-boat has appeared off the Jersey coast the hotel proprietor advertises the fact and hundreds of persons flock to the beach to pay double prices at the hotel for the privilege of being "raided" by a submarine.

The Story: It's the same old story of love's young dream and the calf love of a callow youth, who is made to realize that a man of seventeen does not look as old as he feels to a girl of the same age. William Sylvanus Baxter even steals his father's dress suit to make a good impression upon his lady love, and in return gets "stood up" while she elopes with an older man, and has only his thoughts and a garage repair bill as souvenirs of his first love affair.

Screen Reflection of Booth Tarkington's Famous Story and Play.
Drama of Youth and Vitality Screened in Delightful Sequences.

For a special stunt hire small boys to chalk the numerals on everything in sight the day you open your advertising campaign, or have snipes printed bearing the figures.

One of the women appeals to Don for refuge from the tribe, and he shields her. His uncle, dying, leaves his fortune to Don, who marries Corinne, the Okfenoke girl, and goes to take possession of his heritage. There he plans the undoing of his wife and the man she married, and a double tragedy is narrowly averted by awakened love.

Seeing the World's Best Stories

TO see the characters of a famous novel come to life upon the screen is a tremendous thing!

There, alive, in flesh and blood, is the hero, or heroine, whose exploits you followed breathlessly upon the printed page.

To the great organization behind Paramount and Artcraft motion pictures we are indebted for this in the case of "Tom Sawyer," "Oliver Twist," "The Sub-Deb Stories," "Cinderella," "Old Wives for New," "David Harum," "The Bottle Imp," "To Have and to Hold," "Great Expectations," "The Virginian," "The Firefly of France," "His Majesty Bunker Bean," "The Varmint," Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird," "M'liss," "Resurrection," and literally scores upon scores of others.

The beloved characters of these romances find a new and rich lease of life in the talent of the equally beloved stars of Paramount and Artcraft,

--foremost in their world as the fiction-characters in theirs,

—as superbly directed in their actions as were those they portray,

—and doubly fascinating because touched with all the warmth and light of life.

ALL SET FOR AFTER-THE-WAR BUSINESS

Robertson-Cole Company Completing Arrangements Which Seem Destined to Make Them Important Factor in Distributing Film, Not Only Abroad but Also in This Country.

"The American photoplay will dominate the world after the war ends," declared an official of the department of moving pictures of the Robertson-Cole Company. "The motion picture made in the United States leads the world in artistic and entertaining qualities—and has led for a long time. It has simply needed good business methods to bring our films to the world.

"Believing this thoroughly, we are laying our plans for a tremendous business in Europe and Asia to follow the cessation of hostilities. Our plans are not based upon idle speculation. The Robertson-Cole Company has long been one of the biggest exporting concerns in this country, and for years has maintained offices throughout the Far East and Europe—in London, Sydney, Calcutta, Bombay, Singapore and Rangoon. The demand of photoplays led the Robertson-Cole Company to enter the film exporting business. Then, finding that, in order to obtain pictures of established value, it was necessary to be able to handle them for the entire world, including the United States, Robertson-Cole added a domestic department. This was another step in preparing for the after-the-war avalanche of business. Thus the Robertson-Cole Company now handles the world market."

It can safely be said that no organization has caused such widespread discussion and interest in the cinema world as has the Robertson-Cole Company. In rapid succession within the past few weeks have come announcements that Robertson-Cole will handle for the entire world, including the United States, the National Film Corporation's eight Billie Rhodes pictures and series of Henry B. Walthall features, besides looking after all National Film Corporation interests. The National is to make a big super-feature, which the Robertson-Cole concern is to distribute next spring. Deals have also been closed whereby eight J. Warren Kerrigan pictures and twelve Screencraft productions will be sold by them throughout the world, except the United States, while Robertson-Cole have secured for the entire world, including this country, the series of eight William Desmond pictures to be produced by Jesse D. Hampton, and Martin Johnson's remarkable "Cannibals of the South Seas."

The first Billie Rhodes picture for foreign distribution is "The Girl of My Dreams"; the initial Walthall photoplay is "And a Still Small Voice," while the first Screencraft is "The Prodigal Wife." Of the eight subjects starring J. Warren Kerrigan, five are now being distributed in foreign lands by Robertson-Cole. These are "A Burglar for a Night," "A Dollar Bid," "Three-X Gordon," "Prisoners of the Pines" and "The Drifters." Martin Johnson's "Cannibals of the South Seas" is expected to create a sensation abroad, particularly in England and Canada, because of the British ownerships of the savage South Seas islands.

While the Robertson-Cole Company is pre-eminently planning for after the war, its splendid organization is proving itself a vital necessity to the successful marketing of productions in foreign territory in these troubled times. War-time conditions make efficient sevice an absolute necessity.

Robertson-Cole announce that their plans for a big after-the-war expansion will result in even further connections throughout the countries of Europe than are at present enjoyed by the organization.

RECORD DEAL FOR SOUTH AMERICA

"Hearts of the World," Purchased by Gillespie Bros., Is Parcelled Out to Eager Territorial Rights Buyers with Great Speed—Great Interest Shown in Spectacular Propaganda Picture.

David Wark Griffith's production, "Hearts of the World," pronounced the greatest of all cinematographic propaganda, is just reaching the Latin-American public. Though all of the other parts of the world with, of course, a few exceptions, have seen this feature, it was not for the Spanish and Portuguese-speaking nations of the western hemisphere to enjoy this spectacle until now. Indeed, when it was sold for the lower Americas, it was sold in one lump, and has since been parceled out on the territorial basis by the export house which secured it.

Gillespie Bros. & Co., of New York City, were the purchasers. A deal had been on for several months between Joseph M. de Aragon, department manager of the film of this large export house, and the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, which conducted the foreign selling activities of the Griffith feature; and the price stands as a record for any one film in Latin-America.

Never were the exhibition rights to a feature more eagerly contended for between various Latin-American territorial buyers than for "Hearts of the World." The news that Mr. Aragon was about to close for the selling rights of this production had not only become familiar to resident Latin-American buyers in Manhattan, but even found its way to film buyers of South and Central America, the Antilles and Mexico. As a result, Mr. Aragon closed out the bulk of his territory the day that he took over the picture.

Marcel Morhange, the general manager of the New York Film Exchange of Buenos Aires, Argentine, who happened to be in New York city on a buying trip, purchased this production for Argentine, Uruguay and Paraguay. As a matter of fact, before Mr. Morhange arrived in the United States. L. H. Allen, his New York representative, had been on the job and made the necessary deposit with the Gillespie firm almost in advance of their having closed their contract with Famous Players.

Within an hour after closing the Argentinian deal, Mr. Aragon had also entered into a contract with Sr. Bernardo Herrera, member of the film of Pairoa y Herrera, of Chile, for a vast stretch of territory, including Chile, Colombia, Venezuela, Costa Rica, Honduras, Guatemala and Salvador. Mr. Herrera has been in New York on a buying mission for nearly a half year, and would have returned to his Chilean office long ago, had it not been for his desire to secure the projection rights for the Griffith production before returning to his headquarters.

UNION THEATRES, LTD., GET HOUSE

Suits Between Big Operating Companies and the Spencers Finally Settled by Defendants' Withdrawal by Satisfactory Agreement—Wins Copyright Action—Australian Notes.

By Thomas S. Imrie.

Sydney, N. S. W., Australia, Sept. 28.—During the past four months the owners of the lease of the Lyceum Theatre, Sydney, has twice been disputed in the courts, and in both cases judgments were delivered against Australasian Films, Ltd. and Union Theatres, Ltd., the former joint lessees of the house. An appeal against the judgments came before the court again this week, and public interest in the case has been very great.

Australasian Films, Ltd. and Union Theatres, Ltd. alleged certain breaches of agreement against Cosens Spencer and his wife, Mrs. Spencer. The plaintiffs charged that Spencer, acting on behalf of his wife, had become interested in picture theatres in Brisbane and Newcastle, thus making a breach of an agreement with the plaintiffs that he would not within ten years after September, 1911, at any place in the Commonwealth, directly or indirectly, carry on or be interested in any picture theatre business. The defendant Spencer denied that he had entered into any agreement as alleged on behalf of himself or his wife.

At this stage it was announced in court that the case had been settled, the formal announcement being: "That Mr. and Mrs. Spencer have disposed of their respective interests to Union Theatres, Ltd. on terms satisfactory to all parties, and have agreed to remain out of the film business for a long term of years."

W. Barrington Miller, general manager of Union Theatres, Ltd., interviewed after the case, said: "We are all glad everything is settled amicably. If the case had been fought out in court the costs would have been enormous. Whichever side had won would have got very little satisfaction out of it. Union Theatres, Ltd., will take over the leases of Mrs. Spencer's theatres, including the Lyceum. Every point has, I think, been settled to the satisfaction of all the parties concerned."

Judgment has been given on the appeal of the defendant in the suit of Edmund Finn against Humbert Pugliese. The suit, which was heard before Justice Street, Chief Judge in Equity, was one to restrain the alleged infringement of a copyright. In 1888 Edmund Finn, the plaintiff, wrote a book entitled "A Priest's Secret," and in 1917 Raymond H. Longford produced a cinematograph film portraying scenes which, it was alleged, were taken from the work. He had done so under an agreement with the defendant, who subsequently exhibited the film in the course of his business under the name of "The Church and the Woman." His honor granted an injunction restraining the exhibition of the picture and directed the forfeiture of the film.

Justice Gordon, who delivered the judgment of the court, said that upon a comparison of the scenario and the novel, it was clear that the scenario was taken directly from, and was a reproduction of, the book. In the court's view, the law applicable to the question of infringement or no infringement was correctly stated by Justice Street in the previous case. The court was therefore of opinion that the appeal should be dismissed.

H. G. Musgrove, general manager of Australasian Films, Ltd., discussing the present film position, denied the current rumor that there was any possibility of shortage, at any rate, as far as his firm was concerned, as a very large shipment had come to hand by the Niagara last week, while double supplies were looked for early in September. The trouble had been caused by congestion in the United States, where a regulation issued by the Government enforced an inspection of every foot of film before export. The inspection naturally took up a good deal of time, but while delays had occurred, everything had been adjusted.

The Elsie Ferguson-Artcraft production, "The Song of Songs," is at present held up by the Censor Board, who have not yet decided as to whether they will allow the picture to be shown.

A local film comedy, "Algie's Romance," produced by Leonard Doogood, is nearly ready for screening and will be released in a few weeks. To date Australian comedies have been somewhat of a failure, and so it is hoped that "Algie's Romance" will not follow in the wake of its predecessors.

J. A. Lipman, chief of Quality Features, announces that his firm has secured the Australian rights to the Mutual film, "Damaged Goods," which will arrive this month. Mr. Lipman will also receive during October the first of the Pyramid comedies, and will introduce them to Australian exhibitors on their arrival.

The news that J. C. Williamson, Ltd., had obtained the Australasian rights to D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" caused satisfactory comment among exhibitors.

R. L. (Snowy) Baker, who made a very successful motion picture debut recently in "The Enemy Within," again appears in pictures in a local production, "The Lure of the Bush." This picture, like its predecessor, is a "stunt" subject, and Australia's noted athlete shows his abilities to great advantage. While the plot is familiar, it has been given several new twists, and, altogether, the production is highly satisfactory, viewed from all points.

The Fox Film Corporation special feature, "Cleopatra," is a current release in Sydney this month, and is doing excellent business in several metropolitan theaters. Cecil B. de Mille's production, "The Whispering Chorus," is another subject that has proved a big box-office attraction.

Humbert Pugliese announces the completion of the filming of the famous comedy-drama, "Struck Oil," with Maggie Moore in her original part of Lizzie Stofel and Harry Thomas in the chief male role. The date of release is set for November 19, when the film will be presented at the Sydney Town Hall.

Australasian Films Ltd. are doing some advance advertising for "Pershing's Crusaders," which will open up in the Sydney Town Hall for a special season under their direction. Similar subjects have found very enthusiastic audiences here, and, in view of the interest shown in Australia to all things American, "Pershing's Crusaders" should be popular.

American Carbons in Isle of Malta.

The little island of Malta has just received a shipment of Speer carbons, sold them through the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who control the foreign distribution of this well known motion picture product. This shipment is said to be the first one of American carbons that has ever been received in Malta.

GOVERNMENT CENSORSHIP IN CEYLON

British Crown Colony to Appoint Official Board in Which Educational and Police Departments Will Be Represented—Interesting Film Notes from India.

By S. B. Banerjea.

The Government of Ceylon, a British crown colony, is about to appoint a board of censorship for cinema films. The Educational and Police departments will be represented on the board. Our own censorship boards should be similarly represented. I would also have independent Indian gentlemen on them.

A fire in the godowns of the Aslatic Cinema Co. of Calcutta recently destroyed films to the value of 5,000 Rupees.

At the Elphinstone Picture Palace we have seen the following films: "Womanhood," "Frult of Folly," "The Pomp of Earth," "Blue Blood and Yellow," "Unto Herself Done," "The Girl Who Could Not Grow Up," "Told at Twilight," "Holy Orders," "The Iron Heart," Chaplin's "The Pawnbroker" and "Behind the Screens"; "The Gentle Intruder," "Crime and Punishment," "Argyle Case," "Miss Nobody," "Innocence and Lizette," "Mark of Cain," "Modern Lorelei," "Lady Windermere's Fan," and several British films of no particular merit. These films drew crowded houses.

At the Albion Theater, the serial story, "The Secret of the Submarine" has been screened to overcrowded houses. Another serial will be started very shortly. I have no doubt whatever that it will be well patronized. At the same theater, we have also seen the following: "Nero and Agrippina," "The Square Girl," "Blindman's Luck" and "The Witching Hour." Its authorities have started "Fun Fridays," which are well attended.

The authorities of the Cornwallis Theater have exhibited "Heart of Gavroche," "Tragical Suspicion," "Jealous of Tomorrow" and "The Tramp." They have completed the exhibition of the serial, "The Voice on the Wire" and are now screening "The Gray Ghost," to huge crowds. They have also screened two Hindu films, viz.: "Data Karna" and "Jaimini." These are rubbish and do not enhance the reputation of a respectable house.

Mr. E. H. Ducasse has just reopened the Picture House, of Calcutta, of which Messrs. K. D. Brothers are lessees. He has remodeled it in parts and introduced various improvements. The pictures are now being projected on a pucca wall screen, and the four anna seats have been abolished. Mr. Ducasse opened his show with the sensational Drury Lane drama, "The Whip," which drew crowded houses for several days in succession. Among other films, which he has screened, we may mention "Joan the Woman" (complete series); "Jaffrey," "One Touch of Nature," "The Mischief Maker" and "The Flower of Faith."

In this connection I should state that Mr. Ducasse has just issued a rather belated explanation of the Bijou Theater incident, referred to in a previous letter. I quote the following from his letter of explanation, sent to the editor of the "Nayak," a vernacular daily of Calcutta: "This prohibition was made by the management of the Bijou Theater after I had resigned my control of that house of amusement. There is no such prohibition in force regarding my new theater, the Picture House, and I am always pleased to see my Indian patrons there in their national dress so long as they conduct themselves—as indeed they have always done—with propriety." This explanation is satisfactory and will remove much misunderstanding. In this connection, I should state that many of my friends and acquaintances still refuse to patronize the Bijou. I wish Mr. Ducasse all success.

The Theatre Royal, of Calcutta, continues to pursue its modest course along. Among the films, we have seen there, mention may be made of "The Flash of Emerald," "Will Power" and "Temper." The official war films were screened here for several days in succession.

The authorities of the Calcutta Empire have arranged to screen, "Winning a Continent," shortly.

The Bijou Theatre people have screened "The Veiled Meduca," "God's Crucible," "The Mysterious Mrs. M.," "Vampire," "The Call of Her People," "The Voluptuousness of Death," "Honour of Mary Blake," "Snowlined," "Blue Jeans," "Outwitted," "A Million Bid," "Graustark," "Uncle Sam at Work," "The Shooting of Dan McGrew," "Brand of Cowardice," "The Half-Million Bride" and several British films of no merit.

The Lahore Empire people have shown "Vendetta," Pathe's History of Great War and "Old Folks at Home," and are screening "Crimson Stain Mystery," to huge crowds.

The Madras Wellington is screening "Panopta." I trust Mr. Madan will arrange to screen it in one of his theatres in Calcutta.

The Arya Cinema of Poona has shown "The Hidden Hand" and will screen "The Neglected Wife" shortly.

The following films have been shown at the Bombay Imperial: "The Unknown Woman," "Streets of Illusion," "The Little Patriot," and the the serial "The Hidden Hand."

The Bombay Empire people have sreened "Crooked Romance," "An Artist's Honour," "Runaway Romany," "The Barrier," "Convict 993," "Over the Hill" and "Romeo and Juliet."

The Cinema Precious (Bombay) is screening "The Secret Kingdom" to crowded houses.

At the New Alexandra, "Sirens of the Sea," "Tide of Life," "Her Soul's Inspiration," "Torment" and "Eagle's Nest" have been screened.

The authorities of the Kohinoor (Karachi) have shown "Straight Shooting," "Bronze Bride" and "20,000 Leagues Under the Sea."

War loan rallies have taken place in all the leading theatres of Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, Lahore, and Delhi and elsewhere, and large sums have been realized for a good cause.

The little bioscope theatre of Murree Hills, the Kohinoor of Benares, the Palladium of Jubbulpur, and the Secondrabad Cinema are doing well.

The following extract from the report of the Commissioner of Police, Calcutta, covering the year 1916-1917, will be read by my readers with interest: "All theatres and bioscopes were regularly visited. The exhibition of sixteen films was prohibited and in twenty films objectionable portions were deleted. During the year a board of censors was established for each separate management showing cinematograph films in Calcutta. I desire to acknowledge the assistance given me by the European Association and by the Calcutta Trades Association in forming these boards. My thanks are also due to those gentlemen who have given so much of their time to the task of censoring." Comments on the foregoing are superfluous.

Foreign Sales Record

Below appears a partial list of sales, which indicates the American productions disposed of from New York City and the exclusive rights' purchasers. As this tabulation is a new idea among exporters, many of these folk were inclined to indifference in respect to making these announcements in this issue. Such reports as appear, however, will unquestionably serve as the crystal around which all future exporters' monthly sales activities will precipitate, commencing with our December International edition:

The Export Business Gallery

The exporters of the moving picture industry are the globe-trotters of the industry. That familiarity with conditions in countries other than the one which they may be calling home for the present, which is so essential to their business success, gives them an added interest to the observer who is examining the personalities behind any enterprise, since the personalities, after all, are the things which make for either success or failure in any undertaking.

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., is the name on the entrance door at the spacious suite of offices in the Godfrey Building at 729 Seventh Avenue, New York.

Ben Blumenthal and Lou Auerbach are the men who keep the wheels going round. Theirs are the personalities back of the business which have made for its present success and are the promise for its future. Both of them are almost as well known in film circles in London, Paris, Rome, Barcelona, Petrograd and South America as in the United States.

Mr. Blumenthal's connection with the moving picture industry dates back to the early days, and some of the developments which he has not only witnessed but in which he has played an important role are very interesting. Under his direction, it is claimed, moving pictures were first played in legitimate theatres in Europe, a policy which antedated the American plan of exploiting big features which is now so common. With these big pictures in Europe, for the first time in the history of the industry, pretentious musical settings by big symphony orchestras were provided. Some time later, when five-reel features of American manufacture had become popular in the States, Mr. Blumenthal pioneered with these pictures in a number of the European countries where productions of this nature had to be almost rammed down the audiences' throats. In a similar manner Mr. Blumenthal also introduced cartoon moving pictures throughout the fields foreign to the United States.

Mr. Auerbach, whose white hair and big-rimmed nose glasses are his marks of international identification, was associated with Mr. Blumenthal in these earlier days in Europe when the firm's principal offices were in London, Paris, Rome, and Berlin, and their film careers have run pretty closely together. He was with Mr. Blumenthal and other associates abroad long before the present war when their biggest enterprise, the one that placed moving pictures in European legitimate theatres for the first time, was undertaken. The picture was "Quo Vadis," that remarkable Cines production which, immediately following its European success, made a fortune for the American film operator who handled it in this country.

The story of this deal, insofar as it involves Mr. Blumenthal, is a bit of film romance. Mr. Blumenthal very frankly confesses that at that time he knew little or nothing about moving pictures. "Quo Vadis" was shown him by Cines officials after vain attempts had been made to place it throughout the world at prices very much lower than the one at which Mr. Blumenthal quickly bought. In an effort to get his money back, the well-known American film man, then operating from Paris, set territorial prices which buyers laughed at as absurdly high.

Confident that the public demand would prove strong enough to justify the prices asked, Mr. Blumenthal undertook to exhibit the feature in important cities in each territory in the best legitimate theatres obtainable, either on a rental or sharing basis. Agents were sent to the larger cities in Europe and South America, and the picture was exhibited with tremendous success, with the result that territorial rights were sold later without any trouble.

Barcelona, Spain, proved a gold mine. More or less obscure cities in the Balkans showed a picture strength that was surprising, and in South America, after the picture had played a remarkable engagement in Buenos Aires, the rights were purchased by a big operator, still in business, at many times the price at which it had originally been offered him—and even at this advanced price, "Quo Vadis" established a record for this buyer which has never been surpassed, and probably never will be.

Because of their experiences in the foreign fields, it would seem only natural for Messrs. Blumenthal and Auerbach and their associates to achieve a full measure of success when they transferred their activities from foreign film centers to New York when the time had arrived that the American-made pictures, because of their technique, had established themselves as the most popular in the world. Their dealings with buyers, exchange men, and exhibitors everywhere—whether in France, Spain, Russia, the Balkans, or in South America—have been practically the dealings of one buyer, exchange man, or exhibitor with another, since Mr. Blumenthal and his associates have faced the same problems as each of these classes in their previous operations.

Picture Rights and How to Protect Them

INFORMATION reaching New York through different channels seems to indicate that Julian Ajuria, the general manager of the Sociedad General Cinematografica of Buenos Aires, who, under his own name, recently opened an exchange in Barcelona, is treading dangerous ground in Spain.

Mr. Ajuria was in this country early last year and closed several deals with local film manufacturers, covering in some cases exclusive rights for Argentina only and in other cases for Spain only. It is claimed, for instance, that a contract was entered into with the Vitagraph company for Spain only, another with the Triangle Film Corporation for Argentina only, a third with the Famous Players-Lasky for Argentina and Spain, and a fourth with the William Fox organization for Spain only.

According to the reports in question, Mr. Ajuria, after a short campaign in the peninsula, disposed of the greater part of the films he brought from New York (Vitagraphs, Worlds, Paramounts, etc.) to one of the Barcelona renting houses and returned to Buenos Aires.

Last August he was back again in Barcelona, bringing with him a large stock of films purchased in the United States for Argentina exclusively, disregarding, it is said, in this way, the provisions of the War Trade Board.

Among the films brought back by Mr. Ajuria, there was one belonging to the Triangle Film Corporation that had been sold under contract for Argentina only, and the Barcelona representative of the New York producer, Carlos Vasseuer, secured a writ from one of the local judges and had the film seized pending the result of an action against Mr. Ajuria for unlawful competition.

The upshot of it all, according to our informants, was that Mr. Ajuria was expelled from "La Mutua de Defensa Cinematografica," a protective association formed by the importers and renters of Barcelona, for having trespassed the rights of a member by introducing into Spain an unauthorized copy of a film.

Leroy Garfinckle, the New York buyer for the Sociedad General Cinematografica, the Argentinian concern managed by Mr. Ajuria, stated, when interviewed by one of our representatives, that he knew nothing about the transaction and gave it as his opinion that the whole affair must be a mistake.

However, there is a point here that the Film Exporters of America, Inc., and the Export Division of the N. A. M. P. I. should do well to bear in mind: the fact that in Spain exists an association devoted to the protection of the importers' and exporters' interests, whose members have entered into an agreement not to go outside their territories or to take part in any underhand competition. Similar associations are to be found in Great Britain, France, Italy and other countries, and a close affiliation between them and those having similar aims established in New York would redound to the advantage of all and eliminate many of the present export evils.

French Production Seems in Grievous Condition

IN the issue of October 4 of Le Cinema, a trade paper published in Paris, there is a very interesting story of a meeting that took place in the Chambre Syndicale de la Cinematographie Francaise, a body resembling our National Association of the Moving Picture Industry, for the purpose of devising ways and means to keep the French industry alive.

Charles Pathé was the principal speaker, and he took a very gloomy view of the situation, going so far as to declare that French production was showing a tendency to disappear. "Germany," he said, "thanks to the large amount of capital invested in its moving picture enterprises, is controlling the exploitation in practically all European neutral countries, while competition with America and Italy has become so keen that it hinders the production of French films."

Mr. Pathé believes the only way in which French producers can overcome their present difficulties is by getting the government to impose prohibitive duties on the importation of foreign negatives and by establishing a percentage basis of renting.

Edmont Benoit-Levy, on behalf of the League of French Cinematography, declared that it was impossible to accept the disappearance of French Pictures from the home markets and the markets of the world, and that all means should be used to bring them back on a commercial basis.

"Our League would fail to do its duty," said Mr. Benoit-Levy, "if it did not come to tell you that French films must live! At all costs, we should prevent their manufacture from being discontinued until the end of the war, a possibility that some producers have already admitted; and moreover, we fear that if French film production is allowed to fall into a lethargy, it may not be possible to awake it again later on.

"Is it true that in these times a good production of average value and importance cannot repay its cost of manufacture and expense of exploitation? Is the fault that of waste and extravagance in the studios? Could negative costs not be reduced by means of a unified local control? Is it true that everything has been done and is being done to promote the popularity of French films in England and the United States?

"We protest emphatically against a report we have received to the effect that some theatres no longer intend to handle French films because their customers demand American features. This is a heresy!

"We are willing to resign ourselves even for some time after the war, to be given more American than French screen entertainment, but we cannot permit that no market whatever be retained, for our own manufacture."

The via crucis of the French motion picture industry during the past four years has been felt and deplored throughout the civilized world, and particularly in the United States.

Until American productions reached their present high pinnacle of merit, the product of French studios was highly esteemed in all the markets of the world. We are certain that it will be so again, and that France will not only reach her former level of excellence in picture production, but will exceed it.

However, an important element which French as well as all other continental film manufacturers will have to contend with is the fact that American productions have come into their home and colonial markets to stay. The popularity which they now have achieved will always be maintained. It was inevitable that times had to change in the domain of film exploitation from the pre-war conditions. American pictures should have obtained their vogue throughout the foreign markets long before they did—and they would have obtained that vogue had it not been for the fact that the American producer, until within the last three or four years, had never been an exporter, but in the main content with the proceeds derived from the natural large development of his domestic markets, where consumption has always been insatiate. This is true of practically every commodity, as well as moving pictures. The truth of the statement that foreign productions will claim a better percentage than that which they enjoy at present, must be acknowledged. But the film industry of the world must recognize from this time on, that a certain percentage, and a large one, must be retained for the productions that emanate from the picturesque studios of California, Florida and New Jersey.

The Foreign Sales Record published in this issue of the International Section, and which will be one of its features during the month, is bound to be useful to the exporters in this country and the buyers abroad. It represents the only practical way of keeping the foreign dealers informed of the selling activities of the New York market and in touch with the firms controlling the rights on brands and pictures, so that they may steer away from wild offers and unscrupulous traders here and abroad. We hope the New York exporters will see that it is to their advantage to keep this record as complete and up-to-date as possible, and that they will cooperate with us by furnishing all the necessary information.

Now that the armistice has been signed and there is every reason to believe that the war has been brought to a close, the exporters should start without delay an agitation to remove the handicaps under which they have been laboring during the past year, particularly in matters relating to countries outside of the zone of war, such as the Orient and Latin America.

GIVES DETAILS ON PLAZA TRANSACTION

Inter-Ocean Film Corporation Also Acquires "The Transgressor," Second Production by "The Victim" People and Make Record Territorial Sale With It—British Sale of "Inside the Lines" Through London.

Paul H. Cromelin, president of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, announces the titles and stars of Plaza subjects recently acquired by the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation from E. D. Horkheimer, as follows: "The Angel Child," with Kathleen Clifford; "The Law that Divides" (Miss Clifford); "Playing the Game," with Anita King; "Mistaken Identity" (Miss King); "Petticoats and Politics" (Miss King); "Whatever the Cost" (Miss King); "The Girl Angle (Miss King); "The Locked Heart," with Gloria Joy; "Wanted, a Brother" (Miss Joy); "The Midnight Burglar" (Miss Joy); "No Children Wanted" (Miss Joy); "Miss Mischief Maker" (Miss Joy); "Little Miss Grow-Up" (Miss Joy); "Sunny Jane," with Jackie Saunders; "Wild Cat" (Miss Saunders); "Bit of Kindling" (Miss Saunders; "Betty Be Good" (Miss Saunders); "Bab the Fixer" (Miss Saunders); "The Checkmate" (Miss Saunders); "Jackie, the Hoyden" (Miss Saunders)."

Inter-Ocean has also acquired "The Transgressor," the second production by the makers of "The Victim," now scoring a great success in Latin-American countries, where it was placed by Inter-Ocean. It is of special interest to Catholics, as was "The Victim," and buyers are urged to get it before audiences of that denomination through the local churches. The Inter-Ocean expects "The Transgressor" to meet with the same popularity its predecessor found. The new special is in nine reels, from the story by O. E. Goebel and Conde B. Pallen, under Ludwig G. B. Erb's personal supervision. Less than twelve hours after the Inter-Ocean had signed the contract for the foreign distributing rights of this big picture, Gus Schlesinger, of the Inter-Ocean sales staff, has sold the production for Argentina, Uruguay and Paraguay, this transaction establishing quite a record for speed. The sale also took in the following Inter-Ocean subjects: "Wishing Ring," "The Boss," "Hunting Big Game in the Frozen North," and "Eight Bells."

John H. Taylor, managing director of the London Inter-Ocean Film Corporation, who recently returned to the English capital after a visit to this country, has just reported the sale of "Inside the Lines," British rights, to Granger's Exclusives. Some time ago this sale was announced as having been effected by Gus Schlesinger and Louis Brock, of the New York Inter-Ocean office, but this statement was in error.

Fox Film Held Up in Chile.

"The Woman and the Law," a Fox production dealing with the De Saulles case, released last summer, has given rise to a peculiar situation in Chile, according to cable advices received by Bernardo Herrera, who acquired the rights for that territory. The picture was shipped about two months ago after it had bean approved by the censors and all the usual wartime formalities complied with, but when it reached the office of the United States Consul at Santiago, to whom all shipments of American film for Chile must be consigned, that official decided to overrule the New York authorities and has refused to deliver the picture to Mr. Herrera's partner. The grounds on which this action has been taken, which may entail the loss of a considerable amount of money, have not been disclosed. The Chilean firm's loyalty to the Allied cause has not been questioned, as far as we know.

"Sporting Life" Sells Rapidly.

Maurice Tourneur Productions announce the sale of their initial feature, "Sporting Life," which had such a successful showing at the Rivoli Theatre, recently, for Scandinavia. The rights to "Sporting Life" for Great Britain have been sold and negotiations completed for the sale of the Australasian rights. These deals were closed through Hiller & Wilk, who have been handling the foreign distribution of this picture.

AUSTRALIANS HAVE NEW BIOSCOPE SHUTTER

At a Sydney theatre, trial has been given to an Australian-designed bioscope shutter, involving several novel points. The fan at present in general use is of the three-leaf type and opaque. That invented by Mr. Marshall, of Brisbane, Qsld., is a single-leaf and translucent. The object in view is the economizing of light power, with collateral advantages in regard to softness of projection and color correcting.

The checked switchboard readings at the trial showed that while the ordinary shutter consumed from 70 to 74 amperes, the Marshall type used from 31 to 40 amperes. Further savings were recorded in regard to the carbons, the comparative consumption being 18-25 mm. as against 13-18 mm. In regard to the effects secured on the screen, there was noted a general softening and something of a spectroscopic effect. IMRIE.

NEW BUYER IN TOWN.

F. de Sacadura, general representative of the Compania Cinematographica de Portugal (The Moving Picture Company of Portugal), has opened an office in New York for the purpose of establishing direct relations with American manufacturers.

The Compania Cinematographica is the most important control of its kind in Portugal, and practically the renting business in that territory. It has dealt in the past through the Barcelona film distributors, and the trip of Mr. Sacadura to this country marks the initial step of its new policy. Instead of acquiring Portuguese rights from Spanish importers, the Compania Cinematographica plans to purchase for both Spain and Portugal, and either re-sale in the former territory or organize its own exchange system throughout the whole peninsula.

The forthcoming activities of the Portuguese company are bound to have a salutary effect on the Spanish market, which up to now has not been a very satisfactory one for American producers and exporters.

HOWELLS GETS NEW PICKFORDS

Super-Productions Made for First National Under Latest Sensational Contract To Be Distributed by Well Known Exporter—To Take U. P. T. Output and Anita Stewart Series as Well.

News of such tremendous importance, from the commercial angle, that it vied with the announcement that the armistice practically ending the world war had been signed, has been "breaking" daily in the export film colony in New York for the past week. And most of this important news has concerned the activities of David P. Howells.

Saturday afternoon Mary Pickford left New York City for Los Angeles to begin immediately the production of the first of the three super-productions which she has contracted to make for the First National Exhibitors' Association during the ensuing twelve months, in consideration of the largest salary which has ever been paid a moving picture star, if, indeed, it is not the largest salary which has ever been paid an individual in any line of endeavor for personal services. Before Miss Pickford left she also became a party to a contract, by virtue of which David P. Howells will handle these three big pictures—as well as any others which she may make for First National on later contracts which may be signed—in all markets other than the United States and Canada.

A few days before Mr. Howells had contracted with the United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., to exploit all of its product in countries other than the United States and Canada for an extended period. And at about the same time the same American exporter had secured the foreign rights on all of the new Anita Stewart pictures, which are to be made under the supervision of Louis Mayer, the well known Boston moving picture operator.

Because of the importance of the new arrangement whereby Miss Pickford transfers her allegiance from the producing company with which she so long been identified to the new organization which has announced a policy of securing the cream—and only the cream—of American moving picture productions, Mr. Howells' contract for the new super-productions is probably the most important he has ever signed. The first of these Mary Pickford productions which he will be able to offer his patrons in the foreign markets will be a picturization of "Daddy Long-Legs," which, it is expected, will be directed by Marshall Neilan, with whom this foremost star has made some of her most notable successes. It is promised for delivery in New York some time next February.

The United Picture Theatres' output which Mr. Howells has secured is estimated to amount to about forty productions the first year, and will include features with Dustin Farnum, Kitty Gordon, Florence Reed and other well known screen stars. The first feature, entitled "The Light of Western Stars," starring Dustin Farnum in a powerful story by Zane Grey, is ready for the American market and Mr. Howells is now offering it for sale in the foreign territories. Indeed, the sale of Argentina, Uruguay, Paraguay and Chile for all the U. P. T. product through the Howells office has already been announced.

The Anita Stewart pictures are to be eight in number, four of them to be directed by Lois Weber. "Virtuous Wives," the first picture, was directed by George Loane Tucker and is being splendidly received at advance trade showings. "In Old Kentucky," a screen version of the American play by the same title, which was responsible for two or three tremendous fortunes in the show business in the earlier years, has been chosen as the second picture of the series.

With the new contracts which have been signed, Mr. Howells expects to have available for the foreign markets approximately one hundred new productions during the next year. His contract with the Metro corporation for the distribution of its product in the Orient, including Japan, China, the Philippines, Dutch East Indies, India, Burma, Ceylon and the Straits Settlements has just been renewed for the third time, making the contract period end in 1920. Griffith's second big picture, "Intolerance," has just been bought by the same office for distribution in the Orient.

Ours is the business of assuming responsibility for the profitable distribution of motion pictures in markets foreign to the country of their manufacture. Big pictures of established value

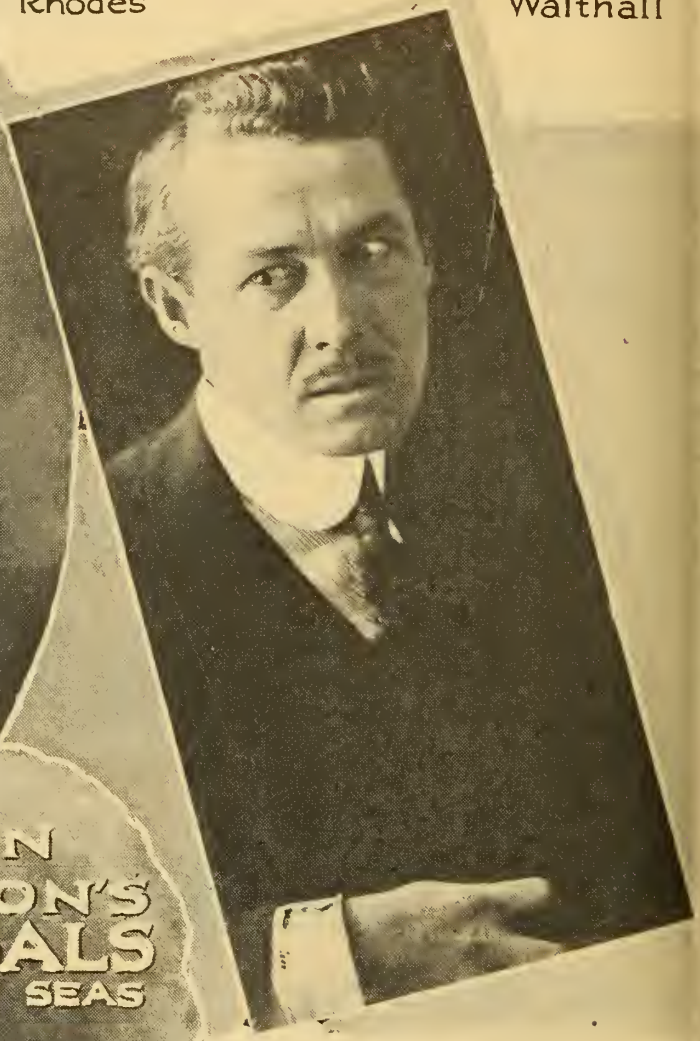
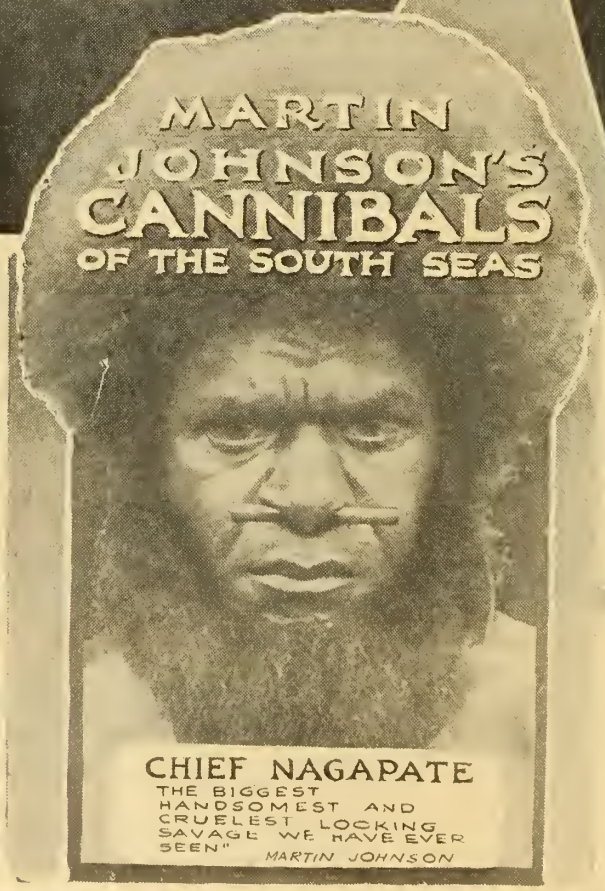
Billie Rhodes

Henry B. Walthall





Eight de luxe features will be produced by the National Film Corporation of America, his coming year, with Billie Rhodes, christened by T. L. Tally, of Los Angeles, "the screen's daintiest star." The initial picture has just been completed, "THE GIRL OF MY DREAMS," of which the Los Angeles "Examiner" said—

> Motion picture historians will chronicle the debut of Billie Rhodes as a full-fledged film star at Tally's yesterday as a complete success, histrionically, pictorially and financially. There has been greater premieres in this city, perhaps ("The Birth of a Nation's" and "Hearts of the World's," for instance), but none more enthusiastic from the audience's viewpoint, or more laudatory to a screen luminary.

Henry B. Walthall, the undisputed premier dramatic artist of the screen, will appear in a series of eight special photoplays produced by the National Film Corporation of America. The first "AND A STILL SMALL VOICE," contains every element that made Walthall famous in such productions as "The Birth of A Nation" and D. W. Griffith's picture "The Great Love." No portrayal before or since has so endeared a player to the American public as Walthall's "little Colonel" in "The Birth of a Nation."

The Cannibal pictures, photographed at the risk of life, according to Frederick James Smith, in the October issue of the Motion Picture Classic, have "ten times the grip of an average photoplay." S. L. Rothapfel, managing director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres in New York, says "The Johnson pictures will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first-class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return."

They are an extraordinary feature attraction.

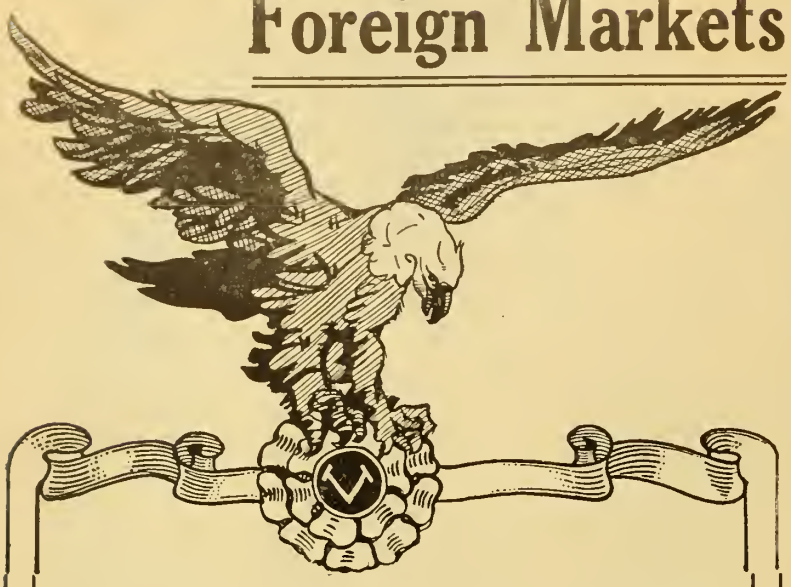
Vitagraph In Foreign Markets



DURING the past few months I have sold, delivered, or signed contracts for the following VITAGRAPH productions.

THIS list includes only the so-called Spanish market, but you should note that I am covering these markets systematically and thoroughly—eight to twelve prints going out of each production acceptable.

EXTRA THE EVENING MAIL EXTRA
GERMANY SURRENDERS
London, November 7, 1918.
Germany has accepted the truce terms of the Allies as presented by Marshal Foch. The acceptance is unconditional.
Fighting on all fronts will cease at once.
GERMANY QUITS
Washington, Nov. 7—Germany has accepted the terms of the Allies and the war is over. The terms, the same as those fixed for Austria, preclude any possibility of reopening of war. Hostilities ceased at 2 P.M.

GERMANY GIVES UP; THE WAR IS OVER
PARIS, Nov. 7. The Allies and Germany signed an armistice at 11 o'clock this morning. Hostilities ceased at 2 o'clock this afternoon.

HUNS ACCEPT TERMS

GERMANY SIGNED THE ARMISTICE but not on November 7th, as most of the newspapers erroneously announced. It all reminds me of the reports that come to Inter-Ocean about new films released on the American market. Ninety-nine per cent. of them are declared to be "just the thing for the foreign market" but Inter-Ocean doesn't recommend, much less buy, them until its entire staff has had a chance to look 'em over at the Inter-Ocean Building projection room. When Inter-Ocean does buy a picture, you may be sure it isn't on the strength of premature information, but because our staff of world-market experts have decided that the film WILL MAKE MONEY FOR YOU. If you are a genuine buyer of American films for export, I would advise you to write me to-day for "THE INTER-OCEAN GLOBE," the only monthly bulletin about films published by any film exporting firm. Remember, "THE GLOBE" prints nothing but carefully confirmed Inter-Ocean news!

have long been considered standard equipment by the leading motion picture machine manufacturers. The product of America's greatest lens specialists, who have been producing high grade lenses of one type or another for 65 years, they are unexcelled in the clear-cut, evenly illuminated pictures they produce on the screen.

Because of the demand made upon our resources for some of the Government's most important military needs, we are unable to make projection lens deliveries for the present. While proud to be of such service in this world crisis, we shall expect to serve our other patrons even more efficiently than before, when the world is again at peace.

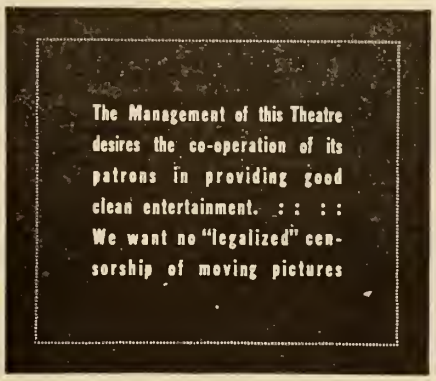
Educate Your Audience to Help Fight Censorship

Introducing a bill providing for the Censorship of Moving Pictures is a favorite indoor pastime in legislative halls throughout the country. Eternal vigilance is the price of the Exhibitor's mere safety if not his success.

Presented in the proper manner, the Censorship of Moving Pictures is just as obnoxious to the Exhibitor's audiences as it is to the Exhibitor. And public opinion aroused in behalf of moving pictures and against their unfair and discriminatory control is the surest weapon to defeat Censorship.



The Management of this Theatre desires the co-operation of its patrons in providing good clean entertainment.
We want no "legalized" censorship of moving pictures

We have prepared a series of nine different stereopticon slides which crystallize the argument against Censorship; one of the slides is shown herewith.

These slides shown repeatedly in any theatre cannot fail to influence public opinion in that locality against Censorship. They will line up the general public on the side of the Exhibitor.

You Ought to Be Showing Them Now! Legislatures Everywhere Are Convening

Set of Nine Slides, carefully packed, will be sent postpaid on receipt of $1.00.

"If things don't seem to break right for you—if you're drawing deuces instead of aces—if there's no "tin" in the tin box and, worst of all, your patrons are likely to make you shut up your shop 'cause they've shut down on it, why just buck up and take stock.

"You'll probably find that you are shy a POWER'S CAMERAGRAPH. The sooner you get one, the sooner you'll be projecting pictures RIGHT and having the town folks crowding through that door of yours.

VITAGRAPH'S LATEST AND GREATEST PHOTOPLAY SERIAL

FEATURING

ANTONIO MORENO and CAROL HOLLOWAY

Your new serial, "The Iron Test," which I am now running in my theatre, appears to be the best yet. And it will have to go some, too, to beat "The Fighting Trail," Vengeance and the Woman," "The Woman in the Web" and "A Fight For Millions."

The public has learned to expect something big when Vitagraph serials are announced, and as a result my audiences from the first episode of "The Iron Test" have been large and enthusiastic.

William Farnum
in "FIGHTING BLOOD"

1 This picture has played a greater number of days in all parts of the world than any other that William Fox has released. It is a thrilling lumber camp and mining town story of a battling clergyman—the man who came back after unjust imprisonment. It has swift, tense action and a popular theme and is typically Farnum. It has done a record-breaking business and will repeat.

Theda Bara
in "THE SERPENT"

2 It is Miss Bara's opinion that this is her greatest picture. Hundreds of exhibitors are of the same opinion. The big battle scenes—the boar hunt—the surprising climaxes—all contribute to its wonderful popularity. The production was directed by Raoul A. Walsh, and among those in the cast is George Walsh, one of the greatest favorites in film land today.

Raoul A. Walsh's First William Fox Picture
"THE REGENERATION"

3 A great, vibrant, colorful, spectacular production that is ablaze with thrills, action and romance. You will recall the big scenes of the steamboat fire, the rescue of the children, the fights between gangs of water rats and the regeneration of the hero. You will recall the success of this picture when it was first released—and book it with the assurance of turn-away business.

William Farnum
in "THE BROKEN LAW"

4 Love, romance and conquest are the themes of this colossal picture of the free and easy life of the highway. It is a thoroughly typical William Farnum subject and has a truly great cast, ranking in all respects among the most successful and satisfactory pictures that William Fox has released. It will be one of the biggest revenue producers of THE GREAT NINE.

Theda Bara
in "UNDER TWO FLAGS"

5 The picturized version of Ouida's most famous novel. The most popular production in which Theda Bara has appeared in a role not of a vampire. It is a rapid-fire picture with a 100 per cent. record for box-office hits—undoubtedly the best photographic version ever made of a big stage success. On past performances alone it should be played to win in a walk.

"INFIDELITY"
Based on George Ohnet's Novel "Dr. Rameau"

6 A great melodrama, throbbing with sobs and tears, rippling with comedy and tense with human interest—a wonderful all-star cast, including Frederick Perry, Dorothy Bernard, Jean Sothern and Kittens—admittedly the best production of its sort ever released by William Fox or any other producer.

Valeska Suratt
in "THE SOUL OF BROADWAY"

7 THE GREAT NINE would not be complete without this remarkable picture with its wonderful aeroplane scenes and fashion parade at Atlantic City, and its exposure of the night life of Broadway. It was one of the box-office sensations of three years ago, and will be as great a sensation today, because it is the type of thrilling picture in which public interest never wanes.

Theda Bara
in "THE DARLING OF PARIS"

8 This, perhaps, is the most gorgeous, costly and spectacular production of THE GREAT NINE series. It is based on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," the world-famous novel by Victor Hugo, is Parisian in atmosphere and notable for the thrilling action and scenes of breathless suspense that spell profits.

William Farnum
in HOODMAN BLIND

9 Like "Infidelity," this production has been revised. It is founded on the famous stage success of the same name, "Hoodman Blind," by William Barrett. It is one of the most powerful, thrilling and dramatic photoplays ever produced. It certainly shows William Farnum at his best, and will be one of the foremost box-office successes of THE GREAT NINE.

are assured that it will continue to be released, for some time to come. The supply of available and excellent material, always large, has considerably increased during the past few months until it has today reached the point where there is sufficient on hand and coming to amply provide for the issues of many weeks. Furthermore the quality of the negatives received from the French, British, Italian and American Governments has steadily improved until today it is better than ever.

The Armistice and the prospects of early Peace have made the Official War Review an even better box office attraction; great in War it will be as great in Peace.

"Chief Nagapate the biggest handsomest and cruellest looking savage we have ever seen" Martin Johnson

Really the most interesting movies of our month weren't dramatic at all—but Martin Johnson's fascinating tour of the Cannibal isles of the South Pacific. Aside from being an intelligently photographed study of the various races of the remote Pacific isles, where meatless days aren't observed, the pictures have the lure of a Joseph Conrad tale. Here romance and adventure stood beside the camera-man. Johnson and his wife cruised alone among the islands, once almost meeting their death and finally getting away with a remarkable series of films. Mrs. Johnson, by the way, can go 'round to the movie studios any day and get a regular position. She is the dramatic suspense of the series, which we guarantee to have ten times the grip of an average photoplay.

OFFICE OF THE
MANAGING DIRECTOR

Mr. Martin Johnson,
345 W. 40th St.,
New York City.

My dear Mr. Johnson:

It has just come to my attention that you are about to release your Cannibal Island pictures of the South Sea as a whole feature instead of serially.

I want to assure you that I think this is a very wise move, first because it is really a feature in itself and will be welcomed by any intelligent exhibitor as a break in the terrible rut and routine of the so-called dramatic or comedy feature and besides will be a good tonic for any first class theatre, and if properly exhibited will bring a big financial return and furthermore will do a great deal for the exhibitors institution. The possibilities that lend itself for both publicity and general interest have not been surpassed by any offering in the past year.

Wishing you every good luck, I am

Very sincerely yours,

Managing Director.
